SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE intelligence received by the present mail is hardly so satisfactory as might have been expected. The greatest uncertainty prevails as to the fate of Delhi. According to a rumour, repeatedly circulated and as often contradicted, the imperial city had been stormed, and the insurgents driven with terrible slaughter into the palace. But, officially, nothing was really known at Bombay beyond the repulse of two more sorties, the one on the 12th, the other on the 15th of June. On the former occasion, it is stated 450 of the mutineers were left dead upon the field; while the affair of the 15th appears to have been chiefly confined to the 60th native infantry, anxious, perhaps, to prove their zeal for the common cause. A body of about 3,000 men were encamped outside the Ajmere gate, on the opposite side of the city to that occupied by the British troops. These appear to form one-half of the entire rebel force assembled at Delhi. The delay that has occurred in reducing the place is evidently attributable to the want of siege artillery, while the enemy is known to be particularly strong in that arm. It is said, indeed, that no fewer than 150 guns are mounted on the walls and outworks, but this is probably an exaggeration; and it is certain that there cannot be more than one company of artillerymen to man them. The town is reported to have suffered considerably from our fire; but the most serious blow hitherto struck at the insurgent cause is an imperial proclamation enjoining the massacre of all Sikhs and Punjabees as a meritorious deed. Should the puppet king really have committed such an act of folly, the fidelity of the Sikh soldiers will be assured, and the revolt of the corps at Benares will be hereafter quoted as a solitary instance of their disaffection. But, as already mentioned, the news from Delhi must be received with some reservation, as the telegraphic wires have been cut between Agra and Seepree, and the latter place has not yet been accepted. The latest intelligence, therefore, comes down only to the 17th, on which date General Barnard was waiting for reinforcements before he ventured to storm a large and populous city, garrisoned by desperate men, skilled in the use of arms. It is to be hoped that Delhi will have fallen before the commencement of the rains, so as to enable the Europeans to obtain some better shelter than canvas tents.

The only casualties reported are the deaths of Colonel Chester, adjutant-general of the Bengal army, who was killed in the sortie of the 8th of June, and of Lieut. Russell. Brigadier-General Chamberlain has been appointed his successor, and the vacancy thus created has been filled by Colonel Nicholson.

The insurrection has spread throughout the Bengal presidency; at least forty regiments have openly mutinied; and, in fact, the army has melted away. In some instances the sepoys have been content with merely leaving their colours, and returning to their homes. But, unhappily, in too many cases, their disaffection has been developed into massacre and brutal violence. At Benares, the 37th native infantry refused to give up their arms, and some of the companies began to fire upon their officers. The artillery then opened upon them as they were rushing to the bells of arms, and made considerable havoc in their ranks. A Sikh regiment and the 13th irregular cavalry at first remained passive spectators of the affair; but suddenly the latter turned upon the English officers and shot down three of them. The Sikhs then attempted to capture the guns, but were thrice repulsed with discharges of grape. A handful of European soldiers, not exceeding 180, repeatedly charged the mutineers, and finally put them to flight. The former had eight of their little force put hors de combat, while the latter had 100 killed and double that number wounded. It is pleasant to record that the civilians and European ladies owed their safety to the exertions of Soorut Singh, one of the Sikh political prisoners, so hardly treated by the British Government.

At Allahabad the "loyal" 6th N.I., who so loudly protested their fidelity, and demanded to be led against the faithless, rose upon their officers, and murdered the majority of them. Twenty-six Europeans were here cruelly butchered, but the ladies escaped into the fort. The town itself is described as in a frightful state of anarchy. The house of the great banker, Peeromull, had been plundered, and gangs of dacoits were daily setting fire to the houses of the opulent, and, under cover of the confusion thus caused, carrying off the most valuable property. To add to the general disorder, 3,000 prisoners had been liberated from the jail, and were rendering themselves conspicuous by their superior villany.

The native regiments at Bareilly have caught the prevailing infection, and at least forty officers are still missing: the others escaped to Nynee Tal through a thousand dangers. At Jhansi, the 12th native infantry stormed the intrenched magazine, and foully murdered all who fell into their power. Similar atrocities were perpetrated at Shajehanpore, and at Azimgurh the 17th native infantry seized the guns and marched out in pursuit of a strong treasure party of the 13th irregular cavalry. There is reason to believe that the latter proved faithful to their trust, but with what success is not yet known. At Jaunpore, Lieut. Mara has been killed by his own men; but at Jullundur the rebels were roughly handled by the European troops, aided by the sowars of the Allowallah rajah.

When the first tidings of the outbreak arrived, in this country it was considered a matter for congratulation, that the native princes had loyally placed their contingents at the disposal of the British Government. It now appears that these contingents sympathize with the mutineers, and in some instances co-operate with them. The Bhurtpore levies, whose fidelity was so highly vaunted, refused to march against the rebels at Neemuch, and their officers with difficulty escaped from their hands. The artillery and infantry of the Malwa contingent, indeed, are reported as being stanch, but the cavalry had gone off, after murdering Lieutenants Brodie and Hunt. The whole of the Gwalior contingent have also risen upon their officers, whom the Maharajah's spirited interference alone saved from instant death. This disaffection is a serious loss, as the force consisted of seven regiments of infantry, two of cavalry, and five companies of artillery. Some apprehensions were entertained that the Nizam's contingent were becoming imbued with the same evil spirit, the 1st cavalry having disobeyed orders; but the prompt arrival of the Bombay flying column under General Woodburn had had a salutary effect. To return to the North-west:—In the Punjab, comparative tranquillity was still maintained by the admirable firmness of the authorities. At some stations, such as Umballa, Loodianah, and Ferozepore, executions were the order of the day, many of the mutineers having been hanged or blown from the guns. Similar severity was being exhibited by Sir Henry Lawrence at Lucknow; but there was a rumour at Bombay that that able officer had been compelled to fall back upon Cawnpore. Cawnpore itself was kept in check by a considerable force of Europeans; but at Rohnee, in the Santhal district, a terrible outrage had been committed on three officers of the 5th irregular cavalry. Sir Norman Leslie, Major Macdonald, and Dr. Grant, were seated in the verandah of the major's house, when they were suddenly attacked by a party of armed ruffians. Sir Norman was killed upon the spot, the major scalped and otherwise dangerously wounded, and the doctor faring little better. It is right to state that the Santhals are in no way implicated in this treacherous assault.

In Calcutta about 300 volunteers have been enrolled, but the real safety of the seat of government lies in the presence of a strong European force. A panic, however, had prevailed, which the energetic conduct of the superior authorities could with difficulty allay. The insolent virulence of the native papers, and the unpatriotic petulance of the European journalists, had at length induced Government to place the Indian press under certain restrictions. Owing to the confessions of a faqueer, who was under sentence of death, proof had been obtained of the complicity of the ex-king of Oude in the revolt of the army: his ex-majesty, together with his minister, the Nawab Alee Nuckee Khan, had therefore been imprisoned in Fort William. There is no longer any doubt that the insurrection is of Mahommedan origin, and that the greased cartridges were a pretext to induce the co-operation of the Hindoos. A Mussulman conspiracy, too, had been discovered to massacre the European inhabitants of Calcutta on the anniversary of the battle of Plassey, on which day a meeting of influential individuals was held in Willis's Rooms to consider the propriety of erecting a monument to Clive. Sir Patrick Grant had arrived in Calcutta on the 17th, and assumed the command of the Bengal army. The command-in-chief of the Indian armies was temporarily vested in Sir Henry Somerset.

In the Bombay Presidency there is little to record. The native troops, thus far, had behaved admirably; but, as a measure of prudence, Lord Elphinstone had despatched Captain Jenkins to the Mauritius and the Cape for additional European troops. It is very unlikely that any can be spared from the latter colony; but the forces intended for China would arrive in Calcutta at an opportune moment. Lord Elgin, who was at Penang on the 7th, at once recognized the superior importance of the crisis in Bengal, and had readily complied with Lord Canning's urgent request. Sir James Outram had returned to Bombay.

The Madras sepoys have as yet shown no indications of disaffection, though a certain degree of disquiet has been observed. It is positively denied, however, that the 10th regiment in Burmah had refused to obey their officers, as was reported by the last mail.

The news from China is more cheering. Commodore Elliott, gallantly assisted by Commodore Keppel—whom a court-martial has acquitted of culpability in the loss of the Raleigh—had destroyed an immense number of war junks, captured 900 guns, and inflicted a heavy loss of life on the enemy. These successes, however, had not been obtained without many casualties on our side, for the Chinese stood to their guns with a resolution of which they have hitherto been deemed incapable.

A MONSTER CHILD.—A most extraordinary birth occurred at the Lying-in Hospital on the 2nd instant. The wife of a very respectable gentleman was confined of a monster child, with four legs, four hands, two abdomens, a very large head, and four ears, two being at the back of the head. The child was still-born, and was immediately conveyed to the Medical College, where, on being dissected, the head was found to contain four brains! The mother, though in a weak state, is, we are glad to say, doing well. —Examiner, June 6.

BENGAL.

PROGRESS OF THE REVOLT.

We take the following account of the progress of the revolt from the Friend of India of June 11th and 18th:—

It is a month by the calendar since the rebel sepoys entered Delhi, and we are still without news of their destruction. The intelligence of the outbreak at Meerut reached the late Commander-in-Chief on the 12th of May; the following day H.M.'s 75th were in motion, and the 1st fusiliers in marching order a few hours afterwards. How the time has been since spent on the part of her Majesty's forces, it is hard to say; the use that has been made of it by the late Bengal army is patent to the world. Sir Henry Barnard is said to be waiting for the siege-guns to enable him to effect an entrance into a city whose walls are nine miles in circumference, and we only trust that the rebels are as leisurely waiting for Sir Henry Barnard. No tidings has reached Calcutta from army head-quarters between the 2nd and 9th inst., so that much good service of which the Government and the public are ignorant may have been done. We hear occasionally of the looting of another treasury, or that some stanch regiment has walked quietly off to Delhi, or that some officers, names unknown, have been killed in a manner which affords reason to suppose that the murderers were sepoys; but for daily, or even weekly, accounts of what is going forward, let it be known that the British Government, powerful as it is, has not strength to accomplish that grand result. The shroffs in the bazaar get their intelligence each morning and evening, and there is not a merchant acquainted with the country, who would not undertake, if need be, to get a message conveyed to any part of the country, but official men cannot manage it, Sir John Lawrence excepted. Tidings come in from the Punjab with unbroken regularity; but then, to be sure, the chief authority in that quarter has cause to be pleased with his success, and is, we suppose, willing to tell the story of it.

If our good mother England, that toils so earnestly to make us proud of our home; that gathers up for us the spoils of the world and throbs with never-ending pulse for our glory and happiness, would only find us a man—one solitary human being able to direct the valour and intelligence of her soldiers—how we should bless her, and almost worship him! It is so small a measure of faculty that is wanted, and yet neither wealth nor prayers can win it for us.

One after another, the props which ought to sustain the empire are giving way. The Sikhs, and Irregular Cavalry, who were thought above suspicion, have followed the example of their co-religionists. Two troops of the 2nd Oude Irregulars, who had been despatched to the Etawah and Mypore districts, and for whose fidelity their officers would a few days since have offered any guarantee, have turned and murdered three out of the four officers with them. Captain Hayes, Military Secretary to Sir Henry Lawrence, Lieut. Barbor, and Dr. Feyer. The 13th Irregular Cavalry rose at Benares and joined the 37th, killing their commanding officer, Captain Geise. Of the Gwalior Contingent, upwards of two hundred were sent against the mutineers within a few hours after the news of the outbreak at Meerut was received at Gwalior. They made forced marches to Allyghur, and acquitted themselves with great credit on more than one occasion, but the atmosphere of mutiny is not to be breathed for any considerable time with impunity. A hundred of the detachment broke away from the rest of their comrades on the 22nd ultimo, and went off to join the rebels at Delhi, the bulk of the little force resisting all temptation to follow their example. Elsewhere we have noticed the conduct of their gallant leader. At Benares the 37th mutinied somewhat too late for safety. Colonel Neill, of whom we prophesied that there would be no complaint on the score of want of energy and decision, arrived with his Madras fusiliers and in the very nick of time. He ordered the 37th to lay down their arms, and called upon the Sikhs for assistance, which the latter refused, and after firing at their own officers joined the revolvers. But the two regiments combined, with the irregulars to boot, were no match for the fusiliers, who defeated them with great slaughter, though not without loss. The scoundrel who shot Captain Geise was apprehended and hanged, and at the last advices, order reigned at Benares. Not a single bungalow had been looted up to the 8th instant, and the residents speak with admiration of the style in which the rebels were disposed of; a correspondent says: "The sepoys fled for their lives. All is quiet here, and we are in a better state than before the rising. The city trembling for fear, and as chaps as can be."

From Agra, two companies of the 44th and 67th were sent to escort treasure to Muttra. They reached the station in safety, and then shot their officer and looted the rupers. Intelligence was conveyed at once to Agra, when the two regiments were ordered to parade and give up their arms, a mandate which they obeyed under the influence of European bayonets. Deprived of the means of doing mischief on the spot, they were allowed to wander at will, and it is said that a great portion of them started at once for Delhi. There is no evil without its corresponding advantage, and we have thus the satisfaction of knowing that, what with the influx of these and other reinforcements to the rebels camp, the British powder is not likely to be wasted.

At Allahabad the "brave and loyal" 6th N.I. mutinied on the 4th inst. and have gone off to Delhi, after murdering Capt. Birch, the fort adjutant, and the following officers: Lieut. Innes, ex-engineer, Lieut. Alexander, 2nd L.C., Capt. Plunkett, 6th N.I., Lieut. Stewart and Hawes, ditto, Ensign Munro (doubtful), Ensigns Scott, Cheek, Dodd, Smith, Way, and Smith (doing duty with the regiment: the whole number slaughtered amounts to twenty-six; and it will be seen that the "gallant and loyal" scoundrels killed many who could have done them no possible wrong. They burnt every bungalow in the place, and gutted the Church. We hope that the mutineers have got safely to a stronghold, and that they will keep together. The 15th, and 30th, at Nusseerabad, the 41st at Setapore, and the 17th, at Azimghur, have also revolted, the latter slaughtering, before their departure, Lieut. and Mrs. Hutchinson; one or two other officers are supposed to be killed, and Major Burroughs is missing, the ladies and children are safe at Ghazee-pore. After so many examples of successful rebellion, it is pleasant to hear a rumour of opposite instances. The 5th and 60th regiments, with the force under General Burnard, refused to proceed on the march to Delhi, and have been cut down, it is said, to a man. It is too late to prevent mutiny in any part of the country, the best that we can hope for is to have the ability to punish it promptly.

The disbanding of the 8th Light Cavalry, 16th, 26th, and 40th, N.I. was carried out at Meeran Meer with great vigour and judgment. There was but a single European regiment, H.M.'s 81st at the station, but Sir John Lawrence, and Brigadier Corbett found it strong enough for the work in hand. The native troops had made up their minds to rise, but missed the favourable moment, and were not allowed a second chance. A ball, which had been previously advertised, was attended by all the European residents of the station, care being taken not to exhibit the slightest apprehension of impending danger. The festivities were unbroken, but at daylight the whole of the garrison turned out what at was thought to be an ordinary parade, and then, in the front of guns loaded with grape, and with the Europeans on either flank, the four regiments were ordered to lay down their arms. The surprise was complete, and they obeyed without a moment's hesitation. Whilst the work of dancing was going on, three companies marched quietly to the fort, turned out the native guards, and took possession. The whole business was managed with a tact and discretion which reflects the highest credit on the authorities.

We have details of the outbreak at Lucknow, from which may be gathered proofs of the onerous nature of the task imposed upon Sir Henry Lawrence. He had to guard both the city and cantonments, the one a source of danger from the great number of disaffected known to be on the watch for opportunities of plunder, and the latter from the temper of the sepoy. Day after day reports were rife that the regiments intended to revolt, and the handful of Europeans were worn out with fatigue and anxiety; but all doubt on the matter was ended on the night of the 31st, when the three corps of infantry, together with a portion of the 7th Light Cavalry, set fire to the European bungalows, and poured a volley into the artillerymen who were standing by their guns. Brigadier Handscomb was shot almost immediately, and Lieut. Grant was killed soon afterwards. He had received a severe wound, and was concealed by the sonbahdar of the guard under his charpoy; but a havildar of his own regiment pointed him out to the mutineers, who instantly bayoneted him. The night wore away in incessant skirmishes between the rebels and parties of the various irregular corps who remained true to their oaths, and many hairbreadth escapes took place. Lieut. Hardinge was engaged hand to hand with a sepoy, who fired at him, but missing his aim, stabbed him in the arm. The mutineer received, the next moment, a pistol-shot which ended his career. Cornet Raleigh, a mere child, who had but just joined the regiment and had not learned to ride, was killed, and the rebels, having burnt the whole of the cantonments, made their way to the lines of the 7th cavalry at Moodkeepore, which they also set fire to. Their aim was to lure the British force away from the defence of the city, where the budmashes were eagerly expecting their entrance, and when the attempt failed, they returned back to cantonments, and gave Sir Henry Lawrence battle. He accepted the challenge with 2 guns, 200 Europeans, a few Irregulars, part of the 7th Light Cavalry, many of whom went over to the rebels, and some men of the three infantry regiments who had not joined the mutiny. With their usual courage, the Sepoys stood till the small force neared them, and then made off; a round shot quickened their pace, and they were chased for ten or twelve miles, scattering themselves in small parties over the face of the country. About sixty were taken prisoners, whom Sir Henry Lawrence was hanging daily, in batches, the gallows being guarded by guns loaded with grape-shot. During the 1st instant, the Kotwal of Lucknow emulated his European masters in the merciless vigour with which he avenged murder and robbery on the part of the criminal population of the city, and his exertions have been munificently rewarded. It is hard to say at this moment what part of the country is really safe from attack, but the lesson taught at Lucknow will not, we think, have to be repeated there this season.

In the Punjab, General Reed, commanding the Peshawur division, has shown himself equal to the requirements of his position. He had, luckily, within call a group of men, out of whom we should have no difficulty in selecting a leader for the most desperate enterprise, or an adviser in the most trying situation. Brigadiers Chamberlain and Cotton, and Colonels Edwardes and Nicholson, assembled in a council of war, when it was resolved, that General Reed should assume command of the whole military force of the Punjab, and that a moveable column, consisting of two Queen's regiments, with irregulars, and guns, and mustering in the whole about 5,000 men, should "move on every point where open mutiny requires to be put down by force." The "proceedings" of the council were placed in the hands of the person in charge of the telegraph-office at Lahore, who was instructed to transmit them to all officials concerned. The energy and noble style of action in this instance is quite refreshing.

The quelling of the mutiny at Ferozepore turns out to have been a most gallant affair. The men of the 45th and 57th made no secret on the 13th ult. of their intention to revolt, the pretext of the cartridges being put forward as usual, but they had to deal with men, and not with imbeciles. The wives of the officers and men, with other Christian females, were removed into the entrenched magazine, and the two native corps were paraded, and ordered to march to their respective cantonments. They refused to obey, and made for the magazine, the company of the 57th inside throwing over ladders and ropes to assist them in scaling the outer walls. Three hundred of them got inside, and with loud shouts rushed to the ordnance-stores, but a company of H.M.'s 61st stood in the way. The rebels received a volley from five files, which knocked over six of them, on which of course they retreated, and making a circuit, tried to take the little band in the rear. But the 61st never appeared to have reloaded their muskets, finding the use of the butt more convenient, with which they drove the enemy everywhere before them. The company which had invited the mutineers showed signs of pugnacity, on which Lieut. Angelo loaded his two guns with grape, and under their cover they were disarmed and marched out. At night the rebels amused themselves by deliberately burning the bungalows, and were only molested by an English boy, who shot one of them dead. The next day they recommenced the work of destruction. The 61st and 10th cavalry, who were true as steel, shot and cut them up in all directions. The magazines of the mutineers were blown up by the artillery, and before the night set in the contest was over; the 57th were entirely disarmed, and 200 of the 45th sent in the colours and their arms, and surrendered themselves prisoners. The loss of property has of course been great, but it has fallen entirely on the Europeans. Colonel Redmond was shot through the thigh; but, with the exception of a private of the 61st killed by mistake, we have not heard of any other casualty. Report speaks highly of all the officers engaged; Brigadier Innes, General Von Cortland, Major Marsden, and Captains Mercer, Lewis, and Simron, with Lieut. Angelo, being singled out for especial praise. Few of the 45th survived to reach Delhi.

The Goorkhas composing the Nusseree rifle battalion have followed the general example, and taken into their own hands the redress of grievances. But they have no sympathy with the sepoy movement, their mutiny having for its object the removal of the commanding officer, Captain Bagot. On being assembled at parade, they unanimously declared they would no longer serve under that officer, but were willing to go anywhere under a leader whom they esteemed. They were in arrears of pay, and considered that it would save trouble if they balanced accounts with Government from the contents of the treasury at Kussowlie, which they forthwith broke open, taking from it as much, and no more, as sufficed to discharge their claims. The distribution having been made, and Captain Bagot formally deposed, the regiment returned quietly to duty, and the residents of Simla went back to their homes. The "sacred right of insurrection" has in this case been exercised so mildly, that the Goorkhas will perhaps be thanked in a proclamation, and requested to consider the money which they have taken a bonus for good behaviour.

From an early date the popular instinct connected the deposed King of Oude with the revolt. The bulk of the sepoys in the Bengal army are recruited from his dominions, where they enjoyed privileges of great value, which have been swept away since the country was annexed. Their status as soldiers in the service of the paramount power gave them importance, which was made the most of when they had a lawsuit on hand, or chose to press claims on the notice of the local authorities. Their relatives were spread over the country in the ranks of the king's army, or in civil employment; and thus almost every Brahmin sepoy had a direct interest in the maintenance of the ancient order of things. But the authorities steadily set their faces against the theory that the banished monarch or his courtiers had anything to do with the mutineers or their plans, and allowed him, with his thousand armed retainers, to live unmolested at Garden Reach until Monday morning last, when his majesty, with his late prime minister, Nawab Alee Nuckee Khan, and others of his courtiers, was arrested and brought into Fort William. Imbecile as he is said to be, he appears to have had sense and vigour enough to plot for the recovery of his dominions, and at the last, it was chance that revealed the secret of his complicity. A Brahmin was seized in the Fort on Sunday, whilst attempting to seduce a sepoy from his allegiance: and between his arrest and the hour appointed for his execution, evidence affecting the king was obtained and acted upon. The spy got away from the European guard placed over him, and his life would have been profitably bartered for his information, but he has been retaken, and will most likely be hanged. The Government will now understand the full force of the statement made by Major Bird, as reported in the last Hume News, to the effect that the Company's sepoys had assured the king, that if he would fight for his crown they were ready to join him. Of course this discovery will put an end to all hopes of success on the part of the deputation to St. James's, and the queen mother may return at her convenience. No notice perhaps will be taken ultimately of the part which the king has been persuaded to play, but there are one or two native chieftains of considerable repute and influence, who will have to be dealt with before long in a summary way. Asiatic flesh and blood is scarcely able to withstand the temptations that have been offered by our rulers to men who have wrongs to avenge, or power to regain, and it is not to be wondered at, that Hindu and Mussulman should in so many instances have given way to the pressure.

Calcutta and its suburbs have gone through a series of panics, varying in intensity, but scarcely different in extent of range. On the 25th ultimo, the Home Secretary was instructed to inform the French residents of Calcutta, that "the mischief caused by a passing and groundless panic had been arrested, and that there was every reason to hope, that, in a few days, tranquillity and confidence would be restored throughout the presidency; but on Sunday last, just twenty days later, the whole of the native troops at Barrackpore and Calcutta were disarmed, even to the militia, a corps usually considered as warlike as the Brook Green volunteers. The inhabitants of Serampore were warned on Saturday night, that the 70th, and 2nd grenadiers, with the portions of the 34th and 43rd brigaded across the river, were to rise at four A.M. next day, and murder their officers, taking their chance of course of being able to slaughter a few women and children in the ordinary Sepoy way. An express, armed to the teeth, went to Chinsurah to call out the Highlanders; a second was despatched to Calcutta, to obtain sanction for disarming the whole of the native troops. Morning dawned on the anxious faces of the residents, and showed them a strong detachment of the Highlanders, some without shoes and stockings, and others in their sleeping drawers; the whole force weary and foot sore, from having been led four miles out of the way by a rascally guide. They would have been too late to hinder the outbreak, and could only have avenged it, but the conspirators saw that they were suspected, and resolved to wait a more favourable opportunity. The chance was not allowed them. At four o'clock in the afternoon, they were suddenly warned for parade. H.M.'s 78th and 35th loaded their muskets before leaving their quarters, and in a few minutes the suspected Sepoys found themselves drawn up in square, with six twelve-pounders in front loaded with grape, and on their flanks, the Queen's regiments, each man of whom was audibly praying that they might offer resistance. But here as elsewhere when face to face with the dreaded English, the heart of the Sepoy failed him, and the order to pile arms was universally obeyed. The guards were relieved and disarmed, and in little more than an hour, the muskets were on the way to Calcutta, and the authorities breathed freely. Monday passed over quietly, but the following morning the disarmed sepoys deserted in masses, and before the Highlanders could march to the native lines the regiments were melting away, with the chance of finding the road to Delhi, or of looting the surrounding country. The Grenadiers and 70th were two of the finest corps in the service, and if loyal to their salt, their loss would have been a subject for much regret.

Whilst the work of disarming was going on at Barrackpore, precisely the same process was being carried through at Calcutta, where it was rumoured that murder and mutiny was triumphant at the former place, and that a strong force of rebels was marching down upon the city from Delhi. The infection of terror raged through all classes. Chowringhee and Garden Reach were abandoned for the fort and the vessels in the river. The shipping was crowded with fugitives, and in houses which were selected as being least likely to be attacked, hundreds of people gladly huddled together, to share the peculiar comfort which the presence of crowds imparts on such occasions. The hotels were fortified; bands of sailors marched through the thoroughfares, happy in the expectation of possible fighting, and the certainty of grog. Every group of natives was scanned with suspicion. The churches and the course were abandoned for the evening. A rising either of Hindoos or Mussulmans, or perhaps of both, was looked upon as certain to happen in the course of the night. From Chandernagore the whole body of European and East Indian inhabitants emigrated to Calcutta. The personnel of Government, the staff of the army, all in short who had anything to lose, preferred to come away and run the risk of losing it, rather than encounter the unknown danger. Many years must elapse before the night of the 14th June, 1857, will be forgotten in Calcutta. There is reason to believe that the natives were equally afraid of being slaughtered by the Europeans, and as much rejoiced at finding their necks sound on the following morning.

The calendar of losses in the shape of mutinous regiments only contains this week the names of the 12th N.I., quartered at Jhansi, the 15th Oude irregular cavalry, and 8th irregular infantry, who started off from Sultanpore for Delhi. The outbreak at Nusseerabad was a very formidable one, and the attempts made to suppress it by the 1st Bombay Lancers reflect the highest honour on that distinguished corps. They numbered but a few hundred sabres, and opposed to them were two full regiments of Bengal infantry, the 15th and 30th, and the battery of artillery stationed there, mounting six guns. The rebel force amounted to upwards of two thousand men, yet the gallant Lancers charged them again and again, cutting down great numbers; and it was not until their own ranks had been shattered with grape-shot, and the best portion of their officers killed or disabled, that they gave up the unequal contest. Brigadier Macan and the officers of the revolted corps, with their wives and children, got away safely, but Colonel Penny, Captain Spottiswoode, and Cornet Newberry, of the lancers, were killed; doubts are expressed as to the safety of Captain Harcourt, and Ensigns Flood and Turnbull, of the 30th. The mutineers, having fired the cantonments, marched off with their guns to Delhi, but the Joudpore legion were on the look out for them, and will not, we trust, be unsuccessful. Great fears were entertained for the safety of Ajmere with its immense magazines, but at the latest date all was quiet there, thanks to the prompt measures of the Joudpore durbar. A moveable column formed of two squadrons H.M.'s 14th light dragoons, a battery of horse artillery, the 25th Bombay N.I., and 1st Nizam's cavalry, was moving down upon Mhow, under the command of Major-General Woodburn, C.B., and will, no doubt, be able to keep the peace in Rajpootana.

Brigadier Wilson, who, it appears, entrenched himself at Ghazee-ud-deen Nuggur, waiting the arrival of the Umballah force, was again attacked from Delhi on May 31, and of course with the same result. On the following day he was reinforced by the Ghoorka battalion, and expected a further accession of strength from Meerut; so that we may expect he would move on without further delay, and draw closer the net round the mutineers at Delhi. Gen. Barnard was to reach the city on the 9th instant, having under his command a powerful siege train, H.M.'s 9th lancers, 1st squadron 74th lancers, 75th foot, 1st Bengal fusiliers, six companies 2nd fusiliers, and 2nd troop horse artillery. The guides were to join him under the walls of Delhi, together with the Meerut force, consisting of the 6th carabineers, 60th rifles, a mounted battery, 4 horse-artillery guns, two 18-pounders, 125 artillery recruits, and the Sirmoor battalion; the whole amounting perhaps to 5,500 Europeans, and 1,300 natives. The 5th and 60th N.I., who were said to have been destroyed for mutiny, have escaped that fate, but it appears that it is not intended they should form a part of the avenging army. Regular communications are now opened up with General Barnard, and we may hear at any moment of the downfall of Delhi, and of the house of Tamerlane. If reports which come in from many quarters, and which all agree in the main are true, his shadowy majesty must make up his mind to live henceforth without liberty as well as without power, and will have abundant reason to rejoice that the English have peculiar notions of the mode in which regal villainy should be punished. A letter received by the Rajah of Jheend from his "newswriter" at Delhi, dated the 20th ult., which will be found elsewhere, shows how deeply the king has committed himself to the plans and atrocities of the rebels. From private sources we hear that he has caused letters to be sent to various regiments, requesting them to rob the treasuries, and loot all they find, bringing, in every case, the plunder to his royal receiving-house. Favour and twelve rupees a month will reward the obedient sepo; punishment sure, but not specified, is to overtake him who elects to remain honest. Some of his majesty's ancestors were emphatically the greatest thieves in the world; and their descendant has eagerly availed himself of this, the only opportunity he has ever had, of pursuing the family vocation.

At Goruckpore two companies of the 17th N.I. were stationed. Half of these were sent to Azimgurh on the 4th instant with five lakhs of treasure, and on arriving at that place, they made common cause with the rest of the regiment, killed one, or perhaps more of their officers, and after helping themselves to the rupees under their charge, they plundered the treasury, set fire to the Collector's house, and broke away for Fyzabad, slaughtering as a matter of duty every white person that came in their way. The remaining company at Goruckpore were in charge of the treasury at that place, and as it was rumoured that the two troops of the 12th Irregulars intended to join them in mutinying, they were politely requested to allow the money to be made over to the jail Burkundazes. This they declined to do, and refused to allow any of the collector's people to approach the building. The whole city was of course in agonies of fright, for it was reported that Fuzil Alee, whose head was cut off about two months since, was coming down upon the bazaar with a large force at his heels. The mahajuns believed that the old native landholders, whose estates they had absorbed, would claim their own again; and all who cared for life and property, fancied that their chance of retaining either was but small. The prisoners attempted to break out, but the gaol guards killed six and wounded eleven of them, which result decided them not to renew the effort. Ultimately, after five days' wearing anxiety, the inhabitants saw less reason to dread a revolt. The sepoys allowed the treasurer to open the cash-chest, and up to the 10th inst., neither sowars nor infantry had shown further signs of bad temper. Sir P. Grant arrived yesterday in the Fire Queen, and we hail in his person the advent of more vigorous measures, and the final suppression of the revolt.

MUTINY.

STATIONS WHERE MUTINIES HAVE OCCURRED.

We have below indicated by an asterisk those stations at which the women and children of our countrymen have fallen into the hands of the soldiery, and it is better to draw a veil over the barbarities they endured from these merciless fiends. At the remainder of these stations named the officers were murderously assaulted, the bungalows fired, and at most of them the treasuries looted.

ALLAHABAD.—At Allahabad the mutiny broke out on the 4th instant, when the "loyal" 6th regiment, which had volunteered to proceed to Delhi against the rebels only a few days before, became the assassins of their own officers, and then marched off to join the mutineers, after burning the church and every bungalow in the place and looting the treasury. The whole slaughtered amounted to 26, and amongst them we find the names of Captain Birch, the fort adjutant, and the following officers:—Lieut Innes, ex-engineer; Lieut. Alexander, 2nd L.C.; Capt. Plunkett, 6th N.I.; Lieuts. Stewart and Hawes, ditto; Ensign Munro (doubtful); Ensigns Scott, Cheek, Dodd, Smith, Way, and Smith (doing duty with the regiment). The Irregular Cavalry, and Ferozepore regiment are said to have remained loyal, and the fort, being garrisoned by a few English troops, is probably safe. Not a European, however, remains outside the walls, and the last accounts from the city portray the most frightful state of matters there. A correspondent of the Phoenix writes:—

"Allahabad is in a most wretched state. All the houses are in a dilapidated state from cannonading. Not a single bungalow has been left untouched, nearly all are burnt down to the ground. Upwards of 3,000 prisoners have liberated themselves, and are committing all sorts of outrages. Not a single European or Christian remains outside the fort. It is to be feared that few have escaped. Mr. Archer, the commissioner's head clerk, is the only person saved in his and his brother's family. Peeroodull, the great banker, has been plundered and his house is in a most ruinous state. The dacoits have obtained their object everywhere by attempts at incendiarism first, and whilst the people were engaged in quenching the fire, the dacoits made away with the booty. The way from Gopeegunge and Jhoonse is occupied by a class of banditti who have plundered innumerable people and made some of them return to Mirzapore with a rag only on their backs."

ALLOPORE.—A letter from Camp Allopoore, dated 4th instant, says:—Head-quarters arrived here this morning. Brigadier Halifax died at Kurnal about 7 P.M. on the 1st instant. Colonel Mowatt of the artillery died at Peeplee. All quiet as yet, and we are most anxious for a sharp move upon Delhi. No one in camp can understand the cause of so much delay. The Hurreeah light infantry have mutinied, and are by this time in Delhi, officers all safe.

It is said the 60th native infantry en route to Rohtuck are disaffected, and demand their arrears of pay. Five men were hung up on the 2nd instant at Camp Race, as it was proved that they had molested and stripped ladies in retreat from Delhi.—Hurkaru, June 12.

ARRAH, June 10.—The judge received some further news of the mutineers about the district, when, yesterday at ten o'clock, a meeting of all the gentlemen (European and East-Indian) was held at the magistrate's house. During the night, news was brought that an indigo factory at or about Buxar, belonging to Mr. Mathews, had been burnt down, and the revolting of half a Sikh regiment caused great alarm to every one here. The magistrate, poor fellow, tried his best to get the Europeans, &c., to remain at their posts, but they were bent to the contrary. So last evening, at three o'clock, about twenty or twenty-five gentlemen, with their families, left the station. It was hard for them to procure conveyances.

Last night a rumour was abroad that the town people were about rising; if they do, there will be an awful affair. The only Europeans here are Mr. Littledale, judge; Mr. Combe, collector; Mr. Wake, magistrate; Mr. Colvin, assistant magistrate; Dr. Hall, and Mr. Cock, head-clerk to the collector; so what can a few (six in all) do to a whole town? The magistrate has placed dawks all the way between this and Dinapore, fresh dawks have been placed from this to Buxar.

AURANGABAD, JUNE 23.—Yesterday morning, General Woodburn's brigade came in, and marched direct to the ground occupied by the mutinous cavalry. Captain Abbott directed the men to give up their arms—all obeyed save one troop. The artillery opened upon them with canister, which had the effect of soon dispersing them. Captain Mayne with a portion of the 3rd cavalry, has just galloped into the city. The men of the 1st cavalry who were on guard have since been disarmed, and their places taken by the 3rd. Whilst Capt. Abbot was directing the men to lay down their arms, trooper stepped out and snapped his pistol at him, which, fortunately, missed fire. The trooper has been hanged. The portion of the cavalry that remained staunch wheeled half round the gallows; in succession, the Native Infantry and Artillery marched past also. The ladies from Aurungabad arrived at Nuggur disguised as Mussalmans.

AZIMGURH.—"On the night of the 3rd June, the 17th N.I., stationed at Azimgurh, mutinied. An escort of 80 Sowars of the 13th Irr. Cav. brought in on that date seven and a half lakhs of treasure from Goruckpore. It was determined to continue its route to Benares, where the presence of some companies of the 10th (Queen's) would secure it to the Government. Some days previously the authorities, military and civil, had been occupied in throwing up a breastwork round the kutcherry. This, however, was not quickly completed. The escort and treasure moved about 6 P.M. At 9 P.M. all the men in the lines some distance from the kutcherry broke out, killed their quartermaster, and wounded the quartermaster-sergeant so severely, that he, wherever he is, cannot live,—slightly wounded the havildar-major, and killed the kotwal of the city. The officer on guard at the fort at the kutcherry hearing the shots, and having a guard of picked and trusty men, as he thought, turned them out, desired the golandazes to make the guns ready for business. They refused this, told him they would not fire or allow the guns to be fired on the regiment, and that all the officers and ladies would be spared; that they wanted the guns to get at the treasure, now some two hours and a half march ahead; I do not learn that any other persons were murdered, though some bungalows were set on fire. About twenty-seven persons reached Ghazee-pore yesterday in a terrible plight, after having toiled over forty-four miles of road. I learn also that some men of the same regiment escorted Major Burroughes, the officer in command, to Ghazee-pore; he is very much respected by the good men of them. What became of the treasure is at present unknown. Guns were heard during the night of the 3rd June, in the direction which the escort had taken, but the troopers had promised the sepoys to cut them to pieces if they came to seize the boxes, and they were to be joined by a reinforcement of fifty more from the same regiment from the Benares side. There has probably been a fight for it—a day will determine all."

BENARES.—"At five o'clock on the evening of the 4th June, the brigade was ordered out for the purpose of disarming the 37th regiment, who were known to be disaffected and in correspondence with people in the city. The men were ordered to appear on parade without their arms; some companies obeyed and did so, but others refused to give up their arms and commenced firing at their officers. This appeared to be the signal, for the rest of the regiment then ran to the bells of arms; the guns, however, began to pour in the grape so sharply upon them, that they were glad to beat a retreat; only a few of the most determined rebels still kept up a fire from the right wing at the officers. The Sikh regiment all this time remained quiet on parade, passive spectators of the scene, but at this crisis they loaded, by order of Colonel Gordon. An ominous change then came over them. The cavalry first turned, and then with the Sikhs poured in a deliberate volley on the officers standing around, three of whom fell. The artillery, in return, gave them a shower of grape, which sent them flying off the parade.

"About 100 of the mutineers were killed, and 200 wounded; the rest bolted, throwing down their arms. The mutineers of the Sikh regiment tried to capture the guns, and were thrice repulsed with great loss. Only a few men of the Irregular Cavalry and Sikh regiment stood firm; all the rest mutinied; their discomfiture was complete, thanks to the bravery of 180 European soldiers who defended the guns, and charged and shot down the mutineers. Eight only, instead of 35 as reported, of these brave soldiers were killed and wounded. The lives of the civilians and their families who had taken refuge in the Collector's cutchery, were saved by the presence and noble exertions of Soorut Singh, a Sikh prisoner. He it was, who went among the Sikhs of the treasury guard, and prevented them from rising after they had heard how the men of their corps had been cut up, and by his influence they were kept at their post until the next morning, when the treasure was removed to cantonments under an escort of Europeans. The portion of the Sikh corps over the treasury remained staunch."

CALCUTTA.—I hasten to communicate to you the following:—During Monday last the authorities managed to get possession of several important documents, including a sketch of the city, apparently drawn up by influential Mahomedans. The 'map' has been so sketched as to divide the whole of the town into sections. A general rise was planned to take place on the 23rd instant—anniversary of the battle of Plassey—the city taken and the 'Feringhee Kaufers' all massacred. Immediately this was accomplished, parties who swore on the Koran and joined in the butchery, &c., would have a certain section of the town made over to them for their sole use and benefit. A Nabob, residing not a hundred marches off Calcutta, promised to furnish 10,000 men to aid and abet in the affair, and who, it is stated, is seriously mixed up in the business. The authorities have determined to make a prisoner of him, and have him removed to Fort William without loss of time."—Hurkaru, June 18.

With a view of tranquilizing the public mind, we beg to state that there is a sufficient military force at hand to suppress any attempt at a rise, by either the Mahomedan or Hindoo inhabitants, or both. There is the 53rd foot in Fort William of 900 men strong, a wing of the 37th foot encamped on the glacis, 500 in number. A company of the 3rd battalion Madras artillery, and No. 2 horse field battery, together with 40 men of the royal artillery, recently arrived from Ceylon, and our volunteer guard, consisting of four troops of cavalry and five companies of infantry, a wing of the 35th foot, about 350 men, guard the harmless Barrackporeans, and the 78th Highlanders are at Chinsurah, ready for any duty.

In addition to the above, we may as well state that in the course of a few days there will be a great accession to our military force, of which, in to-morrow's issue we will give fuller particulars.—Ibid.

All the sepoys in and near Calcutta (including the Calcutta militia, but exclusive of the body guard) were disarmed yesterday afternoon. They made no demur whatever. They were disarmed in parties wherever they happened to be, at the Government House Guard, the Treasury, the Mint, the Bank, and the Fort. Each party was confronted by a party of Europeans, and, on receiving the word, at once piled arms, or laid them on the ground, according to the order received. The arms and ammunition were then taken away by the European soldiers, nothing being left with the sepoys but their ramrods. The sepoys looked dejected, but at once recovered their spirits on being addressed by the interpreters, and informed that they would receive pay and perform duty as before, and that the disarming was merely a measure of precaution owing to the agitated state of the country, but that on quiet being restored they would again receive their arms. This explanation was received by the native troops in the Fort, where one of our reporters was present, with many salaams and many cries of Atcha and Bahoot razee hy. They were then marched off the ground, apparently very well satisfied.—Phoenix, June 15.

On Saturday a Mahomedan from the city entered Fort William, and began to tamper with a Brahmin sepoy of the 43rd on sentry, among other things asking many questions as to the arrangements made of the European troops in the Fort, and so forth. The sepoy pretended to listen to his overtures, and told him to call again in the evening. The man did call, and was at once seized by the faithful sepoy and delivered over to the authorities. He was tried by court-martial yesterday, and condemned to death. All the preparations for his execution were made,—the noose being fixed to the branch of a tree at the hospital-gate of the Fort, and the Donies being in attendance, but the order for the execution was countermanded.—Ibid.

BARRACKPORE.—All the native troops have been disarmed, and there are sufficient European troops there to protect the station and insure the safety of Dum-Dum.

It is stated that the Sepoys of the 70th Regiment at Barrackpore have refused all food, so acutely do they feel the disgrace of having their arms taken from them. About 120 men from that station, went off the night before last. It is to be hoped they will be watched, and prevented from plundering.—Englishman, June 17.

CHITTAGONG.—There are five lakhs in the treasury, which is a great temptation. The alarm is great, though as yet no open mutiny has taken place.

CIS-SUTLEJ STATES.—From a telegraphic message just received from the commissioner. Cis-Sutlej States, it appears that the mutineers, on their second attack on Brigadier Wilson, came out with their whole force, fighting from one to five p.m., of the 31st. Their loss is not stated. It is said the bridge of boats is cut off behind them. Captain Andrews, of the 60th Rifles, and Lieut. Perkins, of the Artillery, killed. The Sirmoor battalion had joined, and 100 men of the 60th Rifles had been sent out from Meerut.—Lahore Chronicle, June 5.

DELHI.—Our latest advices from Delhi are not encouraging. General Barnard was waiting reinforcements on the morning of the 17th, having repelled several sorties with success, and inflicted severe loss upon the rebels. The following despatch has been received from the general relating the success on the 8th ult. :—

Delhi Cantonments, 8th June, 1857.

SIR,—The forces under my command marched from Allipour at one A.M. this morning, and on reaching Baidlee Serace, found the enemy strongly posted in an entrenched position, which I have the satisfaction to inform you we carried after an engagement of about three-quarters of an hour, and proceeded to take up our present position, which we found to be over disputed ground the whole way, and finally a well-defended line of defence from the signal tower to the Hindoo Rao house. Our troops behaved with the greatest gallantry and persevering endurance, and after facing very determined resistance, drove the enemy within the walls of Delhi. All this was accomplished by nine o'clock in the morning. Our loss has been comparatively trifling, only one officer being killed; * but I regret to say that officer is Colonel Chester, adjutant-general to the army, who was esteemed by all for every qualification that could adorn the soldier. I have not been able to ascertain the particulars of our loss, or capture of guns, but I fear, I cannot estimate the former under from forty to fifty killed; the number of guns taken to be about sixteen or eighteen.

I do not in this hurried despatch attempt to recommend any one, but I cannot pass over the assistance I received from Brigadier Wilson, whose cool judgment entitles him to an equal share of any merit that may be given to the officer in command. From the Brigadier-General and staff of the army attached to me, from the division staff, I received every support, and from my personal staff, Captain Barnard and Lieut. Turnbull, the most daring devotion. The conduct of the Goorkha battalion, the sappers, and other native troops employed, was most praiseworthy, they vied with their European comrades in forward daring, the troops of the native contingents did equally good service, including those of the Jheend Roja, and I cannot close this without especial notice of many gentlemen attached to the army in civil capacities, who not only accompanied us into the field, but did every service the extended nature of our position rendered particularly important, in keeping up mutual communications.

I hope to send you a fuller detail to-morrow. Our siege train is up, and I hope to open on the town without a moment's delay.

I have, &c.,

H. BARNARD,

Major-General, Commanding Field Force.

To the Commander-in-Chief.

LIST OF PERSONS BELONGING TO THE DELHI GARRISON STILL MISSING.

The following is a list of persons belonging to the Delhi garrison who are still missing. It has been sent by Mr. Barnes from Umballa :—

Col. Knyvett, 38th N.I.; Lieut. Gambier, ditto; Lieut. Holland, ditto; and Lieut. Proctor, ditto.

54th N.I.—Col. Ripley, Capt. Smith, Capt. Burrows, Lieut. Osborne, Lieut. Butler, Ensign Waterfield, Ensign Angelo, Dr. Dopping, also Lieut. Edwards, and Ensign Vibart.

74th N.I.—Capt. Gordon, Lieut. Reveley, Lieut. Hyslop, Lieut. Addington.

Mr. Fraser, civil service; Mr. Hutchinson, ditto; Mr. Gallo-way, ditto; Lieut. Wilson, artillery; Mr. Todd, electric telegraph department; Mr. and Miss Jennings, Mr. Taylor, of the college.

Rev. J. Hubbert; Mr. Bayley, post-master, and six children; Mrs. Dalton, inspector, Miss Clifford, Captain Douglas, Mr. and Mrs. Beresford, and two children; Lieut. and Mrs. Forrest, and two Misses Forrests.

The number of clerks, conductors, and miscellaneous Christian population is not yet known.

Since the above was written, I learn that only four officers of the 54th N.I. escaped, viz. Major Patterson, Capt. Russell, Lieut. Anderson, and Lieut. Wheatley. These had gone out shooting, and were on temporary leave. Dr. Batson, 74th, volunteered to go disguised to Meerut for troops, and has not since been heard of.—Delhi Gazette Extra, June 10.

GHAZEEPORE, 13th June.—“I am glad to tell you that the men of the 65th regiment N.I. at this station, are still quiet and orderly. The district, however, is in a very disturbed state, and the disaffected Zemindars and others, are daily committing great depredations, to the injury of the well-disposed. The roads and thoroughfares are consequently unsafe for travellers. In short, dacoities, highway-robberies, murder, &c., are the order of the day.—Englishman, June 20.

GWALIOR.—The contingent, consisting of seven regiments of infantry, two of cavalry, and five companies of artillery, has mutinied. The defection of this army is most serious. The mahajahs protected our ladies and officers, who have all arrived safely at Agra. The soldiery demanded that they should be given up, but the prince stood firm and rescued them.

We regret very much to have received authentic information that the stations of Seepree and Goonah are deserted, and that Gwalior mutinied on the 16th instant; but we have no particulars of the outbreak.

The mutineers at Jhanai were taken into the Rana's pay, and he has declared his independence! The more fool he, in our opinion.

The Agra dawks still continue closed, and the north-west route for the mails is now via Neemuch and Nusseerabad. We trust the mutineers may allow it to be worked. The Calcutta dawk communication is threatened from the state of Jubbulpore; but the line via Sumbalpoore and Kuttack will be opened, in case of danger, and thus insure safety to the mails and their carriers.

JAUNPORE.—The Cavalry Regiment stationed here have mutinied, and murdered their commanding officer, Lieut. Mara.

MUTINY OF THE 2ND IRREGULAR OUDE CAVALRY.—We were reluctant to give credence to the reports which reached us on Tuesday of the mutiny of a portion of Major Gall's Cavalry, which had gone up on duty against the Mynpoorie and Etawah insurgents, under Captain Fletcher Hayes. But there can now be no reasonable doubt of the fact, and it seems certain, that Captain Hayes and Bailey, with Lieut. Barbor and Mr. Fayrer, were all killed. It is supposed that Lieut. Carey succeeded in making his escape.

MAHONEE.—Village Mahonee on the Jumna, ten miles east of Palwal, thirty miles south of Delhi, June 6th.

The undersigned are all right and well :—

J. G. Jenkins, lieut., 44th regt.; W. E. Money; J. H. Glover, lieut., Engineers; W. M. Gibbon, 44th regt.; C. Lowdell; D. A. Vere, customs; G. H. Eckford, ditto; C. Kinloch, ditto; J.

* Lieut. Russell, 54th N.I., was also killed.—Ed. A. I. M.

H. Bradford, ditto; J. Wemyss, ditto; Elliot Colvin, C.S.; W. G. Hoist; J. Leeson; C. Le Messurier, C.E.; W. H. Curll, ditto; J. O. Pinson, customs; J. Michel, E.I. Railway; A. H. Spencer, ditto; J. S. Kitchen; E. C. Nunn; N. M. Cummins, E.I.R.; W. Ford, C.S.; H. W. Dashwood, C.S.; J. Goldsworthy, 72nd regt.; G. F. Harvey, C.S.

MUTINY AT HANSI.—Concerning the mutiny at Hansi and Hissar of the Hurrecanah light infantry and 4th regiment of irregular cavalry, we are without full particulars. Great atrocities, however, seem to have been perpetrated upon the unfortunate women and children who fell into the hands of the soldiers.

LIST OF PERSONS WHO ESCAPED FROM HANSI.

The following copy of a telegraphic message from Umballa to Sir J. Lawrence was placed late yesterday evening in the editor's room:—

Telegraph-office, Rawul Pindee, June 7, 1857.

Tapsell, Vaughan, and two children; Mr. Rich, Mr. Blewitt, sister-in-law, and two children; Mr. and Mrs. Scarden and three children; Mr. and Mrs. Warren and three children; Mr. Jews; Mr. Hickey; Mrs. Tapsell, son, and daughter; Quarter-master Serjeant Mallowe.

The following parties were left behind in Hansi whose fate is unknown:—Mrs. Milne and two children; Sub-conductor Fitz-Patrick, wife, and several children; Mrs. Mallowe and two children.

HISSAR.—Concerning the mutiny at Hansi and Hissar of the Hurrecanah light infantry, and 4th regiment irregular cavalry, we are without full particulars. Great atrocities seem, however, to have been perpetrated upon the unfortunate women and children who fell into the hands of the soldiers. The following persons escaped from Hissar:—Dr. Waghorn, Mrs. Daniels and child, Mrs. Hallet, Serjeant Sheills, Mr. Taylor (arrived at Thanegsur).

The persons who were in Hissar, and whose fate is unknown, are:—Mr. Wedderburn, wife, and child; Lieutenant and Mrs. Barwell; Mrs. Hallet; Mr. and Mrs. Jeffries; Mr. and Mrs. Smith, and six children; Mr. Thompson, and thassildar; Mr. and Miss Holmes.

All those who were in Sirsa escaped, as they had a start of twenty-four hours.

Mr. Taylor, of the stud, has come into Thanegsur from Hissar, and reported the following deaths:—Mr. Wedderburn and Mrs. Wedderburn; Mr. Barwell, Hurrecanah battalion; Mrs. Barwell; Mr. Daniell, patrol; and Mr. Thompson.

Dr. Batson, of Delhi, has turned up, and is now at headquarters.

Sirdar Mohun Singh, of Roopur, was hanged yesterday at Umballah, for countenancing the two mutinous companies of the 5th N.I., lately on duty at that place. Three of the sepoys were also hanged.

A reward of Rs. 1,000 has been offered by the chief commissioner for the discovery of the persons who burnt down the hospital of the 60th N.I. on the night of the 4th instant, at Jullundur. There have been several fires here of late.

(Signed) R. MONTGOMERY, Judicial Commissioner.

BHURTPORE.—"We are informed that the Bhurtpore levies under the command of Capt. J. P. Nixon, of the 25th regiment, Bombay N.I., superintendent of Jawud, Neemuch, have mutinied in the same manner as the men of the Mehidpore contingent, and have joined the rest of the mutineers in committing excesses. The behaviour of these levies has been most treacherous; they having broken out into open mutiny whilst on the march to restore the peace which had been broken by the Neemuch mutineers. Immediately the news of the disturbances reached Capt. Nixon, he set out with the Bhurtpore levies, accompanied by Capt. Gore Munbee, of the Bombay engineers, who, though senior in army rank to Capt. Nixon, waived all etiquette in the matter, and placed himself under that officer's command. They had only proceeded a couple or three marches, when the men refused to be taken against the mutinous Bengal sepoys, and set the authority of Capt. Nixon and Munbee at defiance. These officers had to fly for their lives, and, in doing so, passed through districts where they were frequently fired upon by the insurgents, and, after many hairbreadth escapes, were fortunate enough to get safely to Bhurtpore, where they now are, neither of them having, we rejoice to say, sustained any injury.—Poona Observer Extra, June 16.

LATEST OFFICIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Judicial Commissioner's Office, Lahore,
14th June, 1857.

THE reports from head quarters show that our heavy guns are being placed in position. There have been several smart skirmishes, in which the mutineers have always suffered great loss, and been driven into the city.

The sepoys of the 45th N.I. were yesterday blown from guns at Ferozepore, and two were hanged.

The Cashmeerees took advantage of the temporary disorder at Loodianah, caused by the presence of the Jullundur mutineers, and plundered the Mission premises and some houses. Mr. Ricketts, the deputy commissioner, very properly hanged twenty of them yesterday.

Captain Robertson, the superintendent of Sirsah, has supplied the following list of persons belonging to that station, who were at Sonam on the 8th, and expected to be at Pattialla on the 9th.

Mr. Donald, wife, child, and three sisters.

Mrs. Hilliard and three children.

Dr. and Mrs. Minas and child.

Mr. and Mrs. Waolesty.

Mr. Moore, assistant commissioner.

Mr. Bowles, patrol, with mother and two sisters.

Mr. Le Fevre, patrol.

Mr. Hodges, patrol.

LAHORE, June 15.—Mr. Barnes has transmitted the following by telegraph from Umballa:—"In the sortie of the 12th, the enemy pushed on by Metcalfe House on the left, and the Subzi Mundi on the right, and tried to turn both flanks. The enemy was repulsed with great loss. Our fire is said to have done great damage in the town. The present body of mutineers are about 4,000 fighting men, and they are without a leader, and dispirited. A battery was to be erected at Metcalfe House. Some of the Gwalior contingent, that had gone over, are about to come into camp, and lay down their arms."

"A later message is to the effect that the rebels lost on the 12th 450 killed, that on the 13th they were very quiet inside the city, and dispirited. Mr. Harvey, the commissioner of Agra, had come to Peehwal with the Jeypoor force.

"The Calcutta mail of the 30th had reached Umballa.—(Signed) R. MONTGOMERY, Judicial Commissioner."

"— June 16.—The only intelligence from Delhi is that another sortie had been repulsed on the evening of the 13th.

"A new telegraph-station will be established to-day at Raec.

"A portion of the reinforcements had reached Umballa, en route to Delhi.

"Throughout the Punjab complete tranquillity prevails.—(Signed) R. MONTGOMERY, Judicial Commissioner."

Wednesday, June 17.—The intelligence by telegraph from Delhi is, that on the morning of the 15th the enemy made a determined attack on our position, and were beaten back, as usual, with great loss.

A news-letter from the city of Delhi says that strict orders have been issued by the king to the Hindoostanee soldiery, to slay all the Sikhs who may be met with; even men who, from their countenance, may be supposed to be Punjabees are to be slaughtered.

A fakeer, called Sham Doss, endeavoured to raise an insurrection in the territory of our ally the Rajah of Nabab, whose troops are with our army at Delhi. Major Marsden, the deputy commissioner of Ferozepore, proceeded against him with a wing of the 10th light cavalry and two guns, and some irregular levies of Furreedkote and other places, attacked and dispersed his men, seized the fakeer in a village, in which he had made a stout defence, and hung him. The conduct and gallantry of the cavalry is highly applauded.

Ten mutineers of the 54th regiment N.I. were tried at Umballa yesterday, convicted, and blown away from guns.

The Irregular force, under General Van Cortlandt is making good progress towards Sirsa, settling the country, and punishing the refractory. The general reports that Rajah Jowahir Sing's men are doing good service.

The following are the names of those who have arrived at Nynce Tal from Bareilly, up to 4th June, 1857 :—

Capt. Brownlow, major of brigade.

18th Regiment N.I.—Lieutenant Hunter, Ensign Borwell, Dr. Oakeley.

66th Regiment N.I.—Colonel C. Troup, Captain Robertson, Captain Paterson, Captain Gibbs, Lieut. Warde, Lieut. Christian, Lieut. Stanton, Lieut. Rogers, Ensign Jacob, Dr. Bowhill, Sergeant-major Jennings.

Artillery.—Captain Kirby, Lieut. Smith.

8th Irregular Cavalry.—Captain Mackenzie, Lieut. Becher, Dr. Currie.

Civilians.—Mr. Alexander, commissioner; Mr. Guthrie, collector; Mr. C. Currie, Mr. Pasley, Mr. Berkeley and son.

College Teachers.—Dr. Anderson, Mrs. Tempstoe, Mr. Beddie, Rev. L. Poynder.

Missing, 18th Regiment N.I.—Major Hearson, Captain Richardson, Capt. Hathorn, Lieut. Gown, Lieut. Stewart, Ensign Dyson, Sergeant-major, wife and four children, Quartermaster Sergeant Cross.

Killed.—Brigadier Sibbald, Ensign Tucker, 68th N.I.; Pensioned Sergeant Hardy, wife and five children, with his nephew; Private Hardy, H.M. 32nd regt.; Mr. Matthews, pensioner, and family; Mr. Wilkinson, a writer; all the above lived in cantonments, and nothing has been heard of them, or Quartermaster Sergeant belonging to the artillery.

Civilians Missing.—Mr. Robertson, judge; Mr. Raikes, judge; Mr. Wyatt, deputy-collector; Mr. Orr, deputy-collector; Dr. Buch, College; Dr. Hansbowe; Wooral, Jail Sergeant; Dr. Hay, civil surgeon.

All the bungalows burnt to the ground at Bareilly, and the civilians and officers have lost everything they possessed. (Signed) MONTGOMERY, Judicial Commissioner.

Lahore, June 18.—There was a second sortie on the 15th, directed against the battery at Metcalfe House. The attack was a weak one; and further reports show that the sortie on the morning of the same date had been greatly exaggerated.

Brigadier-General Chamberlain has been appointed acting adjutant-general; and Colonel Nicholson a brigadier-general, to command the moveable column.

(Signed) R. MONTGOMERY, Judicial Commissioner.

Judicial Commissioner's Office, LAHORE, June 19, 1857.

On the 16th, up to 4 P.M., all was quiet before Delhi, and no fighting. Three thousand of the rebels are encamped outside of the Ajmere gate; and the force of the mutineers in Delhi appears not to exceed a few thousands, even after the addition of the 60th N.I. and some others who have lately joined them. The 60th N.I. led the attack on the 15th, and suffered severely.

Our army is awaiting reinforcements, a considerable portion of which left Umballa on the 17th, and proceeded by forced marches to Delhi.

The Guide corps and Goorkhas have continued to distinguish themselves, as heretofore, on all occasions. In one of the late encounters, Sirdar Khan Sing Rousea, formerly a leader of great distinction amongst the sirdars of the Punjab, accompanied Capt. Daly, commanding the Guides, charging on foot with great bravery. He was severely wounded, and has received a handsome present from the chief commissioner, in token of his admiration, with a letter, assuring him that his interests and those of his family will be carefully looked to by the British Government.

BRIGADIER CHAMBERLAIN'S ADDRESS TO THE 35TH.

The following is Brigadier-General Chamberlain's address to the 35th regiment of Native Light Infantry on the occasion of the punishment of death being inflicted on two sepoy of that regiment, on the morning of the 8th June, 1857 :—

"Native officers and soldiers of the 35th Light Infantry.

"You have just seen two men of your regiment blown from guns.

"This is the punishment I will inflict on all traitors and mutineers, and your consciences will tell you what punishment they may expect hereafter.

"These men have been blown from a gun, and not hung, because they were Brahmins, and I wished to save them from the pollution of the hangman's (sweeper's) touch, and thus prove to you that the British Government does not wish to injure your caste and religion.

"I call upon you to remember that each one of you has sworn to be obedient and faithful to your salt. Fulfil this sacred oath, and not a hair of your heads shall be hurt.

"God forbid that I should have to take the life of another soldier; but, like you, I have sworn to be faithful and do my duty; and I will fulfil my vow by blowing away every man guilty of sedition and mutiny, as I have done to-day.

"Listen to no evil counsel, but do your duty as good soldiers. You all know full well that the reports about the cartridges are lies, propagated by traitors, whose only desire is to rob and murder. These scoundrels, who profess to find cows' and pigs' fat in the cartridges, no longer think them forbidden when they break into mutiny, and shoot down women and children.

"Subedar Gajadeen Palneck, Subedar Roostum Sing, and Haveldar Gunga Deen Chowby, you have done well. I will bring your conduct to the notice of the Governor-General of India, who will reward your loyalty.

"Private Rusuphal Sook, you heard the mutinous and seditious language which was spoken by the two sepoys, and on the court-martial you would not give evidence. You are false to your salt, and shall be punished."

SIR JOHN LAWRENCE AND THE SEPOYS.

We give prominent insertion to the following proclamation, issued by Sir John Lawrence to the sepoys in the Punjab :—
From the Chief Commissioner of the Punjab, to the Hindostanee soldiers of the Bengal army.

Dated, June 1, 1857.

Sepoys—You will have heard that many sepoys and sowars of the Bengal army have proved faithless to their salt at Meerut, at Delhi, and at Ferozepore. Many at the latter place have been already punished. An army has been assembled, and is now close to Delhi, prepared to punish the mutineers and insurgents who have collected there.

Sepoys, I warn and advise you to prove faithful to your salt—faithful to the Government who have given your forefathers and you service for the last hundred years. Faithful to that Government who, both in cantonments and in the field, has been careful of your welfare and interests, and who, in your old age, has given you the means of living comfortably in your homes. Those who have studied history know well that no army has ever been more kindly treated than that of India. Those regiments which now remain faithful will receive the rewards due to their constancy. Those soldiers who fall away now, will lose their service for ever. It will be too late to lament hereafter, when the time has passed by. Now is the opportunity of proving your loyalty, and good faith. The British Government will never want for native soldiers. In a month it might raise 50,000 in the Punjab alone. If the "poor-bea" sepoy neglect the present day, it will never return. There is ample force in the Punjab to crush all mutineers. The chiefs and people are loyal and obedient, and the latter only long to take your place in the army, all will unite to crush them. Moreover, the sepoy can have no conception of the power of England. Already from every quarter English soldiers are pouring into India. You know well enough that the British Government have never interfered with your religion. Those who tell you the contrary, say it for their own base purpose. The Hindoo temple and the Mahomedan mosque have both been respected by the English Government. It was but the other day that the Jumma Mosque at Lahore, which had cost lakhs of rupees, and which the Sikhs had converted into a magazine, was restored to the Mahomedans.

Sepoys! my advice is that you obey your officers, seize all those among yourselves who endeavour to mislead you. Let not a few bad men be the cause of your disgrace. If you have the will you can easily do this, and the Government will consider it as a test of your fidelity. Prove by your conduct that the loyalty of the Sepoy of Hindostan has not degenerated from that of his ancestors.

(Signed) JOHN LAWRENCE.

THE PRESS OF INDIA.—By a supplement to the Calcutta Gazette, dated 20th June, 1857, we ascertain that the subjoined are the conditions upon which licenses to keep or use any printing press, or types or other materials or articles for printing, will ordinarily be granted in the towns of Calcutta, Bengal, the North Western Provinces, and all the dependencies of the Bengal presidency:—

"That no book, newspaper, pamphlet, or other work printed at such Press, or with such materials or articles, shall contain any observations or statements impugning the motives or designs of the British Government, either in England or India, or in any way tending to bring the said Government into hatred or contempt, to excite disaffection or unlawful resistance to its orders, or to weaken its lawful authority, or the lawful authority of its Civil or Military servants.

"That no such book, pamphlet, newspaper, or other work shall contain observations or statements having a tendency to create alarm or suspicion among the native population of any intended interference by Government with their religious opinions and observances.

"That no such book, pamphlet, newspaper, or other work, shall contain observations having a tendency to weaken the friendship towards the British Government of native princes, chiefs, or states in dependence upon or alliance with it.

"The above conditions apply equally to original matter and to matter copied from other publications.

"A copy of every book, pamphlet, newspaper, or other work published in the town of Calcutta, is to be immediately forwarded to the commissioner of police."

THE BENGAL AND BOMBAY ARMIES.—It is worth while to contrast the Bombay regulations regarding the enlistment of recruits with those of Bengal:—

Bombay Regulations.

"We receive all but those addicted to 'theft, drunkenness, or other destructive vices.'"

Bengal Regulations.

"Especially care must be taken to reject all men of the inferior castes, such as petty shopkeepers, writers, barbers, oilmen, shepherds, thatchers, pawnbrokers, gram parchers, porters, palkee bearers, sweetmeat makers, gardeners, and vegetable dealers, and any others habitually employed in menial occupations."

Now many of the very best men in the Bombay army are of these proscribed castes, and there is no reason whatever for their rejection in Bengal, but the fact that the Brahmin gentlemen of the ranks would mutiny if it were attempted to enlist them. From a return now before us we gather that the composition of a Bengal regiment in general is as follows:—350 Brahmins, 350 Rajpoots (Cheetras), 150 Mussulmans, 150 Hindoos of good caste.

A MURDEROUS ASSAULT.—It appears that the excitement of the Sepoys is extending to their officers. A dreadful scene took place yesterday morning at the station at Serampore, as the train was leaving for Calcutta. After several gentlemen, who are in the habit of travelling daily to Calcutta, were seated in one of the carriages, a number of disarmed Sepoys of the 70th regiment were ordered by Lieut. Daunt to take their places in that carriage. This was objected to by the gentlemen in question, their objections however not being listened to by Lieut. Daunt, they left and went into other carriages. Lieut. Daunt came into the same carriage with Mr. Bellairs, and after some altercation had passed between them on the subject of the Sepoys, Lieut. D. said to Mr. B. —"You are a liar to your throat, sir; Mr. B. replied,—"You are a blackguard. Upon this Lieut. Daunt struck Mr. Bellairs, who returned the blow. A friend of Mr. B. tried to separate the combatants. A railway officer named Baker also interfered. He endeavoured to remove Lieut. Daunt, who said,—"I'll report you, sir; Baker replied,—"No, I am sure you won't, you know better; upon which Lieut. Daunt drew a revolver from his pocket and deliberately fired at Baker. The pistol was knocked up a little by Mr. Bellairs, but notwithstanding this attempt to prevent murder, the bullet passed upwards through the forehead of Baker, who is supposed to be mortally wounded. The weapon, a five-barrelled revolver, was then with some difficulty wrenched out of the hands of Lieut. Daunt, and this officer was brought to Calcutta in custody, and sent to the Police Office. He has been remanded to the jail, pending the arrival of further evidence.—Englishman, June 18.

THE CAUSE OF THE MUTINY.—A correspondent says, that a paper has been sent to Gen. Low, tending to show the true cause of the disaffection which has manifested itself among the native troops, whether Hindoo or Mahomedan. It consists of a number of couplets in Persian, alleged to be composed by Niam-tooollah, a fuakeer in the Punjab, about seven hundred years ago, thirty-eight of which couplets are in circulation among both Hindoos and Mahomedans in the N.W. provinces; for both classes have equal faith in the predictions of the Mahomedan saints. The extract is now circulated among the Mahomedans in these parts, and read with avidity, as it seems clearly to fix the date of the downfall of the English sovereignty in India. It begins with a prophetic enumeration of the successive rulers of Hindostan, describes the Sikh powers as to flourish for forty years, and the Nazarenes for one hundred, at the end of which a king was to arise in the west, and overthrow their power. This work accomplished, the events foretold in the Koran are to take place—the appearance of Djazzel, or the tyrant, and then of Jesus, and lastly the coming of Mehndee to destroy Djazzel. It concludes with stating, that the rule of the English was to expire in 1260 Hegira, A.D. 1864—thus showing that the principal object of the prophecy is, to predict the extinction of the British government in India.—Englishman, June 15.

LIEUTENANT WILLOUGHBY.—We are much obliged to our correspondent who confirms the news (which we mentioned at the time) of the escape of Lieutenant Willoughby to Meerut, after blowing up the powder magazine at Delhi. We are sorry to hear that the gallant act of this officer caused some injury to himself. But that he should have escaped at all is marvellous, considering that hundreds of the mutineers were blown into the air.—Hurkara.

THE AFREEDDEES.—A large body of the Afreeddees have applied to the Commissioner of Peshawur to be enlisted in the service of the Company.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

DEATH OF GENERAL ANSON.

Fort William, June 5, 1857.—With deep sorrow the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council discharges the painful duty of announcing to the army of India the death of his Excellency General the Honourable George Anson, Commander-in-Chief of her Majesty's and the Honourable Company's forces in India.

This sad event took place on the 27th ult. at Umballa, after a short illness.

In General Anson the army of India has lost a commander than whom none was ever more earnest and indefatigable in labouring to improve the condition, extend the comforts, and increase the efficiency of every branch of the service committed to his charge.

To the Crown and the Honourable East-India Company whom he has served so zealously, as well as to the troops who have been his unceasing care, General Anson's untimely end in the midst of arduous duties will, the Governor-General in Council feels assured, be a source of the sincerest grief.

The Governor-General in Council directs that as a mark of respect to the late Commander-in-Chief, the flag of the fort shall tomorrow be hoisted half-mast high, and that seventeen minute guns, according with the rank which he held, shall be fired from the fort.

The same honours are to be paid to the memory of General Anson at each of the principal military stations in India, on receipt of this order.

The Governor-General in Council further directs that the officers of Her Majesty's and the Hon. Company's army shall wear mourning for fourteen days from the day on which this order is received at their respective stations.

R. J. H. BIRCH, Colonel,
Secy. to the Govt. of India, in the Milly. Dept.

THE COMMAND IN CHIEF OF THE BENGAL ARMY.

Head Quarters, Calcutta, June 17, 1857.—With reference to G. G. O. by the Governor in Council, of June 17, Lieut. gen. Sir Patrick Grant, K.C.B., has this day assumed the command in chief of the Bengal army.

2. Sir Patrick Grant has been attached to the Bengal army for upwards of six-and-thirty years. He has served with it in quarters and in the field; he has fought and bled in its ranks; and he had a heartfelt pride in believing it to be second only to the unequalled British army in every soldierly quality, and inferior to none in its loyalty and devotion to the State, and attachment to its officers. These illusions have now been most painfully dispelled. Many regiments have broken into open and defiant mutiny, and, forgetful of their oath of fealty to the State, and their former well-won high reputation, they have stepped themselves in crime, and committed a series of cowardly murders and cold-blooded atrocities, so cruel and ruffianly as to be almost beyond belief. A heavy retribution awaits those miscreant traitors. Many of them have already paid the penalty; and all will ere long have it made manifest that the Government which treats its good and faithful servants with unexampled liberality and unbounded consideration, is all-powerful to punish as well as to reward.

3. As adjutant-general of the army for a period of many years, Sir Patrick Grant had the best opportunity of becoming thoroughly acquainted with every regiment of every branch of the service, and he has the satisfaction to feel that he never has done an injustice to a soldier, nor refused to have any complaint (if preferred in a respectful and becoming manner) inquired into, and, if well founded, redressed; and the army may rest assured that the same principle which guided him as adjutant-general will continue to govern the Commander-in-Chief in his present high position. If any soldier has a complaint or representation to make, the Commander-in-Chief calls upon him to come forward manfully and respectfully, and prefer it, and he shall be listened to. All will receive even-handed and impartial justice; but his Excellency warns the turbulent and ill-disposed that he will pursue with unrelenting severity all who offend against discipline, and bring disgrace upon the army to which they belong.

4. The Governor-General of India has twice assured the native troops that there is no intention on the part of the British Government to interfere with their religion, and the Commander-in-Chief now repeats that assurance. In former times, the Mahomedan rulers of India tyrannically compelled thousands upon thousands of Hindoos of the highest castes to abandon their own religion and embrace Mahomedanism; and under Hindoo governments, even of recent date, the outward and public observances of the Mahomedan religion were prescribed and forbidden. But the British Government never has interfered, and never will interfere, with the religion of any class of its subjects. There is, and ever has been, universal toleration for all; and all are free to worship as they please, secure from molestation or hindrance. This is well known and understood; and the native troops are again emphatically warned not to allow themselves to be duped and fooled into believing aught to the contrary.

5. The Commander-in-Chief now calls upon the European officers of all grades, and the native portion of the army which has remained true and faithful to their oath and their colours, cordially and heartily to unite with him to re-establish order, and efface the memory of the foul stain which now unhappily attaches to the once honoured reputation of the Bengal army.

This order is to be read and carefully explained at the head of every regiment, troop, and company in the service.

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief is pleased to make the following appointments on his personal staff:—

Colonel F. P. Haines, her Majesty's service, unattached, to be military secretary.

Lieutenant A. C. Grant, 8th light cavalry, to be aide-de-camp.

Lieut. Henry J. Fane, H.M.'s 81st foot, to be aide-de-camp.

Lieut. G. T. Gough, H.M.'s 12th Royal Lancers, to be an extra aide-de-camp.

Brev. lieut. col. J. M. B. Fraser Tytler, commandant of the 9th Irregular Cavalry, to act as aide-de-camp until further orders.

All correspondence, reports, and returns, are to be sent to the officers in charge of the several departments at army head quarters at the presidency.

By order of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief,

W. MAYHEW, Major, Dep. Adj. Gen. of the Army.

THE EXPLOSION.—The explosion which took place at the powder-mills on Wednesday last is said to have been caused by one of the boys employed in the corning-room using too roughly the explosive material he was preparing. The superintendent had just done lunch, and gone out of his room, when the explosion took place, and he thus miraculously escaped the consequences. Three of the nine men who were at work in the corning-room died on the spot, five more died at the hospital on Wednesday, and the only survivor, now in the General Hospital, was shockingly scorched. Some of those who died are said to have been violently thrown against the walls or upon the floor, for they seemed to have been much bruised as well as burned. One of the poor unfortunates who died was the sole survivor of the last explosion, which occurred not long ago. It was gratifying to find that very prompt attendance and every possible attention was given to the men, no less than nine medical men being on the spot almost immediately after the accident.—Expresser, June 6.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

SATURDAY, August 1, 1857.

THE INDEPENDENT STATES OF INDIA.

SINCE the receipt of the late disastrous intelligence from the East, it has been frequently remarked that the time has at length arrived for the reduction of the entire empire of Hindostan under the direct control of the British Government. It is alleged that the proclamation of a single Delhi shone the absolute necessity of establishing one sole, homogeneous rule from the Himalayan mountains to the southern sea. The famous prophecy of the old Lion of the Punjab, that the map of all India would shortly and certainly become red, is now—say these wise men of the West—to receive its fulfilment. There will be no stability, no confidence, in the British supremacy until a single thin red line embraces the vast regions that extend from the Khyber Pass to the Bay of Bengal, from Katmandoo to Cape Comorin. Orientals are ever a fickle and excitable race, hasting from change to change for the mere love of novelty, utterly unsusceptible of gratitude, and incapable of appreciating the blessings of peace, order, and good government. No reliance, therefore, can be placed on their most solemn assurances, for they are guided by sensations rather than by convictions. The present insurrection will, no doubt, be suppressed; but what security is there that a similar movement may not be renewed twenty, ten, or even two years hence? Let the British Government, then, profit by the experience now afforded, and prevent the possibility of any future rallying-point by reducing every nawab, rajah, and talookdar to one monotonous level, recognizing them merely as landed gentry, possessing greater or less moral and local influence.

This reasoning is specious, but fallacious; the opportunity is tempting, but its fruition would be perilous, if not fatal. It is true that the mock sovereign of Delhi has been compelled to add an effervescent form and substance to the gaudy pagesant in which he has so long been the most conspicuous mountebank. But what previously was the nature of his independence? His dignity was "an airy and mere borrowed thing from dead men's dust and bones." His revenue amounted to no more than 180,000*l.* a year for the maintenance of his profligate family and more profligate followers. His power extended only over some twelve thousand "sons of Delhi," grovelling within the stinky walls of an Eastern Alsatia. There was no man so despicable, no villain so desperate, as not to be a worthy and welcome resident or guest within that God-forgotten, God-forgotten fortress. One London link of crime and vice united the monarch on his tawdry throne with the worst and lowest outcasts of humanity. That such a monstrous state of things should so long have been permitted to exist is, indubitably, a matter for shame and sorrow. That, out of deference to this degraded representative of a line of vigorous barbarians, no European troops should have been stationed at Delhi, is also a fit subject for indignation and regret; but, assuredly, neither the gross debauchery of the puppet king, nor our own fatuity, is any reason or excuse for injustice to those rulers who have fulfilled their engagements with us, and done their duty by their own subjects. It may, indeed, be admitted that with one honourable exception—that of the Nawab of Tonk—the Mohammedan princes under our protection have invariably degenerated into oppressive rulers and coarse sensualists. Unrestrained by fears of foreign or internal foes, and loathing the drudgery of official business, they have yielded to the voluptuous tendencies of their physical organization and religion, and have recognized as pleasure what other men would shrink from with horror and disgust. If, then, it be the mission of the British people to proclaim a crusade against all tyrants and in favour of all oppressed peoples, it may be proper and even expedient to remodel the government of the Mohammedan states, and deprive their present rulers of the means of further pursuing their licentious career.

This policy, however, is by no means applicable to the protected Seikh and Hindoo states. In the present, as in past emergencies, the latter have shown themselves staunch and true, and have firmly adhered to the British Government even when the Company's proverbial good fortune seemed about to desert them. It may be that they bear no abstract love or good-will to the interloping Feringhees. It would be strange and unnatural if it were so. But as a tree is judged by its fruits, so should the fidelity of these 'princes' be estimated by their actions. Without doubt the real motive for their attachment is self-interest—the surest guarantee for its continuance. They are fully sensible that any attempt to overthrow the British ascendancy must ultimately fail, and to its failure bring ruin and destruction upon all who engage in the struggle. They are equally aware that from among themselves there arose a genuine hero, one born to conquer and command, his first act would be to lay his neighbours under contribution. Self-interest and mutual jealousy, therefore, combine to impress upon them the advantage of keeping on good terms with the paramount power, and of accepting the ills they bear, rather than flee to those they cannot fathom or foresee. There is only one contingency that is at all likely to induce the independent Hindoo states to let it untried, and that is the common danger of being suddenly incorporated into the British empire. A feeling of distrust has already been created by Lord Dalhousie's injudicious prohibition of the rite of adoption. This rite, or usage, is almost coeval with the very mythology of the Hindoos, and through long tradition has come to be regarded as a divine institution—as it were, a supplement to the shortcomings of nature. Nor is it surprising that they should be at a loss to discover the train of reasoning which proclaims the British Government the rightful successor of those rulers who die without leaving legitimate issue. It is at least an arbitrary enactment, and one little calculated to insure the cordial support of the states that are still nominally independent. Having nothing to fear from them, it concerns the honour and good name of this country to exercise a liberal and generous policy towards all tributary and protected states, and to learn to conciliate those whom we have taught to fear and respect us.

THE NATIVE PRESS.

There is good reason to believe that the spirit of disaffection which, unhappily, prevails in the North-West Provinces, has been purposely fomented by the native press. It may seem at first sight incredible that miserable little sheets of badly-written and wretched lithographed bombast, rarely exceeding a circulation of fifty copies, should exercise much influence, whether for good or for evil. That such is the case, however, admits of no doubt. And it must be remembered that their venom is diffused far beyond their actual subscribers by means of the scribe-writers, who go about from house to house and retail the various items of news or of racy comment they are able to gather from all quarters. According to theory, the native press is subject to something resembling a censorship, but not of a character to be of any avail. The ambiguous forms of expression familiar to Oriental languages render it extremely difficult to discern between stolidity and sarcasm. And this difficulty is doubled by the frequent custom of disguising the writer's real sentiments under the flimsy mask of a dialogue, in which both sides of a question are discussed with equal heat, but very unequal assistance. In all cases, where the Government is not actually abused and vilified, it is treated with ridicule, and its motives maliciously distorted. It is evident that, under these circumstances, the natives are little likely to look up to their rulers with that degree of respect which can alone counterbalance the numerical inferiority of the latter. Nor are they to be governed on the principle of mutual forbearance, which is possible where a certain degree of similarity exists between the conquering and the conquered races, as between the Normans and Saxons. There is no such thing as equality of rights among Orientals. There are but two classes, the superior and inferior, the privileged and the non-privileged. Between them lies a broad line of demarcation, and it is not for us to efface that line. For this reason it is expedient that the native press be permitted to live, and that it be no longer permitted to revile the Government by which it is protected and patronized. It is also very desirable that a better tone should be imparted to the European press of India. Unfortunately many of the editors are individuals of very humble attainments and indifferent character. From such persons it would be absurd to expect a high tone of public feeling, or a gentlemanly style of diction; and it is no matter for surprise that they should eagerly assist in spreading unfounded reports, or indulge in personalities and violent language. Perhaps it may be impossible at the present day to extend the censure to the European portion of the Indian press, however much it may require such supervision. But there can be no objection to the Government availing itself, ostensibly and officially, of the columns of some well-known and respectable journal, converting it, in fact, into a Moniteur Indien. By this means many injurious reports might be checked at the outset, while a series of carefully-written articles might be employed in disabusing the native mind of many errors and prejudices as to the wishes and intentions of their rulers.

CROWN, OR KOOMPANEE JAN.

This report of the Bengal army having taken place while the administration of India was ostensibly in the hands of the Court of Directors, it has been somewhat hastily assumed that it would not have happened had the government of that empire been vested nominally, as well as virtually, in a minister of the Crown. A more illogical defence can scarcely be imagined, or one less derivable from antecedent facts and premises. The past history of our own country, and its series of triumphant blunders, may induce a certain degree of confidence in the intentions of Providence with regard to its future destinies, but it assuredly does not justify a very high appreciation of the wisdom, foresight, and judgment of our governing classes. The policy pursued by the official advisers of the Crown towards the colonies and dependencies of Great Britain is seldom worthy to be quoted as an example of administrative sagacity; for where it has not been feebly tentative, it has been arbitrary and capricious. What proof of senatorial wisdom was afforded in the loss of the greater portion of our American colonies? What evidence of good government was furnished by the rebellion in Canada? What illustrations of justice and impartiality are to be found in the annals of Ireland until within the last few years? What reasonable motives for pride and exultation are based on the management of the natives, the New Zealanders, the Singalese, or the aboriginal inhabitants of Australia? It was no Court of Directors that lost one empire and hazarded another, that alienated a kindred race, and oppressed or exterminated so many indigenous tribes of barbarians. And yet with these antecedents before us, we are told that the government of the Crown is just, paternal, and beneficent, while that of the Company has been harsh, selfish, and illiberal. To a certain extent it has been illiberal—in the party acceptance of that word—and the prospect of a change in this respect inspires every Anglo-Indian with well-founded anxiety and apprehension. A "liberal" system of administration is ill calculated for the temperament of Asiatics. They must be kept under, or they will rise up against us; the idea of equal rights is to them incomprehensible. In former times the European was placed on a lofty elevation, whence he looked down upon the natives, who feared, respected, and obeyed him. But this was "illiberal." In practice it might work admirably, but in theory it was opposed to the Benthamite fancies that have lately become fashionable. The system must therefore be changed in favour of one more consonant with the amiable feelings and crude notions of conventional England. There is a numerous, influential, well-intentioned, but short-sighted class of persons in this country, who worship the letter of the Divine law with idolatrous devotion, who condemn common sense as the armoury of the Evil One, and who answer facts and arguments with the ancient war-cry, "The word of the Lord and of Gideon!" Out of deference to these bigots and their "respectable" followers, for respectability is no longer estimated by the keeping a horse and gig, so much as by the putting a long grizzle at the proper season—a liberal tone was forcibly infused into the administration of India. The education and mental culture of the natives was insisted upon in public and in private as the first sure step towards their conversion. A little mattered that the only result of the diffusion of European science and literature has hitherto been the extension of a sneering scepticism, or avowed infidelity. It seemed good to Exeter Hall that Hindoo and Mahomedan should be left without any religion at all, in order to prepare them for the acceptance of Christianity. But Hindoo and Mahomedan have thought otherwise, and decline to renounce the faith of their forefathers, merely because it appears strenuous to the swine devouring beef blaspheming, wine drinking, Peringhee, in the name of religion, that the Court of Directors wisely and benevolently set their face against the spirit of proselytism, and forbade their own servants, whether civilian, clerical, or military, to interfere with the religion or habits of the natives. This was, no doubt, a proof of their infidelity, but at least it had the effect for a time of preserving internal peace and tranquillity. It was not, however, in their power to prevent the injudicious interference of European individuals, or to check the fanatical enthusiasm of the European press. Under the government of the Crown, it will become still more difficult to restrain the very zeal of hot-headed evangelists, who would reduce a Kingdom to make a convert. India is not yet, and probably never will be, so governed by a constitutional and parliamentary system. But the only form of power suitable to the genius of the Asiatic. Few have seen how it tended to weaken and destroy the moral influence of the Company when the appeals to Parliament against the decisions of their accredited servants, which have become so frequent of late years. This is a tenfold greater magnitude when Indian affairs pass more directly under the surveillance of Parliament, and are converted into a new weapon of offence in the hands of her Majesty's Opposition. It is impossible to introduce the constitutional system into a government that is required to act with instantaneous energy. The only true principle and means of maintaining our supremacy is that which was pursued in the first instance—to abstain from all unnecessary interference with the religious and social peculiarities of the natives, but, in a political point of view, to treat them as an inferior and conquered race, ever ready to turn upon their rulers and to expel them from the land. But how far will such a principle accord, not merely with the missionary philanthropy of Exeter Hall, but with the ostentatious lip-lip of the English Parliament and press?

OUR INDIAN SYSTEM.

"The Indian system," says Sir Charles Napier, "seems to be the crushing of the native plebeian and supporting the aristocrat, who, reason and facts tell us, is our deadly enemy. He must always be rich, for we step into his place; he descends to the scum of society, and we stand on his head. The ryot is ruined by us, though willing to be our friend. Yet he is the man whom we must trust for keeping India, and the only one who can take it from us, if we allow him; for he then joins his native material chief." It would be difficult to find a passage throughout our English literature more full of errors, both as to facts and inferences. If it be true that we support the aristocrat, how comes it that we are described as standing on his head? This is, at least, as Hibernian ideas of affording support. But the supposed fact is positively a fiction. So far from taking part with the aristocracy, we have systematically opposed and slighted them. Had it been otherwise, our position at this moment would have been far more secure than it appears to be. It has been too much our policy to encourage the rise and progress of a commercial plutocracy, who seldom prove to be good landlords, or attached to anything but self. They are usually too pompous, too cunning, too harsh, too mercenary, ever to acquire the love and esteem of their dependents. They value a man, not as belonging to a common humanity, but as a mechanical contrivance capable of bringing in a certain sum per annum. They know exactly the amount of labour that can be wrung from each individual, and the extent to which competition prevails. They are thus enabled to calculate to a nicety the precise degree to which the sword can be applied, and how many turns it may be worked without squeezing the vital spark from their victims. As in this country the upstart landlord builds a school and endows a church, so does the new millionaire plant a grove or sink a well, but neither of them regards his tenants in the abstract, or as members of the great patriarchal family. The natural consequence is reciprocal alienation and distrust. It is beyond all doubt that, as far from supporting the real aristocracy of the land, we have done all in our power to impoverish and discredit them. Through the dilatoriness or injustice of our courts numbers of the most influential landed proprietors have been dispossessed of the estates they and their ancestors had held for centuries. Many a time and often have the armies of foreign conquerors, or the fierce ravens of reckless adventurers, swept over their lands and reduced the possessors to temporary destitution, but the lands themselves never passed away to other owners, and remained for the English law courts, with their tedious processes, to effect final completion and final ruin. By means of legal quibbles and chicanery they have been deprived of their ancestral inheritance, and have seen strangers looting out the halls of their forefathers. On all occasions it has been the policy of the British Government to reduce the native gentry to a condition of weakness and dependence, and to affect a high-sown sympathy with and open eye to the works in the fields, under a tropical sun, with never a shirt on his back. Sir Charles Napier, therefore, was utterly misinformed, when he declared our system as being in favour of the aristocrat at the expense of the plebeian. He may, however, have been more correct in bidding us look to the labouring classes, in our hour of need, for co-operation and support. It was from them that Clive and Lake recruited their conquering armies a hundred years ago, before the superficial reverence for Rajpoots and high caste Brahmins had affected the rulers of Hindostan. The village watchmen, proverbial for their courage and fidelity, would alone suffice to form a new army, free from superstitious prejudices, and equally ready to repel an invader or to crush a rebellion. But the assertion that the ryot hates his natural chief is one the responsibility of which we must leave to Sir Charles Napier, who was in the habit of expressing himself with greater vigour than accuracy.

THE EUPHRATES VALLEY RAILWAY.

THE present commotion in India will not have been altogether in vain, should it produce the effect of removing the apathy that exists in this country with regard to all that concerns the most important dependency of the British Crown. Hitherto it has been in vain to direct attention to the vast and various natural productions of our Indian empire. It was idle to talk of the quantity of cotton that might thence be obtained, or to hint at the advantages of growing our own tea. Equally a waste of time has it been to indicate the many other profitable investments that court British capital and enterprise. The distance is always quoted as an insuperable objection. Few speculators have the nerve to undertake an adventure that necessitates a preliminary voyage of from four to five weeks. Were it not for this, say they, less hesitation would be felt as to embarking a portion of one's means in some of the tempting opportunities that present themselves in the far East. This objection, however, is quite capable of mitigation. Mr. W. P. Andrew, the spirited and indefatigable champion and originator of Eastern railways, has conceived a happy design to connect the Mediterranean with the Persian Gulf by means of a railway down the Euphrates Valley. A company has already been formed for this purpose, the first section of the line surveyed, and the Turkish Government induced to guarantee a minimum rate of interest of six per cent., and also to make a harbour at the mouth of the Orontes, at the proposed terminus of the railway. The first effect of such a line would be the reduction of the distance between this country and India by upwards of 1,000 miles, and of the time to about fourteen days. The political importance of this railway needs no illustration at the present moment, when every one is so painfully anxious to receive intelligence from the East. In an emergency like that which has actually occurred, troops could be conveyed to Kurrachee, at the mouth of the Indus, in three weeks instead of seventy days, and in another week to Lahore, by steam transit. Nor are the commercial advantages held out of less value. In addition to the cotton, tea, sugar, and indigo of India, the rich products of fertile Mesopotamia would alone furnish a large amount of traffic. Indeed, Sir John McNeill estimates that the existing traffic on the proposed section from Seleucia to the Euphrates would yield a dividend of 8 per cent. on the required capital. This capital is fixed at 1,400,000*l.*, and yet, notwithstanding the six per cent. guarantee of the Turkish Government, English capitalists hesitate to come forward with so small a sum of money. The British Government are equally cautious in promising any financial support to the undertaking, though professing to feel the warmest interest in its progress and success. Under ordinary circumstances, the Government are clearly justified in holding aloof from commercial speculations; but the Euphrates Valley Railway may almost be termed a political and strategical point. To whatever country it belongs, there will accrue great moral and political influence in Western Asia, as well as immediate and substantial advantages. And according to the statement addressed by the chairman to the head of her Majesty's Government, there is a "general conviction that the Euphrates line will most assuredly pass into other hands, if England declines the task." This were a consummation devoutly to be deplored. It would truly be a disgrace to this great and wealthy nation, if it permitted the concession obtained from the Turkish Government to remain fruitless and mere waste paper. All that the company ask of her Majesty's Government is a counter-guarantee of 5 per cent. for twenty-five years, or 4½ per cent. for fifty years, on the capital of 1,400,000*l.*, in the event of the Porte failing to fulfil its part of the contract. But if any objection be entertained to incurring a contingency that might create ill-feeling and an angry correspondence between two countries now so intimately allied, there is no reason why the Government should refuse to guarantee a certain annual subsidy for the conveyance of mails, troops, and military stores. In any case, let us never again hear that there is even a chance of the Euphrates line passing into the hands of another nation.

THE "BLATANT BEAST."

WHILE professing to correct "a few of the errors contained in Sir William Napier's Life of his brother Sir Charles Napier, in so far as they affect the press of India," Dr. Buist has published a pamphlet in his own defence and glorification. The title-page informs the public that the learned journalist is member of upwards of a dozen Societies, the founder of a reformatory school, an astronomer, an ex-sheriff, and heaven knows how much more besides. From the preface we learn—on the same impartial authority—that he has led "a life certainly of above average spotlessness in all its relations," and that in other respects he is a very remarkable and superior sort of personage. And still further on we are assured that the victory is all his own, and that the unanimous voice of mankind is on his side. Such being the case, it was surely almost superfluous to notice the wild virulence of the two mad brothers. The world has long ceased to attach any importance to the railings of a Napier. All the members of that gallant family are known to be imbued with a morbid passion for a row, whether with the sword or the pen. They appear to entertain an insane notion that all mankind, with the exception of Lord Ellenborough and the late Duke of Wellington, have entered into a conspiracy against them, and they seem to gather strength and confidence from the very numbers of their imaginary foes. They are ever tilting against windmills, or hacking and hewing at wine-sacks. Among others, the highly-respectable editor of the Bombay Times came in for his share—and a very plentiful one, it must be admitted—of their abuse and misrepresentation. No doubt it must be a great trial of temper and patience to find one's character and motives maligned and distorted in one of the most popular books of the season. But in the present case it would have been both wise and dignified to have treated the oft-recurring libels with merited contempt and silence. Dr. Buist has thought otherwise; and in vindication of himself has produced a badly-written, ill-concocted pamphlet, not only refuting the Napierian mis-statements, but repaying in kind some of the abuse with which he himself has been assailed. The provocation was certainly very considerable; but we repeat the expression of our belief that the worthy doctor would have exhibited better taste and a sounder judgment in not yielding to the temptation to reply. He cannot expect to have the last word, for that no Napier would ever permit. And he has clearly fallen into error when he sneers at Sir Charles Napier's knowledge of Indian affairs. Recent events prove only too well that Sir Charles had an intuitive perception of the defects of the system of administration, and of their inevitable consequences. He was a prophet of evil, but unhappily no false prophet. His predictions have come true—perhaps earlier than even he himself anticipated—and evince no ordinary foresight on the part of the gifted seer.

INDIAN RAILWAYS.

It appears from a return ordered by the House of Commons, on the motion of Mr. Cheetham, that the longest line at present at work is the East Indian, of which 121 miles were opened in 1855. The remainder of this line, which will eventually extend to Lahore, will not be completed for at least five years to come. The estimated outlay required for its completion is 12,731,000*l.*; nearly nine millions having already been issued, with the sanction of the East India Company, at a guaranteed interest of 5 per cent. It is right to remark, that the above expenditure contemplates the formation of two branch lines—to Ranagunge and Jubbulpore, but does not include the extension from Delhi to Lahore. Next in importance is the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, in the Bombay presidency, at an estimated cost of ten millions, of which two-thirds have already been issued, bearing interest at 5 per cent, with the exception of 300,000*l.* debentures at 4½ per cent. Strictly speaking, this is a triple line, branching off to the south-east to meet the Madras line, to the north-west to join the Jubbulpore offshoot of the East Indian, and from Nussurabad eastward to Nagpore. As yet only 88 miles are at work, and he must be a wise or a reckless man who would undertake to predict the date of the completion of any one branch. In this same presidency a comparatively short line is proposed from Surat to Ahmedabad, called the Bombay, Baroda, and Central India Railway, estimated at one million, of which 750,000*l.* have been issued, with a guaranteed interest of 5 per cent. A still shorter line is talked of—the Scinde Railway—from Kurrachee to the neighbourhood of Kotree, on the Indus; the estimated capital being half a million, the whole of which has been issued at 5 per cent. Finally, we are promised a triple line likewise in the Madras presidency, estimated at six millions, of which four have been issued; namely, 500,000*l.* at 4½, 1,000,000*l.* at 4½, and 2,500,000*l.* at 5 per cent. At present no more than 65 miles, from Madras to Arcot, are of public utility; but eventually one branch will extend right across the peninsula to Beypoor, on the western coast; a second will join the Bombay line; and the third will unite Arcot with Bangalore. Certain persons, reasoning from the meridian of the Stock-Exchange, pretend that if these railways had been completed, the Bengal mutiny would have been crushed in the bud. Is it not more probable that the first act of the insurgents would have been to break up the tramroads? And in that case, both the shareholders and the East-India Company would have had serious grounds for apprehension with respect to the dividends.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—In your report of the proceedings at the Quarterly Court of Proprietors at the India House, on the 27th inst., I am represented to have stated that "The native press is entirely under the control of the press of England," whereas I said, "The native press is entirely under the control of wealthy natives, had too fine a scale, and produced prejudicial effects on the native mind, unprepared as it was for the rapid succession of innovations in the shape of reform measures introduced too rapidly and closely on one another." May I beg you to give this explanation in your next issue, and oblige.

Yours faithfully,

ALEX. BRANTLEY, M.D.

June 30th, 1857.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

Thursday, July 14.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Earl Granville laid on the table the correspondence between the Indian Government and the Board of Control which had arrived by the last mail. The facts contained in it were the same as those published in the journals of that morning. The noble earl read the correspondence in full.

CONVEYANCE OF TROOPS TO INDIA.

The Earl of Ellenborough complained that old and slow vessels had been employed for conveying the troops to India; to which Lord Palmerston replied that the vessels were clippers, which are understood to be the fastest sailing boats. It was believed by many that sailing vessels can get on quicker than steamers; but, in deference to the wishes of those who have relatives in India, he had ordered five screw steamers to be taken up for the transport of the remaining soldiers.

FORMAL COMMUNICATION WITH INDIA.

The Earl of Hardwicke asked whether any arrangements have been made for expediting the Indian mails through France. He understood that the course which the French Government took was this: they sorted their own letters first, and until that was done, they did not allow the English bags to leave the post-office doors. The consequence was, that the English mails were detained at Marseilles for the space of twelve or fourteen hours, when, under a different arrangement, they might be at once forwarded. The Duke of Argyll admitted the importance of the question, and said he had taken some trouble to inform himself of the facts respecting the arrival of the Indian mail for the last six months. He was glad to say that the noble lord had overstated the case, for in no instance during that time had there been a delay of more than twelve hours. In February, the French Government made a special arrangement, which was of a satisfactory character. They despatched only two mails from Marseilles; but, in case the Indian mail arrived within two hours after the departure of the morning mail, English letters would be forwarded by express train. The French Government, however, refused to forward mails by express train at night, lest any accident should occur. He might mention, that on the arrival of the mail on the 10th of June—a very important one—it was at once forwarded by express train.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THE INDIAN DESPATCHES.

Mr. Disraeli called attention to the full despatches just received from India, and wished to know when the Government would appoint a night for the discussion of the events described in them. Lord Palmerston said that it would be for Mr. Disraeli to choose his own time for bringing on his motion, as soon as the papers were submitted, which would be as early as possible. Lord John Russell was anxious to know what the Government intended to do, now that they had received the despatches of the Governor-General. Lord Palmerston stated that the Government had already determined on an amount of reinforcements which exceeded rather than fell short of the amount asked for by the Governor-General in his despatches. The Government felt no alarm, yet they were determined to act so as to meet every contingency. Sir John Walsh inquired whether the late General Anson had given any warning of the existence of disaffection in the Indian army. Mr. Mayles stated that since the mutiny had broken out he had made a special search in the despatches of the late General Anson which had been received by the East-India Company, and he could not find one word of warning up to the very day of the outbreak. Mr. Vernon Smith, in answer to Lord John Manners, made the same statement as far as the Board of Control was concerned. Sir Charles Wood, in answer to Admiral Duncombe, stated that no warning had been given by Sir William Gomm.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Lord Ellenborough again brought before their lordships the prospects of India, and recommended that the Government should at once contract a loan for 5,000,000*l.* to relieve her finances of the burden which the present mutiny, with all its unfortunate consequences, would cast upon them. Earl Granville repeated an assurance he had already given, that the Governor-General has ample funds at his disposal; but he promised that the suggestion should be attended to by the Home Government. He protested against a remark of Lord Ellenborough's implying that the President of the Board of Control did not pay attention to his duties. —To this the Earl of Ellenborough replied that he communicated very extensively with persons connected with India, but never met one of them who had not a thorough distrust of the gentlemen who are now at the head of the Board.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

INDIA.

Sir Charles Napier inquired of the First Lord of the Admiralty if, in the event of the Government deciding to send troops to India by steam, he had one screw ship in commission either at Sheerness, Portsmouth, or Plymouth, fit to carry troops and ready for immediate service. —Sir Charles Wood: "Certainly not; not a single ship in commission is fit to carry troops to China. The ships are calculated for home defence, not for conveyance of troops. They are screw ships of the line." —Mr. Venables inquired whether it was true that the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-western Provinces of India had issued a proclamation offering an amnesty to all the mutineers who might lay down their arms, and that the Governor-General, disapproving of the offer, had recalled it. —Mr. Vernon Smith replied that such a proclamation was issued, and disapproved; and that the Governor-General had rescinded it. He had not heard that Mr. Colvin had been recalled or that he had resigned, and he hoped not; for Mr. Colvin was a valuable officer, and, with this exception, had always acted with decision and prudence.

THE PERSIAN WAR.

Mr. Roebuck moved the following resolutions:—"That the war with Persia was declared, prosecuted, and concluded without information of such transactions being communicated to Parliament; while expensive armaments were equipped without the sanction of a vote of this House. That it is the opinion of this House, that such conduct tends to weaken its just authority, and to dispense with its constitutional control over the finances of the country, and renders it requisite for this House to express its strong reprobation of such a course of proceeding." No doubt, said Mr. Roebuck, it is the prerogative of the Crown to declare war; but the House of Commons is called upon to defray the expenses, and therefore has a right to be heard on the question. The Governor-General of India had declared war while the home Parliament was not sitting; troops were withdrawn to send to the Persian Gulf; and he believed that in consequence of that denuding of our eastern empire, the present revolt had burst out. War was declared and carried out without the sanction of the people's representatives; and in the March of the present year a peace was concluded. The first intimation that Parliament received of the circumstances was the demand to pay the bill. They were now called upon to supply nearly a million of money for that war, and he would say that never had the House of Commons been treated with such contempt. They might lose India through the neglect of the Prime Minister. (Cries of "No, no.") He understood that cry; it was thoroughly English. What it meant was, that they were able to meet any emergency, and he agreed to that assertion; but they could not deny that the mutiny in India is a great emergency.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer contended that there was no doubt of the power of the Crown to declare war without the sanction of Parliament, or of the right of the Governor-General of India to commence hostilities in the East. No notice had been given to the House of the former expedition to Beshire and Karak. Mr. Roebuck, therefore, had no ground for maintaining that an irregularity had been committed or a right offered to Parliament. It was also incorrect to assert that the withdrawal of troops from India to the Persian Gulf had led to the present state of things in India. No disaffection had appeared in Bombay or Madras, the presidencies nearest to Persia. If the native troops had been hostile to the British Government at the time of the war, they would have had an opportunity of showing it; but, on the contrary, they had fought bravely against the Persians. As to the disaffection in India, there was little doubt that it would very shortly be crushed. —Mr. Nichol attributed the mutiny to the employment of high castes in the army, and to the paucity of officers. —Mr. Henry Baillie would support the motion, though grieved to do anything which might embarrass the Government. —Viscount Bury would, for that reason, oppose the motion, though disapproving of the Persian war. —Mr. Danby Seymour also opposed the motion, and defended the war. —Mr. Willoughby thought the present was not the time for arraigning the Government. —Sir W. F. Williams observed that, within his personal knowledge, the designs of Russia upon India were the theme of conversation throughout the East. Under these circumstances, the war with Persia was politic and necessary. If the finger of Russia was visible at Herat, that of England was seen at Moham-merah.

Lord John Russell, while admitting that the House had been a consenting party to the war, could not acquit the Government of all blame, as they had withheld the production of papers until after the ratification of the peace. Mr. Roebuck's resolutions, however, were too strong, and exceeded the requirements of the case. He himself believed that as good terms might have been obtained before the commencement of hostilities, and that our wisest policy was to conciliate Persia.

Mr. Wellesley agreed with the last speaker as regarded the policy of the war; but thought the Government was not justified in involving the country in the expenses of a war without previously consulting the legislative body. However, he should vote against the motion. —Col. Sykes approved of the conduct of the Government in maintaining the independence of Herat. —Mr. Vernon Smith denied that it was the duty of a minister of the Crown to consult Parliament before declaring war or peace. It was untrue that the same terms could have been obtained at Constantinople, for the negotiation was broken off by Ferak Khan. —Mr. Gladstone disapproved of the Persian war; but the question rather referred to the constitutional power of the Crown to make peace or war. He contended that the vast and powerful machinery of the Indian Government ought not to be employed as if independent of the authority of Parliament. He did not wish to censure the Government, but thought the House was bound to notice the course that had been taken.

Lord Palmerston asserted the constitutional privilege of the Ministry to declare war or conclude peace; but admitted that no time should be lost in consulting Parliament with their intentions. In the present instance it would have been incorrect to have called the House together for that purpose. Mr. Roebuck's resolutions were un-English. The war was a just and necessary war, for the conduct of which the Government was entitled to praise rather than to censure.

Mr. Disraeli vindicated Mr. Roebuck from the personal abuse that had been heaped upon him, and considered that his resolutions embodied an important constitutional principle; but his conclusions were too sweeping, and, for that reason, he must vote against him.

The House then divided, when there appeared:—

INDIA.

Sir E. Perry gave notice that on an early day he would move that the facts disclosed by recent events in India, the embarrassed state of its finances, the maladministration of justice in its provincial courts, and the innumerable ties which make our Indian possessions an integral portion of the British empire, render it expedient that the government of that country should be transferred in name, as well as in fact, from the East-India Company to the responsible ministers of the Crown. (Hear.)

CONVEYANCE OF TROOPS TO INDIA.

Admiral Dacomb called the attention of the First Lord of the Admiralty to the policy of reconsidering the determination announced by him not to employ any of the screw line-of-battle ships in conveying a portion of the troops about to be sent to India.

Mr. Bentinck, referring to former answers of Sir C. Wood and Lord Palmerston, observed that by their admissions the country was left in a defenceless state by sea and land.

Sir C. Wood remarked that the state of the defences of the country by land and sea was a question of too great importance to be raised incidentally, and, in reply to Admiral Dacomb, he said the Admiralty had arrived at their conclusion not without due consideration, and he did not think that a reconsideration of the subject would alter their determination, the grounds of which he stated very fully, entering into many details.

ARTILLERY FOR INDIA.

In reply to an inquiry by Colonel North,—

Sir J. Ramsden said it was intended to send out to India six companies of foot artillery and two troops of horse artillery. They were not to take out either guns or ammunition, as the arsenals of India were amply supplied, and it was desirable that the men should be sent out as speedily as possible, without the delay which would be caused by sending out guns and ammunition with them. With regard to the latter portion of the hon. and gallant gentleman's question, it referred to a matter of military organization, respecting which he hoped the inquiry would not be pressed.

SUEZ CANAL.

In answer to Mr. Griffiths,—

Lord Palmerston, repeated what he had stated on a former evening regarding the scheme in question, that it was physically impracticable, except at an enormous cost, and that it was highly objectionable in a political point of view with reference to the security of our Indian possessions and our settled policy to prevent the separation of Egypt from Turkey.

Mr. R. Stephenson was of opinion, upon scientific and engineering grounds, that the scheme was undesirable.

RAILWAYS IN INDIA.

Mr. Watkins introduced a motion to the effect that the state of railways in India endangered the military occupation of India, and the want of railways retarded the development of the resources of that part of our dominions. The hon. member went on to advocate the interference and support of Government to the establishment of a complete system of railways in India.

Mr. V. Smith contended that Government had done all in its power, and could do no more consistent with the principle of not interfering with private enterprise.

After some further discussion, in which Mr. Crawford, Mr. Gilpin, Colonel Sykes, Mr. Ayrton, Sir H. Willoughby, and other members took part, the motion was negatived without a division.

THE PERSIAN WAR.

The House went into Committee of Supply.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer moved a vote of 500,000*l.* for the expenses of the Persian war, and explained the necessity of asking for a subsequent vote of 400,000*l.* for the extraordinary expenses of the China war. But as a portion of the troops intended for China had been ordered to India, a considerable amount of the expense would fall on the Indian Government. Sir Charles Wood, in addition, would have to ask for a supplementary vote of about 98,000*l.* for the navy; therefore the whole vote for this year would be about 1,000,000*l.* He might possibly have to ask for another vote of 300,000*l.* or 400,000*l.* in consequence of losses which had occurred in India.

Mr. Walpole advised Government not to confine itself to too narrow a margin. It might be necessary to provide for expenses at present unforeseen.

A long discussion followed, in which Sir Erskine Perry, Sir E. Colebrooke, Sir Henry Willoughby, and Mr. Ayrton took part.

Mr. Gladstone, in speaking of the Chinese vote, mentioned that while the defence of that war was made to rest upon the assertion that the British flag was flying from the lorcha Arrow, he had recently received reliable information that such was not the case.

Mr. R. D. Mangles complained that the House appeared indisposed to do an act of simple justice to the East-India Company, by paying them the 500,000*l.* they had advanced for the expenses of the war. The Company had lent the money without interest, and all they wanted was the return of their capital, and he hoped they might get it.

In answer to an inquiry by Lord J. Russell,—

Lord Palmerston indicated the course intended to be pursued in China; namely, in the first place, to open negotiations at Peking, in order to obtain from the Emperor of China redress and satisfaction, not resorting to hostilities till they were unavoidable.

Sir C. Wood said he had a letter within the last fortnight from Sir M. Seymour, which stated that it was perfectly untrue that the admiral ever bombarded the town of Canton, nor had a single shell been thrown against any property there.

The resolution was at length agreed to.

The next resolution, granting 400,000*l.* for the expense of the naval and military operations in China, was agreed to after a short discussion.

Monday, July 20.

DEFENCES OF THE COUNTRY.

Mr. Bentinck having called attention to the naval and military deficiencies of the country,

Lord Palmerston said, as far as regarded the defences of the country and the state of Europe, there was no reason for calling upon Parliament for a greater amount of force than had been voted; but if an emergency should arise, an application could be made to Parliament. It was true that a portion of the force had been required in India; but, to fill up the gap, recruiting had been ordered, which would go on without requiring any assistance from Parliament. To have recourse to the militia would be a very expensive mode of recruiting for the line; Government had no power to embody the militia, except in certain exigencies, without the sanction of Parliament. In reply to Lord Van Tempest, thenoble lord stated that the amount of force either embarked or under orders for India was about 20,000 men, partly recruits for the European corps in the service of the Company, partly infantry of the line, partly cavalry, and about 1,000 artillery. If it should be found necessary to send further reinforcements, the Government would apply to Parliament.

THE CHINA WAR.

Sir J. Pakington asked the Government to give some further explanation as to our unfortunate quarrel with China. He wished, likewise, for more explicit information with respect to the diversion of the troops destined for China to India, not being able to understand, he said, whether the Government had distinctly authorized this diversion. He was gradually led to discuss at some length the merits of the Chinese quarrel, and contended that the House ought to know what were the intentions of the Government with reference to this quarrel, and what was the force which they designed to employ in carrying them into execution.

Sir C. Wood, in reply, gave a narrative of operations, in which he justified the conduct of the British authorities in China, defending Sir M. Seymour against the charge of wantonly bombarding the peaceable parts of Canton. The intentions of the Government, he observed, had been already explained by Lord Palmerston; namely, that Lord Elgin had been instructed to open negotiations direct with Peking. A force of 5,000 troops had been sent out to China, as well as gunboats; but as a greater necessity arose for the employment of the troops in India, the whole of them were diverted from China thither, part by Lord Elgin's authority, and part by orders forwarded from home. If any hostilities should take place in China, it would be at Canton alone; in every other part of China, we were on the best possible terms with the authorities and the people.

OFFICERS ORDERED TO REJOIN THE ARMY IN INDIA.

Mr. Noel asked the Under-Secretary for War whether the Government will give to those of her Majesty's officers who are ordered to rejoin their regiments in India before their expiration of leave, on account of the mutiny in that country, a free passage, or whether they will have to return there at their own expense.

Sir J. Ramsden.—When the hon. gentleman put this question to me on a former occasion, I said that the matter was under consideration. I am now happy to be able to state that the Court of Directors of the East-India Company have announced their intention to defray the expenses of the passage of these officers to India, in consideration of the inconvenience and urgent nature of their case.

THE PERSIAN WAR.

The House having gone into a Committee of Supply,

The Chancellor of the Exchequer moved the supplementary estimate of 400,000*l.* towards reimbursing the East-India Company a moiety of the extraordinary expense of the Persian war.

In the debate which ensued in the committee, a complaint made in the discussion upon Mr. Roebuck's motion was repeated, that information respecting this war had been too long delayed.

The vote was agreed to.

Mr. Wilson, in moving the estimate of 590,000*l.* for adjusting the account with the East-India Company of the expense of the late China war, explained that there was a set-off against the Company amounting to 560,000*l.*; so that by the ultimate adjustment the vote would be reduced eventually to 30,000*l.*

This vote was agreed to.

THE BENGAL ARMY.

Sir J. Ramsden, in reply to a question from General Wyndham, said a report had been sent from the late Sir C. Napier to the Duke of Wellington giving details of great importance to the administration of military government in India, but it would not be desirable to lay it on the table.

Friday, July 24.

CONVEYANCE OF TROOPS TO INDIA.

In reply to various inquiries by Sir C. Napier,

Sir C. Wood said, with regard to the first question of the gallant admiral, as to how many ships had sailed for India, and other particulars, he was not in a position to answer it, as the ships were taken up by the East-India Company, and not by the Admiralty. With reference to the second question, as to how many more vessels were taken up for troops, the vessels sent by the Government were the Simoom, the Transit, and others, the first of which took a regiment 700 strong, and the rest carried altogether from 4,700 to 4,600 troops. It was not intended to commission any ships of war for taking out troops. With respect to the subject of coal, the gallant admiral might be aware that this was an emergency that could not possibly have been foreseen, and nobody could have supposed that in ordinary years the Government would have sent out a quantity of coals beyond what would suffice for the ordinary number of steamers going to India. The Government were now, as fast as they could, sending out coals to the different stations to meet the increased demand; but it would be bad economy and great waste if they were at all times to keep up such a store of coals as would be required to meet every possible emergency.

COMMODORE KEPPEL.—LOSS OF THE RALEIGH FRIGATE.

Lord C. Paget asked was it true that Commodore Keppel had been recalled from his command in the Chinese Sea? Within the last half-hour he had heard that it was not intended to recall Admiral Keppel, provided he were acquitted by court-martial; but he feared that such was not the case, but that the commodore was to be recalled at once. The commodore had greatly distinguished himself on the heights of Sebastopol, and when appointed second in command under Sir M. Seymour on the China station, he proceeded instantly for his destination, and when within sight of the enemy's coast his ship struck on a sunken rock, which was totally unknown, and not marked in any chart. He understood that there was an old Admiralty order, that if a commodore of the second class lost his vessel, he could not hoist his flag on any other vessel. He hoped the Government would break through the rule, or else make him a Commodore of the Red.

Sir G. Grey said there was no imputation cast upon Commodore Keppel for the loss of his vessel; but he must go through the ordeal undergone by every officer, whatever his position might have been, to see that he was blameless for it. He believed Commodore Keppel would not shrink from that inquiry, and that he would come out of it with honour; but he must protest against the House of Commons anticipating the verdict of the court-martial and wanting to break through the regulations that had governed the navy for years past, and from which no officer would wish to depart. He bore testimony to the high character which Commodore Keppel had earned for himself, and had no doubt he would prove he was not blameable for the loss he had sustained.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Lord Clanricarde, in a speech of considerable length, called the attention of the House to the condition of the Indian army, and concluded by moving for copies of the correspondence of the Court of Directors with the Board of Control and with the Governor-General of India, relating to the amount of European forces to be maintained in that country, or relating to the employment of military officers upon political or other civil services.

The Duke of Argyll stated that the papers moved for had been already laid on the table of the Lower House, and would also be laid before their lordships. With regard to the subject in general on which the Marquis of Clanricarde had spoken, the House might be sure that the Government were determined to put down the insurrection with a high hand, and to spare no exertion to maintain our Indian empire.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Mr. Disraeli, in a speech of three hours' duration, recapitulated the various causes that had resulted in the mutiny of the Bengal army, if not in the attention of the entire native population. These causes he arranged under three principal heads; namely, first, the forcible destruction of native authority in India by our Government; second, the disturbance of the settlement of property; third, tampering with the religion of the people. Under the first head he referred to what he termed the new policy of the annexation of states on the ground of the failure of natural heirs, although adoption was sanctioned by the Hindoo law; and he specified particular instances, including those of the well-known Rajah of Satara and the Rajah of Baroda. These violations of the Hindoo law, he observed, shook the confidence not only of princes, but of large and powerful parties. This led him to the second head, and he argued that, as the law of adoption applied to landed proprietors, our new system touched all jagheerders and possessors of enam lands. Inquisitions had also been prosecuted into the titles to landed estates, and he believed that the amount obtained by the Indian Government by the resumption of estates was not less in Bengal alone than 500,000*l.* a year, while in Bombay, he had been assured, the annual amount was 370,000*l.* The Government had further reduced guaranteed pensions by curtailment and conversion into annuities. All these proceedings had, he said, estranged numerous classes from our authority. He now proceeded to the last head—tampering with the religion of the people; and here he hesitated in attributing any part of this cause to missionary efforts. So far from the Hindoo looking with suspicion on the missionary, he was convinced that he was ready to discuss any point of religion. But what the Hindoo did regard with dread and apprehension was the union of missionary enterprise with the power of the Government. That "startling event," the annexation of Oude, had inspired the Mahomedan princes likewise with apprehension, and induced them to make common cause with the Hindoos. The objection to the greased cartridges was merely a pretext for action when the favourable moment had arrived. Regarding the revolt as a national, and military measures were not sufficient, and those hitherto taken by the Government were inadequate; there should be an expedition to the Indus; our force in India should be doubled. But, further, the population of India should be told that there is a future hope; they should be taught at once that the relations between them and their Sovereign, Queen Victoria, would be drawn nearer; and a royal commission should be sent from the Queen to India, to inquire into the grievances of all classes. He concluded by moving for—1. Copy of any minute or despatch addressed to the Governor-General of India by the Commander-in-Chief, the late Major-General, the Hon. G. Anson, dated on or about March, 1856, relative to the state of the Bengal army. 2. Copy of a report on the organization of the Bengal army, drawn up by the late Lieut-General, Sir Charles Napier, and transmitted to Her Majesty the Queen of England, in 1856.

Mr. Vernon Smith questioned the expediency of Mr. Disraeli's proposition at such a juncture. He had predicted the mutiny as a national revolt, but he had admitted no evidence to show that it was owing to national discontent. A native prince had been concerned in it, and there was not a shadow of evidence of any conspiracy among the native princes. As to the disturbance of property, there had been a commission to inquire into enam lands, some of which had been acquired by fraud and corruption; and this, he thought, created a ground of discontent among certain classes. The interference with religion was a source of immense delinquency; and he had no hesitation in saying that it would be the best policy at such a juncture to inquire into the exercise of missionary zeal by our civil and military servants. The annexation of Oude had nothing whatever to do with the mutiny. It was equally incorrect to assert that the Government had received any intimation of the existence of a bad spirit among the native soldiery. It was premature to say what was the real cause of the mutiny; but he thought there must have been some mismanagement at Meerut, and mismanagement at the beginning often led to serious results in such cases. There had been of late years a severance between the men and their officers in the native regiments, and he was sorry to hear that the latter sometimes spoke of the sepoys at their mess as "niggers." The sending a royal commission would, in the first place, supersede the Governor-General, which would be, he thought, one of the most fatal errors that could be committed. Then Mr. Disraeli would connect the name of the Queen with the whole administration; but the present machinery of the Indian Government had been deliberately approved by the Legislature. He thought, however, that it might be advisable, with the sanction and authority of the Governor-General of India, to send out a commission, not to supersede him, but to inquire into various matters, and, among others, the reorganization of the native army, certain points connected with which Mr. Smith indicated as worthy of consideration.

Sir E. Perry eulogized Mr. Disraeli's speech, while Mr. Campbell denounced it as injudicious and unpatriotic. Mr. Whitehead quoted an opinion of Sir C. Napier, that Delhi ought to be defended by 12,000 picked men. Lord John Russell deprecated this discussion in presence of what had rightly been termed an awful calamity. Mr. Disraeli, he observed, had never ventured to say that the great mass of the people of India had suffered under oppression. It appeared to him that we had trusted rather too much to Indian troops, and troops of one particular kind, and have had too large an army. He thought that 50,000 Europeans and 100,000 natives would afford a far better security than our present force. The first matter, however, upon which the House of Commons ought to pronounce an opinion was that the Government ought to be supported; he thought the House ought not to separate without expressing such opinion, and he accordingly moved, by way of amendment, an address to her Majesty, to assure her Majesty that they will support her Majesty in any efforts necessary to suppress the disturbances in India, and in any measures required for the establishment of tranquillity.

Mr. Mangier dwelt upon the universal good-feeling of the princes, landholders, and people of India. In the Punjab, he said, the population were with us to a man. He explained the principle upon which Lord Dalhousie had acted in the matter of adoption, and stated the case of the Rajah of Sattara in some detail.

Mr. Disraeli characterized Lord John Russell's resolution as "one of those dry constitutional platitudes which, in a moment of difficulty, the noble lord the member for the city of London mechanically pulls out of the dusty pigeon-holes of his mind, and shakes in the perplexed face of a baffled House of Commons."

Mr. T. Baring considered Lord John Russell's resolution as statesmanlike and patriotic.—Lord Palmerston then rose, and briefly assured the House that the assumed report from General Anson was unknown to the Government, and therefore could not be produced by them. The report made by Sir C. Napier did exist, but referred almost exclusively to the defence of the North-western frontier. The only passages relative to the Indian army were in its praise.—Mr. Disraeli thereupon expressed himself ready to accept that particular extract, but his motion was negatived without a division, and the amendment proposed by Lord John Russell adopted.

Thursday, July 30th.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Lord Ellenborough called the attention of the Government to the omission of an important proclamation by the Board of East-India Directors, from among the documents recently laid before Parliament bearing on the Indian mutinies. The noble lord then went on to comment on the system of bad government, through clerks and secretaries, rather than by the Governor-General, discovered in those despatches, and concluded by expressing a hope that when confidence in the intentions of the Government was restored in the native mind we might again trust the sepoy regiments.

Lord Granville could not explain the omission of the proclamation. With respect to the noble lord's comments on the Indian system of government, he thought that the conduct of Lord Canning in this trying emergency had been such as to raise him immensely in the estimation of the public.

The Duke of Argyll accused the noble earl of greatly exaggerating the importance and extent of the delay that occurs in official correspondence in India. Lord Canning was a man of business habits, and would permit no unnecessary dilatoriness.

Lord Panmure observed that it was all very well for the noble earl opposite to say that business should be done as rapidly as possible, but business, and especially military business, should be always done in order.

MADRAS RAILWAY COMPANY.

The half-yearly General Meeting of this Company was held at the London Tavern, on Thursday, the 23rd of July, 1857, Major-General Duncan Sim in the chair. The following Report presented to the meeting was taken as read:—

"The Directors continue to receive satisfactory accounts of the state and efficiency of the several departments of the Company's Indian establishments, and of the general progress of the undertaking.

"The opening of the further section of the Railway, between Arcot and Vellore, has been effected, as anticipated in the last Report. A regiment of infantry was carried through from Madras to Vellore in April, and on the 7th of May the line was opened for general traffic between these points, a distance of about 81 miles. The further opening to Goriattum will no doubt be accomplished before the end of the year, making altogether a distance of nearly one hundred miles of railway.

"Throughout the remaining portions of the south-west line the works are proceeding actively, though their progress has been to some extent impeded by the unusual severity and duration of the last monsoon, and the extensive prevalence of cholera and fever in some districts. Considerable lengths on this part of the line are now ready for the permanent way, and the only obstacle to farther opening of it for traffic at an early date may probably be the bridges, the construction of which has been the most interfered with by the causes mentioned. To assist in the completion of the western sections of the line two locomotive engines have lately been shipped from hence to the Malabar coast.

"The surveys for the north-western line have not yet been completed.

"The progress of the traffic on the railway between Madras and Arcot, of which the results of the first five months were given in the previous Report, may be seen in the following statement of the receipts and expenditure quarterly, from the date of opening to the end of March last.

Balance, profit,	Rs. 97,357 9 11

"The working expenses for the nine months have been 50.9 per cent. of the receipts, and the balance applicable to the repayment of interest advanced by the East-India Company amounted to Rs. 97,357 9 11 for the same period.

"The falling off in the goods traffic in the last of those quarters is due to the effect of the rains on the rivers and communications in the interior, and the small amount of produce coming down to Madras at that season. No great proportion of the salt traffic has yet found its way to the line, the arrangements for the purpose being still imperfect, but the quantity conveyed is steadily increasing.

"The traffic return for the quarter ending 30th ultimo is yet necessarily incomplete; but it is satisfactory to observe, that to the 6th June, the latest return received, the receipts had reached to Rs. 58,000, which, calculating on the average of the latest three weeks, would bring the amount for the entire quarter above Rs. 80,000.

"In considering these results it is to be borne in mind that, during the period embraced in the returns, the passenger trains on the railway have been restricted to one running daily each way, starting at inconvenient hours; that the stations generally have had no proper access to the towns or main roads of the country; that the line had not extended far enough into the interior to attract it to a large portion of the existing road traffic, or been at work long enough to overcome the opposition of old established systems of carriage; and that three-fourths of the passengers have been carried at a fare of a halfpenny per mile, and three-fourths of the goods at less than a penny a mile per ton. The Board agree in the opinion expressed by their traffic manager, that the increase which has taken place under such circumstances promises well for the future under a better state of things.

"In pursuance of the desire expressed by the last general meeting, the Board strenuously urged on the Court of Directors of the East-India Company the removal of the injurious restrictions imposed by the Madras Government on the working of the railway, and the modification of the tariff; and in reply received assurances that the opinions of the hon. Court on these subjects coincided with theirs, and had been communicated to the local government. The Board, under these circumstances, entertain the hope that no long time will now elapse before effect is given to their representations. A revised tariff of charges and table of trains have been prepared by the traffic manager, and submitted for the approval of the Government, with a view to their introduction from the first of this month. The rates and fares thus proposed, though not altogether such as, in the opinion of that officer or of the Board, are desirable as permanent rates, are probably as good as can in the actual state of things be adopted for the time, and it is hoped that as such they may be sanctioned by the Government.

"The Board, since their last Report, have appointed John Hawkshaw, Esq., to be their consulting engineer, in the room of the late Mr. Rendel.

"The term of Mr. Bruce's engagement as chief engineer of the railway having expired, and the state of his health unfortunately rendering him not desirous to return to India, the Board have appointed Mr. John Mortimer Heppel as his successor, and that gentleman proceeded by the steamer of the 4th of June last to assume charge of his duties accordingly. The Board could not lose without regret the services of so able and zealous an officer as Mr. Bruce, whose merits they have in previous reports had frequent occasion to acknowledge. The duties of chief engineer, which temporarily devolved on Mr. Beattie, the senior assistant, have been conducted by him in a very creditable manner.

"The Board, in concluding this report, have great pleasure in referring to the annexed extracts from orders conveying the warm acknowledgments of the government and commander-in-chief at Madras to Mr. Fletcher and other officers of his department for their zealous and useful services to the sick of her majesty's 43rd regiment, on the occasion of that regiment suffering so severely from cholera on its way to the Presidency in March last. The shareholders will agree with the directors in considering that these gentlemen have done themselves much honour by their active and humane exertions on that distressing occasion.

"By order of the Board,

"JAMES WALKER,

"Managing Director."

The Chairman.—The report being taken as read, my duty now is to move that it be adopted. But, before I do so, perhaps you will expect to receive from me a little more information respecting our progress. You are aware that the line was opened in July, 1856, from Madras to Arcot, a distance of sixty-five miles. It has been worked uninterruptedly since then, during a long and severe monsoon; notwithstanding which the line has not suffered more than is usual in this country. Another portion of the line was opened on the 7th May last, from Arcot to Vellore, making a distance of eighty-one miles, and a further portion, to Goriatum, will no doubt be opened soon; so that before the termination of this year 100 miles will be opened for traffic. But this gives a very imperfect idea of what has been done in the construction of the railway. In addition to the eighty-one miles to Vellore, the whole line to Beypoor is in the way of construction; several portions of it being complete, and ready for the permanent way. I think we may safely calculate that the whole line will be completed from coast to coast, from Madras to Beypoor, in the course of the year 1859. The report contains a statement of the traffic for the first nine months since the opening of the line, and an estimate of what the traffic will be for the next quarter. For the quarter ending the 30th September, 1856, the total receipts were Rs. 56,685; for the quarter ending the 31st December, Rs. 71,177; and for the quarter ending the 31st March, 1857, Rs. 70,496. It is estimated that the receipts for the quarter ending the 30th ultimo will amount to Rs. 80,000. Perhaps this increase may not be considered quite so great as might have been expected; but there are many reasons to account for this. In the first place the line is not extended far enough into the interior to command a great part of the traffic of the country. A large portion of the goods are brought from distances of from 150 miles to 300 miles, the principal and most difficult part of the journey being before arriving at Arcot, which is only 65 miles from Madras, over a comparatively good road. It has been the interest of the native carriers to preserve that route, in order to secure to themselves the carriage of goods back into the interior. It must also be borne in mind that the old established habits and customs of a country are with difficulty superseded by new ones, and perhaps there are no people in the world more tenacious of their ancient customs than the people of India. The effect of the warm competition going on between the native carriers and the railway has been to reduce their tariff 40 per cent. It is impossible, however, that this state of things can continue much longer. The many advantages which the railway offers must, before long, prevail; and I think there is no doubt that, at no very distant period, our railway will command almost all the traffic of that part of India. Another circumstance which has greatly interfered with the success of our railway is the inconvenient hours at which the trains have been made to start from Madras and Arcot. We are also of opinion that the fares have been reduced too low. But that is a question which is open to a diversity of opinion. We proposed a higher rate of fares, which was approved by the Court of Directors, and sent out by them to the Madras Government, but that Government thought it right to adopt a lower rate; and in support of their opinion on this subject, they point to the large amount of traffic that is still carried by the old system. These two grievances of the interference with the working of the railway, and the lowness of the fares, were noticed at the last half-yearly meeting, and a resolution was passed disapproving very much of the interference of the local governments of India in regulating the traffic-rates and the running of trains, and requiring the directors to continue their efforts to have these objections removed. We have done so, and I believe I may state with confidence that new instructions are about to be sent to India, directing the Madras Government to discontinue the grievances of which we have complained; and laying down the principle that, while the railway is being constructed and the expenditure is going on, the local government is expected, not only for its own interest, but also for the interest of the proprietors of the railway, to exercise a vigilant control and supervision over that expenditure. But when the railway is once completed, its working management is to be left to the railway officials, and only a general supervision is to be exercised by the local government, to prevent anything being done that is manifestly wrong. If these instructions be fully carried out, and I have no reason to doubt that they will be, I then think we shall have no just reason to complain, and I have no doubt we shall soon see the traffic of the railway very much increased.

Mr. Arbutnot.—The chairman having entered so fully into the merits of the report, I have but little more to do than to second the motion, that the report be received and adopted. With regard to the progress of the works, I observe that it has been stated elsewhere that our progress is slow, and that we have only completed a certain portion of the line, not exceeding eighty miles, to Vellore; but as the chairman has stated (and it ought to be circulated as a fact), the whole line of 400 miles is under process of construction. And I may add that the materials for nearly the whole extent of the line have been shipped from this country. The only probable cause of delay will be the construction of the bridges. But the engineer's attention has been especially directed to that point, and we have every hope that the 400 odd miles may be completed next year, or in a couple of years at all events. I do not think that in any part of the world, when we consider the nature of the locality and the climate, a work of such magnitude has been completed in a less period of time. I do not therefore think that the charge respecting the slowness of our progress is at all deserved. The present state of India renders it of the utmost importance that the railway undertakings in that country should be carried on as energetically as possible, and the proprietors may feel assured that there will be no deficiency in that respect on the part of their directors.

Mr. Lewin.—I see no objection to the adoption of the Report, or that our confidence in the directors should in any degree be abated. But the Report in one respect is not satisfactory, because it does not show that any attention has been paid to the resolution which was passed at the last half-yearly meeting. The chairman is only able to state that he believes something will be done. It is an unfortunate circumstance that Government should be mixed up in these matters; because we cannot have the correspondence which would enable us to see whether our directors have done their duty. I have not the slightest doubt but that they have done their duty. But it is not very satisfactory that, after six months have elapsed, we should find ourselves in the same position in which we stood when the resolution to which I have referred was adopted. With regard to the restriction of running trains, it certainly does seem a monstrous thing that a railway company should be restricted as to the number of trains they should run in a day; or that parties going to a particular place should not be able to return the same day. That is a barrier to all progress; it strikes at the very basis of success in railway undertakings, the great object of which is to enable a man to complete his work in the shortest possible time.

Dr. Beattie.—I think the financial statement made by the chairman is anything but satisfactory. The income derived from the working of the railway as exhibited in the report is not what we might have expected. If the Court of Directors have acted in conformity with the request of our Board and the resolution passed at the last meeting, then I must say that the local Government at Madras has had that resolution communicated to them in such a lukewarm manner that they have been able to evade it: for their interference still goes on; and so long as such interference and want of harmony continue to exist, it is impossible that the proprietors can derive that advantage from their railway that they had reason to expect. I am disappointed, like Mr. Lewin, that the chairman is only able to say that he believes the Court of Directors are now acting upon our suggestion and advice. I feel almost disposed to say, that if matters go on as they have hitherto been going on, it would be better to dispense with the charge of a Board of Directors, and to put our affairs altogether under the management of the government, as they now in reality are. Unless we continue to press upon the Board, and also upon the Court of Directors, we shall never get rid of the interference of Colonel Pears, the government military engineer. Why should he control our railway, while we are able to send out such men as Mr. Fletcher, who has proved himself a man of undoubted ability, and such a man as Mr. Bruce, who has had several years experience of Indian railways? But that gentleman has come home, and, notwithstanding the claim of the gentleman who has been acting as his locum tenens, he has been succeeded by Mr. Hoppell, who will go out to India not at all acquainted with the country, and who for the first seven or eight months after his arrival will be incompetent to do his duty: whereas, the gentleman who has been acting for Mr. Bruce, and who was educated under one of the first engineers in Edinburgh, and who has had the experience of constructing thirty or forty miles of railway in India, besides having acted for three or four years under Mr. Bruce, is totally passed by. Men must be very much depressed when they find that after all their exertions, there is no promotion for them.

Mr. Norton.—As long as the Madras Government persists in its interference with our affairs, and until that interference shall be altogether overthrown, and the determination of the Court of Directors, which has been already expressed, to support the views of the Board, shall be effectually carried out, I think it will be utterly impossible for the shareholders to derive any profits from their undertaking. Every instance of interference on the part of the local government is not only a violation of our interest, but also of our rights. I do not agree with the hon. proprietor who has expressed his dissatisfaction with the conduct of the Board. On the contrary, I must appeal to you whether, after a fair consideration of the result of their exertions, our Board has not faithfully and zealously performed their duty by us; and I must also give the Court of Directors credit for having acted most honourably, and having done what it became them to do, in giving effect to our resolution. You will find by the Report, that, upon the resolution being communicated to the Court of Directors, this Board received an assurance that the opinions of the Honourable Court on this subject coincided with theirs, and that those opinions had been communicated to the local government at Madras. What more can we expect? The Court of Directors coincide with us in principle; and they tell us that they have communicated with the local government on the subject. While thanking the chairman for what he has already communicated to us, I think it would be as well if a little more were stated; because, if the fact be as I suspect it is, that the local government, by their own means and way of transacting business, have—not directly disobeyed or refused to comply with the orders of the Court of Directors—but have, somehow or other, evaded those orders, why then I say that they have done so at our cost, and that every difficulty has been thrown in our way by an infraction of the orders of the Court of Directors, which it is our right and monetary interest to have fully carried out. The battle is at present carried on by the local government against this Company and the Court of Directors; and the question is, whether we shall have fair profits, or whether the local government, by a narrow policy, shall be suffered to sacrifice the proprietors for the sole benefit of the public—whether the railway shall be carried on by us at a loss, or whether it shall be worked on a principle which shall equally benefit the public and ourselves. The Madras Government say that the whole benefit should be given to the public; but we say that we ought to have 10 per cent. before the Government interferes. A question was put at the last meeting, whether, in point of law, this interference was sound, and I think it was clearly shown at that time, by Mr. Freshfield, that it was an absolute breach of the law; and that it was against common sense to suppose that the local government of Madras should understand our business better than ourselves, or that they should be able to manage it more profitably and better than we can. It is, I repeat, preposterous that they should be suffered to insist upon their rates in preference to the rates fixed upon by ourselves. When we shall have brought our profits up to 10 per cent., then it may be proper that the local government should have the right of interference for the benefit of the public. But is that a reason why we should be prevented from getting 10 per cent? It is a contradiction in terms. It is a violation of our rights, as well as of our interests; and we ought never to cease until we have carried out the views we have already expressed by resolution. If Mr. Fletcher's rates of traffic had been adopted, I have not the least doubt that we should have been thousands of pounds in pocket. We are not to sacrifice ourselves merely to suit the mistaken and narrow notions of the Madras Government. I return my thanks to the Board for the efficiency and zeal with which they have taken up this subject. I only trust that their efforts will be attended with success, that we shall hear a more satisfactory account of the course taken by the Local Government, and that their present system will be brought to an end.

The Chairman.—Before replying to Mr. Norton, I will make some remarks as to the returns. It is supposed that the returns are so small in consequence of the lowness of the tariff; but that is not altogether the case. The smallness of the returns is not merely because the tariff is low, but because we are carrying only a small portion of the traffic of the country. Most certainly the low charges have not had the effect of inducing the natives to make full use of our railway. I omitted to mention that these returns have been realized on the low rates of fare which have been in use for the first year. A revised tariff of charges and table of trains have now been prepared by the traffic manager, and submitted for the approval of the Government, and we hope that these new rates and charges will have come into operation on the first of this month. That I hope will remove much of the objection entertained by Mr. Norton.

Mr. Lewin.—Have you a copy of any despatch going out to India?

The Chairman.—I am informed that a despatch is about to be sent to the Madras Government, which has received the approval of the Court of Directors and the Board of Control, but I have not seen the despatch.

Mr. Lewin.—I think we ought to know what has passed between our Board and the Court of Directors on this subject.

The Chairman.—The correspondence is a long one, and I think you may rely on what I state, that we have used every endeavour to carry out the views of the proprietors, and that those endeavours are likely to prove successful. We have lately asked again that instructions should be sent out to the Madras Government to leave the working of the railway in the hands of the railway company's officers.

Mr. Lewin.—Cannot that letter be produced?

Mr. Arbuthnot.—I think it would be satisfactory to the meeting to hear the letter written by our managing director read, and the answer which has been received from the Court of Directors.

The Chairman.—The last letter which we addressed to the Court of Directors was in these terms:—

No. 544.

“ Madras Railway Company, 33, New Broad-street,
11th June, 1857.

“ Sir,—The Board have learned with extreme disappointment from their agent at Madras, that the Government have again refused to permit him to run mixed trains of goods and passengers on the railway, and to increase the speed of goods' trains to fifteen miles an hour from the inconveniently slow rate of ten miles, at which they have hitherto been compelled to travel. The agent's renewed application was made in pursuance of the Board's letter, No. 105, para. 23, of which a copy is subjoined for reference, together with copies of the correspondence that followed, in which the Government express their intention of referring the question for decision here. The Honourable Court will not fail to observe, that no reason whatever is assigned in Colonel Pears's letter for refusing to allow of the running of mixed trains; while they will rate at their proper value the grounds of objection stated by that officer to the running of goods' trains on a nearly level line of railway at fifteen miles an hour, a speed shown by the traffic manager and locomotive superintendent to be necessary both for economical working of the traffic and the health of the enginemmen.

“ It is, however, a matter of deep concern to this company, that all which has been written and done on this side for securing to its officers the freedom of action in working the line which is essential to its success, should thus have led to no practical result.

“ The Board have before expressed to the Honourable Court their views as to the injury and loss which are entailed on their proprietors by these acts of the Madras Government, and they have only now to add their earnest hope, that the reply to this reference may be such as will at last put an end to any further interference, by the Government, of this injurious and uncalled-for nature.—I am, sir, your obedient servant,

(Signed) "JAMES WALKER,
"Managing Director.

"Sir James C. Melvill, K.C.B."

I do not know that we could have written in stronger terms. This is the answer which the Board have received to that letter.

"East India House, 18 July, 1857.

"Sir,—I have laid before the Court of Directors of the East India Company, your letter, No. 544, dated the 11th ultimo, again bringing to their notice the question of running mixed trains, to which it appears the Government of Madras still entertain objections.

"The court have not yet received any communication from that Government upon the proceedings to which you refer, but they hope that letters they have addressed to them very recently, will have the effect of inducing them to leave the management of the railway traffic more in the hands of the railway company's officers. I am, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

(Signed) JAMES C. MELVILL.

"James Walker, Esq."

I think, therefore, the proprietors will consider that things are going on well, and have assumed a more satisfactory and promising character.

Dr. Beattie.—Certainly from what the chairman has stated, matters have assumed a more satisfactory character; but I wish now to be informed what is intended to be done, and whether there is any hope that Colonel Pears is coming to England? I should like also to ask whether the Board has sanctioned the introduction of running trains on a Sunday?

The Chairman.—We have concurred with the government in the restrictions placed by them on the running of excursion trains on a Sunday. There is no objection to running special and express trains on a Sunday.

Mr. Lewin.—I cannot see why running excursion trains on Sundays should not be permitted to take place in India, as it is permitted in this country; and why we might not avail ourselves of that source of profit in India which has been the salvation of many railways here. I should like to know what are the grounds of objection to your running those trains, because, if they are merely religious grounds, I shall make a motion on the subject.

The Chairman.—Excursion trains are not allowed to run on Sunday, because it is a day of rest to our men, who are hard-worked during the whole week, and granting one day's rest to them surely is not unreasonable. There is, however, a train which runs every Sunday, and it may be extended to any length, and thousands of people may go by it if they please. Special trains are allowed to run on a Sunday whenever required.

A Shareholder asked whether any more calls would have to be paid in the course of the present half-year, and whether payment of calls in advance would be received from the 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. shareholders?

The Chairman.—We have in hand a balance of £360,000, after allowing for expenditure to this date in India; so that we are not in want of money at present. The holders of the 5 per cent. shares have not had liberty to pay in advance, because we should be taking up a larger amount of capital than we could make use of, and that would be injurious to the company. The next call will probably be on the 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. shares, but none will be made before next October.

The Shareholder.—Why should the 5 per cent. shareholders be refused leave to pay up? It was very hard that the holders of the 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. shares should be called on to pay up, instead of taking the money of the 5 per cent. shareholders who are desirous of paying in advance.

The Chairman.—When more money is wanted your observations will be taken into consideration, and, as far as possible, will be attended to.

Mr. G. Norton.—It is stated in the report, that one reason why the traffic is not fully developed is, that the stations generally have had no proper access to the towns or main roads of the country. Is this the fact?

The Chairman.—I have no doubt it is: a representation has been made to the Government on the subject. The line does not follow the old established road. The stations are a little distance from it, and cross-roads are required. The question is whether we or the Government ought to make them. We contend that the Government ought to make them.

The report was then received and unanimously adopted.

Mr. Lewin.—I will now read the words of the motion I intend to propose—namely, "That the prohibition of excursion trains on the Sunday is inadvisable, and not rendered necessary by the demands of Christianity." We are a commercial company, and we have agents in India to conduct our commercial enterprise; and when we stop their proceedings on the Sunday, on the ground of religion, I think we go beyond our province. I think that to lay down a rule for the Hindoos, and to say that they shall not have the pleasures and advantages of the railways on the Sunday which their religion sanctions, is going beyond the justice of the case.

Mr. Lee Wright.—I beg to second the motion. I consider that the hands of the Company ought not to be tied in this respect. If it is acceptable to the people of the different races in the districts through which the line passes that these trains should run on a Sunday, I think it would be monstrous injustice to deprive them of the means of taking air, exercise, and enjoying the benefits of locomotion. One effect of the extension of our traffic will be to take all other modes of conveyance off the roads. The chairman has said that we ought to give one day's rest in the week to the workmen on the line. I grant that there is a good deal of reason in that argument, but it is idle to suppose that all employment can be stopped on a Sunday. If by the employment of a few more men we can give the benefit of locomotion to a large number, we shall be doing a positive good to society. I believe that the excursion trains in this country afford a large amount of good, by furnishing means of recreation to the people.

A discussion ensued, in which several proprietors expressed themselves adverse to the proposition, and deprecated the introduction of religious controversy into the proceedings of the meeting.

Mr. Lewin denied that he had introduced the religious element into the discussion. It was introduced by those who prohibited trains on a Sunday. He declined to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Norton moved, as an amendment, "that the motion be not now put," which being submitted to the meeting was carried, there being only two hands held up against it; consequently Mr. Lewin's motion was not put to the meeting.

A vote of thanks to the chairman and directors was then moved by Mr. Lewin, seconded by Mr. Lee Wright, and carried unanimously.

TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION WITH INDIA.

The following letter has been sent at his request to Lord Palmerston, as embodying the views of a deputation which waited upon him some days since:—

"My Lord,—I have the honour, by your Lordship's desire, to submit in writing the representation which we were permitted to make at a personal conference this morning relative to the establishment of an electric telegraphic communication between England, India, and China, to be eventually extended to Australia.

"The association represented by the deputation was the first to propound the line of telegraph to India by the Red Sea; but, although the proposal was favourably entertained at the India House, it did not receive such encouragement from the Treasury as to induce them to carry it out, and they therefore contented themselves with deputing an agent to Constantinople to obtain the necessary firmans.

"While the agent was prosecuting the negotiation, another project was started, by another party, for the establishment of a telegraphic line to India, down the valley of the Euphrates, and met with favour at the Treasury. A conditional promise was made of a subvention of 12,000*l.* a year, and the Hon. the Court of Directors likewise aided the scheme by engaging to continue the line at their own expense, by laying a submarine cable from the head of the Persian Gulf to Kurrachee.

"The agent returned at the beginning of the present year from Constantinople with all the concessions necessary for the construction of the line from Alexandria to India, but the association found an insuperable obstacle in their path in the intermediate subvention of the Euphrates line. If within the last twelve months since this subvention was conceded any substantive progress had been made in that line, or if the difficulties of construction had been proved of less amount, the necessity of the present application might in reason have been questioned; but no such progress appears to have been made, and no opposing obstacle removed, while the necessity of immediate telegraphic communication has been rendered painfully apparent by the late disastrous tidings from our Eastern empire.

"The Euphrates Valley line must necessarily pass through nearly 1,000 miles of country inhabited by barbarous tribes, always at feud with each other, and beyond the control of their nominal rulers. In a communication recently published in the Times, it is stated that the Council of Tazimat, at Constantinople, has refused to sanction a telegraph through that valley, on the ground that the Turkish Government was unable to protect it. At the same time the establishment of a police by foreigners for its maintenance would not be permitted by the Sublime Porte. It has been suggested that some of the influential tribes might be induced to protect it, in consideration of a yearly payment, but a communication with our dependencies and colonies in the east is a matter of too great importance to be left dependent on the caprice or cupidity of savages. There appears, therefore, little, if any, hope that a telegraphic line can be established through Mesopotamia with any chance of permanent security until the projected railway has been completed.

"Under these circumstances the Red Sea Association deem it of importance to the national interests again to submit their plans to her Majesty's Government.

"They have obtained the necessary concessions of the Turkish and Egyptian authorities for the establishment of a telegraph through Egypt and down the Red Sea. They propose now to lay a submarine cable—which will be under their own control, and comparatively free from interruption—from Suez to Aden, with intermediate stations at Cosseir, Juddah, and Camaran; and from Aden to Kurrachee, with three intermediate stations, at Ras Shurnah, the Kooria Moorla Islands, now a British possession, and Ras il Had, in the territory of our ancient ally, the Imaum of Mascat. The line from the Dardanelles to Alexandria, for which a concession has been obtained from the Porte, will be constructed without delay, either by this association singly, or in conjunction with an Austrian company.

"The members of this association are prepared to complete the telegraph from Alexandria to India in a period of from eight to fifteen months from the time when the assistance of Government is secured, and the preliminary arrangements are made. As the distance from Suez to Aden is less than half the distance from Suez to India, the line to Aden might be completed within a very short period, and that port is only a week's sail from Bombay. The cost of the line is estimated at 800,000*l.*; that is, at the rate of 160*l.* per mile upon 5,000 miles. This is considered as the maximum expense, but, as the most heavy item of expenditure consists in the submarine cable, it is not improbable that the experiments now in progress with two different descriptions of cable—the one from England to America, the other from England to Denmark—may issue in reducing the cost below the present estimate.

"The substantial assistance of Government is essential to the commencement of operations, as it would be impossible without a guarantee to raise the necessary capital. The association would, therefore, venture to ask of Her Majesty's Government and of the East-India Company a guarantee of 6 per cent., or 48,000*l.* a year, to commence from the completion of the line and the transmission of the first through message, with the understanding that all Government despatches shall have preference as to time, and be conveyed at the same rate as private messages, and that all receipts, from whatever source, shall be appropriated to satisfy the guarantee, which will cease and determine as soon as the amount has been entirely liquidated.

"The present proposal is made in no spirit of hostility to the Euphrates Valley line, but simply from a conviction that circumstances will not justify the postponement of a telegraphic communication with India till the railway down the Euphrates Valley has been completed, and that the Red Sea line offers the permanent advantages of immediate construction and permanent freedom from interruption; but the establishment of a telegraph by which daily communication can be held with India in a few hours appears to be a matter of such vital importance that even the conjoint encouragement of both lines—that of the Euphrates and that of the Red Sea—may not appear altogether unworthy the consideration of Her Majesty's Government.

"I beg permission to enclose a map, which exhibits the course laid down by this association.

"I have the honour to be, my Lord,

"Your Lordship's faithful and obedient servant,

"J. C. MARSHMAN, Chairman.

"7, Kensington Palace-gardens, July 15."

SCINDE RAILWAY.

A special meeting of this company was held on Friday, at the office, Old Broad-street, Mr. Andrews in the chair.

The solicitor read the heads of "A Bill for authorizing the Scinde Railway Company to extend their operations, and for regulating the capital of the company, and for other purposes." It appeared the bill was intended to enable the company to make arrangements with the Hon. East India Company for the construction of a railway from Mooltan to Lahore and Umritsir, and also for establishing on the river Indus, between Hyderabad and Mooltan, a steam flotilla in connexion with the Scinde and Punjaub railways, and to make further provisions with respect to the Scinde Company, and to authorize the keeping of separate accounts of the capital, and of the receipts, payments, and liabilities of the several undertakings of the company.

The Chairman explained that the first object they had in view was the construction of the Scinde railway from the port of Kurrachee to the Indus, near Hyderabad; the second, the establishment of a steam flotilla to connect the Scinde railway near Hyderabad with Mooltan, a distance of about 570 miles; and the third object was the formation of a railway from Mooltan to Lahore and Umritsir in the Punjaub. The surveys for the latter line were very nearly completed, and he had no doubt of the successful accomplishment of those important works. The Scinde railway would stand upon its own merits, and have its distinct capital and revenue account. The same would be the case with the flotilla on the Indus, and also with the Punjaub railway; but, although the capital and revenue accounts of each of the three concerns would be kept distinct, they would be under one management. He concluded by moving a formal resolution approving the bill, which was seconded and adopted.

A long conversation then ensued as to the advantages of the proposed undertaking, and the proceedings concluded with a vote of thanks to the Chairman.

THE MUTINIES IN INDIA.

On Tuesday the 28th was published an appendix to the papers relative to the mutinies in the East Indies, an abstract of which appeared in The Times of Friday last. The papers in this appendix consist of certain "Enclosures" referred to in the despatches previously noticed, including reports from the local authorities, &c., on the prejudices and feelings of the sepoys about the greased cartridges, and a report of the Special Court of Inquiry assembled at Barrackpore on the 6th of February last. It appears from these papers that the sepoys, according to the "conviction" of Major-General Hearsey, have been "tampered with by designing villains" when on duty in Fort William and Calcutta, it having been frequently noticed by old military residents at the station that, after frequent absences on such detached duty, many of them returned to their lines "with strange ideas and unsettled minds." Who these "designing villains" are, or were, we are not informed. It further appears, from the report of the Inspector-General of Ordnance and Magazines to the Secretary of the Government of India, dated the 29th of January last, that "no extraordinary precaution appears to have been taken (at the practice depôt of Dumdum), to insure the absence of any objectionable fat." "It is certainly to be regretted," adds the inspector, with some simplicity, "that ammunition was not prepared expressly for the practice depôt without any grease at all, but the subject did not occur to me." Enclosure 14 (in No. 3) contains the revelation of a sepoy to Lieutenant Allen, of a plot among four regiments at the Barrackpore station, those regiments being determined to rise, because they were apprehensive of being forced to give up their caste and be made Christians against their will; they intended to burn down and plunder the bungalows at Barrackpore, and next proposed to march on Calcutta and seize Fort William. In short, the storm in India appears to have been preceded by the most unmistakable prognostics. The history of the disbanding of the 19th Native regiment at Barrackpore is fully given; the minute of the Governor-General of India in Council, recording this fact, states that there are many indications that the seeds of insubordination were first sown in some of the regiments quartered at Barrackpore. A copy of the "humble petition" of the "faithful officers and sepoys" of the disbanded regiment is given in the papers before us. This they contended was "their first fault," and they hoped "the Government would be so kind as to pardon it."

THE INDIAN DEBT.

The present state of the Indian question leads to inquiries as to the position in which the various securities connected with that empire—such as India Stock, India Bonds, the territorial debt, &c., relatively stand. The capital represented by India Stock is nominally 6,000,000*l.* The amount of the home bond debt is 3,900,000*l.*, of which, however, a portion is held by the company in reserve. The territorial debt—that is to say, the total of loans contracted in India—is 50,000,000*l.* These three classes of securities constitute the entire public liabilities of the India Company, with the exception of the 4½ and 5 per cent. guarantees, on something less than 20,000,000*l.* of railway shares. The first—namely, India Stock, exists under the following arrangement:—By the Act of 1833, which extinguished the trading powers of the Company, it was stipulated that a dividend of 10½ per cent. per annum on their capital of 6,000,000*l.* should be secured as a first charge on the revenues of India, subject to a power of redemption on the part of the Imperial Government after the 30th of April, 1874, on payment to the proprietors of 200*l.* for each 100*l.* stock. The Imperial Government took upon themselves no liability whatever in the shape of a guarantee, and, therefore, if our rule in India were to cease the holders would have no claim on the British Exchequer. But a collateral security was provided, which, in a partial degree, supplies this deficiency. It was arranged that from the assets of the Company a sum of 2,000,000*l.* should be placed in the hands of the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, to be invested in Government securities, as a security fund, and that the dividends on this should be allowed to accumulate until the total should reach 12,000,000*l.* This process has been going on for twenty-three years, and the aggregate already attained is believed to be over 5,000,000*l.* It was at the same time provided that as the powers of the India Company were by the Act in question continued only to the 30th of April, 1854, the Company might, if their administration should then, or at any period prior to 1874, be brought to a close by the authority of parliament, demand to have their stock paid off at the rate above specified, if they should prefer so to do, instead of availing themselves of the full term allowed. With regard to the Bond debt of 3,900,000*l.*, it rests entirely upon the ordinary resources of the Company. The rate of interest upon it is 4 per cent., and the holders have the power of demanding to be paid off upon one year's notice. As these bonds are now at 15*s.* discount, they would consequently yield 4½ per cent. for the next year to any purchaser who might take them with that view. The territorial debt of 50,000,000*l.* consists of several loans, bearing interest ranging from 3½ to 6 per cent. Four-fifths of the amount are at 4 per cent., and, with the exception of about 3,000,000*l.* or 4,000,000*l.* contracted at Madras and Bombay, the whole belongs to Bengal. These funds have always taken a high rank, but about three years back their prestige was greatly damaged by the local government having effected a reduction of the Five per Cents. to Four per Cents. through representations that the treasury was amply supplied for all future contingencies, when it turned out that they were obliged, within little more than a year from that date, to raise a fresh amount, and to offer 5 per cent. The affair at the time caused great reproach, but the recollection of it was gradually wearing away; and just before the breaking out of the existing mutiny, two-thirds of a new loan for 3,000,000*l.* had been readily subscribed.

GENERAL SIR CHARLES NAPIER'S OPINIONS REGARDING THE INDIAN ARMY.

The following extracts are copied from the Times, and contain the sum of Sir Charles Napier's opinions regarding the Indian army. Nothing important has been omitted. Whether sound or not, his views are at all events suggestive; and supposing his representations to be correct, it is difficult to understand how such a state of things should have been so long permitted.

INDIAN POLITICAL SYSTEM.

"The Indian system seems to be the crushing of the native plebeian and supporting the aristocrat, who reason and facts tell us is our deadly enemy. He must always be, for we step into his place; he descends in the scale of society and we stand on his head. The ryot is ruined by us, though willing to be our friend. Yet he is the man to whom we must trust for keeping India, and the only one who can take it from us if we ill-use him, for he then joins his hated natural chief. The final result of our Indian conquests no man can predict; but if we take the people by the hand we may count on ruling India for ages. Justice, rigid justice, even severe justice, will work miracles—it has its basis in the desire of man for protection against cruelty, and cannot be shaken. India is safe if so ruled. But such deeds are done as make me wonder that we hold it a-year."

INDIAN STYLE OF BUSINESS.

"The whole style of the civil and military correspondence is bad and vulgar, and not business-like. Inst ad of pith, half a sheet is filled with titles and references and dates, where a Horse Guards' letter would at once touch the subject; and when you wade through this stuff you come to nothing comprehensible at last, and you have then to refer to other letters for explanation of the one in your hand.

SOURCE OF ALL THE EVIL.

"The greatest evil is the army doing the civil work, while an immense civil army does nothing but plunder the land; it ruins the regular army, and so places everything in danger; our army is deteriorating while the natives are improving! A few years ago there was not a firearm in India that had not a matchlock; the other day in the Kohat defile we did not take one! All were flintlocks, and the native princes now shoot with detonators. These are seemingly small matters, but signs of the times.

INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE.

"One of the great evils in India, as far as I can perceive, is that every head of an office fancies himself a gentleman, who is to amuse himself and sign papers presented by his clerks; and they, gradually getting better coats on, vote themselves gentlemen too. Of course more clerks are required, and large establishments are formed without reason. When Pombal seized the Government of Lisbon he found 22,000 clerks; he cut the thousands down to 200. This has always appeared to me a lesson well suited to India, where young gentlemen of the civil service have a servant to wash every distinct toe.

ARMY REFORM.

"I have not in twenty months done what could be done if I remained; but having no real power, I could only give a vigorous tone to the army, which it had in a great degree lost. Next to tone, I ought to have drawn the cords of discipline and drill tight, but could not without time and camps of instruction, neither of which could I obtain. But before I could improve discipline the troops must have been freed from the oppressive civil duties imposed on them. Until this is done no good can be done; until a police is formed no good can be done; the troops all go to the devil on those duties.

THE GREAT MILITARY EVIL.

"The great military evil of India which strikes me is this: all the old officers get snug places, and regiments are left to boys. The 8th Native Infantry were on parade for inspection last week 800 strong, and there were only three officers, of whom two had not been dismissed drill! This will not do; the men look to the native officer; and he, teaching the Sahib, naturally looks upon him as his pupil, not his master. Some day evil will arise from all this. If I had a voice I would insist upon field-officers being with their regiments and not holding civil situations, at least not more than one field-officer and one captain being away on civil employments. That officers do civil duties far better than civil servants I have not the slightest doubt; but then there ought to be more officers. Sir Thomas Munro, I hear, said he thought three officers were sufficient for regiments. This is high authority, yet I confess to thinking him wrong; or else, which is very possible, the state of the army and style of officer have changed—not altogether better nor altogether worse, but become different.

SKETCH OF INDIAN ARMY.

"The general framework of this army is bad. The officers appear better staff officers than ours, but as regimental officers worse. There is nothing I can remedy as a major-general; plenty that should be quickly arranged were I commander-in-chief. People here are full of the superiority of Europeans, which as regards the soldiers is perhaps true. I have not seen the others fight. But the mistake is this: The former European officer was the enterprising, hard-headed, daring fellow who taught and formed the sepoy—the Clives, Lawrences, Bussys, &c. The present European is a youngster who makes curry, drinks champagne, and avoids the sun; in ten or twelve years, if he has brains and health, he acquires some knowledge and is put on the staff; thus the regiments are constantly commanded by lieutenants. At this moment a troop of horse artillery here is commanded by a cadet of fifteen, who came out with me, and whom I puzzled by asking him what the dispart of a gun was!

"While this deterioration of the European goes on, the native officer seems to acquire a higher grade in general estimation, because, from want of European officers, the young and ignorant command nominally, while the natives, ever at their posts, are the real officers, and very good ones too! There is a great cry for more regimental officers, because the few there are have more work than they like; but no one seems to foresee that your young inexperienced wild cadet will some day find the Indian army taken out of his hands by the Soubadars, who are men of high caste, and very daring. Many have got orders of merit for noble actions. The Soubadars are steady, respectful, thoughtful, stern-looking men, very zealous and very military, the sole instructors of all our soldiers."

PREDICTION OF MUTINY IN THE INDIAN ARMY.

"Old Indians say: 'There is no respect for you in India without magnificence and show.' A greater fallacy does not exist. Trumpery and humbug are our enemies in India, as they were and are the enemies of the barbaric princes. Such folly ruined them and will ruin us; for if we continue to imitate the Eastern style our officers will deteriorate, and the native officers will take the empire from from us. A radical reform of the Indian army and an increase of European officers is absolutely necessary. Some years hence, for they will not increase the officers, my words will prove prophetic. The sepoy has no European officers to look to—no captain I mean; he is devoted to us as yet, but we take no pains to preserve his attachment. It is no concern of mine; I shall be dead before what I foresee will take place, but it will take place. I would give this opinion in writing if it would do the Company any good; but it will not, for everything I say or do is looked upon as war against them, and I will not play Cassandra for the directors to jeer and laugh."

EUROPEAN OFFICERS AND SEPOYS.

"Experience tells us that young men naturally are glad to avoid the details of a company which they do not understand, and see shifted about from one to another. The native officer is ready to take those details in his hands; and this recent desertion is a decided result, the like of which will, on a larger scale, again happen. The European officer is loved by the sepoy, for he is honourable and just generally; he is the man to lead him in battle, and therefore the man to keep him in discipline; he is capable of making the Indian army march to Moscow, but he must have fair play. Courage, zeal, ability, and a white face he has; but he must also have experience, which can only be given by keeping him with his regiment, not by giving charge of two companies to an ensign who was, the month before, in vulgar fractions at Ad-discombe. That youth may lead them in a storm, but he cannot command them in a battle; much less in a gay cantonment, with women, balls, and races; saying nothing of beer, which I dare not now speak of. I have, in some remarks on military law, and their new article of war sent to me for my opinion, told them all this. I said, give ten captains; if not, give five, but call them grand division captains, and let them have the divisions, that the sepoy may have a captain to look up to, and be protected by a man who has taught him to be a soldier—not by a boy whom he has taught. My opinion will be disregarded, and I will give no more; but the present system will have a bad result some fine day, as sure as God made Moses; and the Court of Directors will sell the grandest empire the world ever saw. To give large salaries to civil servants, and refuse captains for sepoy—this is their economy."

INDULGENCE OF OFFICERS.

Regimental officers should not be allowed horses on the field or to ride on a march; it is offensive to the men, and ought to be so to the pride of the officer himself. Sir John Moore forbid it; Frederick the Great and Napoleon did not allow it. The Duke of Wellington did permit it, but I believe he repented; for he said, after two years' experience in Spain, that it deprived him of 10,000 cavalry on account of their forage. It is, therefore, probable he was not satisfied with his plan, but could not easily do away with his order. No service but ours permits it, and we shall in time allow serjeants and corporals to ride, and then privates; and so return to the dark ages, when all were cavalry. This is the course of human nature. One man is allowed to ride, though his duty does not require it, why should not another?

"Young officers always ride now, and heap their own comforts upon the horse-keeper who runs on foot at their horse's tail. Such men may be very good fellows, but they are incapable of leading men. A commission puts them at the head of men, but they do not lead them; nor will they ever distinguish themselves in history; it is an ignorance of human nature which is a veto on their ever being great men."

ZEAL OF EUROPEAN OFFICERS

"There are two essential qualities necessary to make a soldier—courage and zeal, and rather would I see a man without the first than the second. Position, discipline, a hundred things may remedy a failure of courage; but want of zeal is a floorer. It is at one jump to reach the point where age and long service places worn-out men. To this point it is absolutely disgusting to see a man arrive at 25, nay, some at 16. There are boys in this camp who require and have more luxuries than myself, who am 63, and Governor of Scinde. The want of beer and wine is absolute misfortune to them. These men, or boys, are unfit for war, the essence of which is endurance, and not only that, but a pride and glory in privation, and a contempt for comfort as effeminate and disgraceful. The private soldier cannot have luxuries, and if he sees his officer despise them, he does the same; but if his officers sacrifice everything to enjoyment, he is not a fool, and holds that officer in contempt. Every reprimand he receives from the gentlemanly Sybarite disgusts him, not only with the fop, but with the service."

RELATION OF OFFICER AND PRIVATE.

"Among the modern military changes, there is one which has been gradually introduced in a number of regiments by gentlemen who are usually called 'martinets'—not soldiers, only martinets, who would not let a poor soldier eat his dinner his own way, if they could help it. The innovation is that of prohibiting a private soldier addressing his officer unless in full uniform and accompanied by a non-commissioned officer, also full-dressed! This is a very dangerous innovation; it is digging a ditch between the officers and their men! How are Company's officers to study men's characters when no man dare address them but in full dress and in presence of a non-commissioned officer? This system injures the feeling of respect and affection towards officers. The spirit of aristocracy is strong in the soldiers; they respect and honour their officers generally; but these martinets who leave nothing to human nature, who would make them blow their noses by beat of drum, produce disgust at the service."

COMPARISON OF BOMBAY WITH BENGAL TROOPS.

"I have not yet seen the Bengal artillery. I sent a Bombay battery to Sukkur some months ago, and hear its beauty and condition excited great admiration. The Bombay troops are a perfectly different army—low caste, obedient, hardy, brave; the Bengal Brahmins brave enough, I believe, but far from having good order; at least our Queen's officers, who have seen both, speak of the Bombay being, except in caste and stature, far superior. The 9th Bengal cavalry, when with me, were admirable; so I am inclined to like the Bengalees; but I know no other Bengal troops well. They are giants. A European regiment beats them in breadth, perhaps; but in height, bah! The tallest regiment in our army, guards excepted, would average two inches below a tall Bengal regiment. The Bombay men are short."

MILITARY PENAL DISCIPLINE.

"Lord W. Bentinck, by abolishing flogging, has left no punishment when an army is before the enemy. I did, entre nous, make free with the law and the cat, breaking one and using the other. I shall be banged one day. The rules here are strange. I am in the field, and may at any moment be in the midst of enemies; yet I cannot inflict the slightest punishment by a general court-martial, on either officer or private soldier,—that is to say, if he belongs to the Bengal side; if he belongs to the Bombay side, I can, my two warrants being different. If these sepoy were not the best in the world, they would give their commander much trouble. Every sepoy, if punished, is turned out of the service; thus, if the finest soldier in the army commits a fault, requiring perhaps punishment by hard labour for a day, he is turned out and lost. But I have been in situations where I could not turn them out, for they would either starve or have their throats cut; so I did all my work by the provost-marshal. At this the papers were wrath, and called upon the sepoy to resist the fiery old fool at their head."

NAPIER'S CURE FOR MUTINY.

"Lord Dalhousie has just returned from sea. He approves of my disbanding the 66th, but not of my taking the Ghoorkas into pay, which is the essence of the blow struck, as showing the Brahmins we have another race to rest on for soldiers. I have just got his weak letter; it is very silly. He will not, however, I expect, rescind my order; but it would please me, as my resignation should instantly go in. He does not see half the danger he was in, I suspect, and they will all pooh-pooh! now it is over."

INFLUENCE OF THE GHOORKAS TO CHECK MUTINY.

"But their greatest value in his eyes was the furnishing a sure check on sepoy mutiny; for he had discovered that the insubordinate spirit of the sepoy was principally among the Brahmins, and secretly nourished by their religious men with a view to control the Government. Very politic was the plan of these religious men. High pay interested all castes, and was a covering bait; but their under-machinery was, by religious influence, to bar recruiting, if the mutineers were disbanded, and use their banded strength if retained in pay. Charles Napier's ready genius at once seized the means of baffling this scheme with one more deeply laid, morally and physically; namely, augmenting the Ghoorka battalions, as he proposed to Lord Dalhousie, and giving them sepoy pay and advantages. He could thus overawe the mutineers with a rival army of men, more hardy, stronger of body, even braver, and of less prevaricating faith, as having fewer prejudices to wound; thus also he designed to convince the Brahmins that their influence to stop recruiting would be futile against the Government, hurtful only to themselves, and must therefore be abandoned."

THE LONDON AND EASTERN BANKING CORPORATION.—At a meeting of the shareholders it was declared with regard to the liquidation of the claims, that since the 11th April the liabilities have been reduced from 340,240*l.* to 282,706*l.*, and the assets from 334,010*l.* to 269,996*l.* Besides the whole of the capital, the proprietary will lose 12,710*l.*, the deficiency being to that extent.

EAST INDIA ACCOUNTS.—The total net "revenue" receipts of all the Presidencies of India in the year 1855-56, amounted to the sum of 28,812,097*l.*, and the total payment out of the income of 6,664,750*l.*, being an actual receipt into the Government treasuries of 22,147,347*l.* The net revenues of Bengal amounted to 12,201,628*l.*; the gross receipts of the Eastern settlements, to 97,904*l.*; those of Coorg to 20,477*l.*; those of Burmah, &c., to 598,776*l.*; those of Nagpore, to 529,127*l.*; those of Oude, to 201,935*l.*; those of the North-west Provinces to 7,095,248*l.*; those of the Punjab and Trans-Indus territory, to 1,216,492*l.*; those of Madras, to 4,956,871*l.*; those of Bombay, to 4,643,464*l.*; those of Scinde, to 302,422*l.*; and those of Sattara, to 251,827*l.* The sum of 498,904*l.* was received in 1856 as tributes and subsidies. The grand total revenue of India for the year ended the 30th of April, 1857, was estimated at 29,344,960*l.*, being an excess of expenditure over income amounting to 1,981,062*l.* The military and war charges for the said year were estimated at 10,537,305*l.* The revenue receipts of India have varied from 26,510,185*l.* to 29,344,960*l.* between 1853-54 and 1856-57, and for four years there has been an increase of expenditure over income varying from 972,791*l.* to 2,044,117*l.*

EXTRAORDINARY PHENOMENON.—The following letter from the Hon. Charles Augustus Murray, Her Majesty's envoy to Persia, has been handed to us for publication by Sir Charles Lyell:—"Bagdad, May 23, 1857.—My dear Sir Charles,—We have lately witnessed here a phenomenon so strange, that a brief description of it may not be uninteresting to you. On the 20th inst., a few minutes before 6 p.m. (which is here about an hour before sunset), I was sitting with my mirza reading some Persian letters, when on a sudden I became sensible of an unusual obscuration of the light on the paper; I jumped up, and going to the window, saw a huge black cloud approaching from the north-west, exactly as if a pall were being drawn over the face of the heavens. It must have travelled with considerable rapidity, for in less than three minutes we were enveloped in total darkness—a darkness more intense than an ordinary midnight when neither stars nor moon are visible. Groping my way amid chairs and tables, I succeeded in striking a light, and then, feeling assured that a simoom of some kind was coming on, I called to my servants to come up and shut the windows, which were all open, the weather having been previously very sultry. While they were doing so the wind increased, and bore with it such a dense volume of dust or sand that before they could succeed in closing the windows the room was entirely filled, so that the tables and furniture were speedily covered. Meanwhile a panic seized the whole city; the Armenians and other Christian sects rushed through the gloom to confess and pray in the churches; women shrieked and beat their breasts in the streets; and the men of all classes prostrated themselves in prayer, believing that the end of the world had arrived. After a short time the black darkness was succeeded by a red lurid gloom, such as I never saw in any part of the world, and which I can only liken in imagination to the effect that might be produced if all London were in conflagration in a heavy November fog; to me it was more striking (I may almost say fearful) than the previous utter darkness, and reminded me of that 'darkness visible' in which the poetic genius of Milton placed the demons and horrid shapes of the infernal regions. This lurid fog was doubtless occasioned by the rays of the western sun shining obliquely on the dense mass of red sand or dust which had been raised from some distant desert, and was borne upon the blast. I inclose you a specimen of the dust. The Arabs here think that it came from the Nejd. The storm seems to have travelled in a circular direction, having appeared first from the south, then south-west, then west, then north-west. After about two hours it had so far passed away that we were able to open the windows again and breathe the outer air. It cannot have been a simoom, for during those which I have experienced in Arabia and Egypt the wind is hot and stifling. On the 20th the wind was high, but only oppressive from the dense mass of dust that it carried with it."—Professor J. Quekett, of the Royal College of Surgeons, having kindly examined the specimen of red dust from Bagdad which accompanied Mr. Murray's letter, has informed Sir Charles Lyell that he could detect, under the microscope, only inorganic particles, such as quartz-sand, in the dust. There are no relics of diatomaceæ apparent; and, though a small portion of calcareous matter was present in the sand, yet he could observe no microscopic shells or other organic matter.—Literary Gazette.

THE BENGAL MILITARY FUND.—Some correspondence relating to this fund has been published, on the motion of Viscount Goderich, M.P. It appears that the East-India Company aids, directly or indirectly, certain civil and military funds in the three presidencies to the amount of 71,020*l.* a year, and that advances to the amount of 508,600*l.* were made to the said funds during the four years from 1825 to 1829. The Bengal Military Fund appears to have been lately in a deteriorated state, but certain arrangements have been made to restore it to solvency.

THE BENGAL ARMY.—SIR WILLIAM GOMM.—A correspondence between Sir William Gomm, formerly Commander-in-Chief in India, and Lord Melville, relative to the discipline of the Bengal army, is published in the Times. Sir William complained of some imputations on the army made by Lord Melville in the House of Lords, and said:—"The Bengal army was, I maintain, in a perfectly healthy state of discipline when I surrendered the command, immediately preceding the peaceful occupation and annexation of Oude. To what cause, to what fatality, this strange outbreak is owing—by what misunderstanding these miserable men have been led into such a course of wild excess—I do not pretend to divine." Lord Melville replies:—"Sir Charles Napier's expression in 1849, when several regiments mutinied, two of the number being those at Rawul Pindee under Sir Colin Campbell, and which in some degree concerned me—that we were sitting on a mine which nobody could tell when it might explode—has only come too true. Sir Edward Paget's opinion, given thirty years ago, has only proved how true an estimate he formed of the morale of the Bengal native army. I entirely repudiate all intention, and most distinctly all inclination, to cast any reflections on you while administering a system bad in itself, and which you could only struggle by every means in your power to strengthen and uphold."

RAILWAYS IN INDIA.—An official statement made to the Directors of the East-India Company shows that 3,648 miles of railroad have been sanctioned in India, and are now in course of construction, including lines from Calcutta to Delhi, with branches, 1,400 miles; from Madras to the west coast at Beypore, 430 miles; from Madras via Cuddapah and Bellary, to meet a line from Bombay at or near the river Krishna, 310 miles; from Bombay to Calian, with extension, 33 miles; from the north-east to Jubbulpore, to meet the line from Mirzapore, with a branch to Oomrawuttee and Nagpore, 818 miles; from the south-east via Poonah and Sholapore, to meet the line from Madras, 357 miles; from Kurrachee to a point on the Indus at or near Kotree, 120 miles; and from Surat to Baroda and Ahmedabad, 160 miles. The estimated outlay required to complete the several lines sanctioned amounts to the sum total of 30,231,000*l.*, and the total amount of capital issued with the sanction of the East-India Company is 20,314,300*l.* The lines now in course of construction in India have been chosen quite as much for commercial as for military and political objects. In each case the existing channel for trade has been followed; the chief cotton producing districts are provided with railway accommodation, and the agricultural resources of certain districts have been developed. Only 300 miles of railway are open at present in all the Presidencies, but 3,000 more are being constructed almost simultaneously. The length of time occupied in the construction of lines in India will bear a favourable comparison with the period occupied by the execution of railroads in the mother country. The line in Bengal now open is 10 miles longer than the London and Birmingham railroad, yet it only occupied five years in construction, while the English line occupied six. In Madras 65 miles were opened for traffic within three years after commencement of the works, and in Bombay 33 miles were completed and opened in less than four years. The prospects of the railways in a financial point of view are very cheering. On the East India Railway 895,442 passengers were conveyed in 1856, and 77,685 tons of goods. The receipts amounted to £95,188. The net profits of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway in 1855 and 1856 amounted to £28,549, and the total receipts of the Madras line in the latter half of the year 1856 were £11,720. The total receipts on the same line in January, February, and March of last year amounted to £66,144.

Allen's Maps of India & China.

MAP OF INDIA;

Showing the British Territories subdivided into Collectories, and the position and boundary of each Native State; chiefly compiled from Trigonometrical Surveys, executed by order of the Honourable Court of Directors of the East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 6 in. high; 5 ft. 8 in. wide. £2; or on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3. 3s.

The object kept in view in compiling this Map has been to render it available to the greatest possible extent for popular use. For this purpose the names of all stations, civil and military, are inserted, as well as those of all towns and places of note likely to be looked for. To make clear the subdivisions of the whole of the country, both British and native, the limits of the various districts and collectories, with their names, are distinctly indicated. The railways are laid down, and the trunk roads conspicuously coloured. The newly-acquired district in Burmah is included. To avoid, however, the confusion consequent upon over-crowding, and make the Map clear and easy for reference, the names of many small villages, and places of no present importance, have been omitted, and thus a very wide measure of comprehensiveness has been attained, while needless diffusiveness has been avoided.

THACKER'S OVERLAND NEWS, FOR INDIA AND THE COLONIES;

A fortnightly Summary of British and Foreign Intelligence, published on the 10th and 26th of each month, in time for despatch to India via Marseilles. One uniform system is preserved throughout the Paper, and the information is so epitomised and arranged as to present a perfect and comprehensive view of the history of the fortnight, with special reference to those subjects most interesting to Anglo-Indians.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

THE CALCUTTA "ENGLISHMAN."

"Pains have been taken with the arrangement. It is evidently got up with a knowledge of what information Indian readers require, and will therefore, we expect, soon attain a considerable circulation."

THE CALCUTTA "DAILY NEWS."

"Fully bears out the assurance given in the prospectus that it should 'be all that the Overland Papers are, and something more.' We do not think that a single item of news or fact of interest which had transpired during the fortnight can possibly have been omitted, and the power of condensation displayed in this Paper is much beyond what we had expected."

"THE MORTSLITE."

"It is well written, and carefully compiled. It is not so diffuse in its information as the 'Home News,' and does not reprint long articles from the London journals; but it will probably not be the less acceptable on this account to a large portion of the public."

"BENGAL HURKARU."

"We gladly pronounce this first number an extremely good one, and we think the periodical is full of promise of something still better. The Editor has contrived to condense into a comparatively small space a vast quantity of miscellaneous information, of a character interesting to his readers here. This superior condensation of his materials is perhaps the leading character of the Newspaper,—and a very important one it is, especially for those Indian readers who may receive this one London Paper only."

Orders to be addressed to Messrs. W. THACKER and Co., 87, Newgate Street, London; Messrs. THACKER, SPINK, and Co., St. Andrew's Library, Calcutta; Messrs. THACKER and Co., St. Andrew's Library, Bombay; and Mr. JAMES HILL, Lucknow.

In cases of Sunburn, or Stings of Insects, its virtues have long been acknowledged. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

The heat of summer also frequently communicates a dryness to the hair, and a tendency to fall off, which may be completely obviated by the use of ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL, a delightfully fragrant and transparent preparation, and, as an invigorator and purifier of the hair, beyond all precedent.

Nor at this season can we be too careful to preserve the teeth from the deleterious effects of vegetable acids (the immediate cause of tooth-ache), by a systematic employment, night and morning, of ROWLANDS' ODONTO, or Pearl Dentifrice, a white powder, compounded of the rarest and most fragrant exotics. It bestows on the teeth a pearl-like whiteness, frees them from tartar, and imparts to the gums a healthy firmness, and to the breath a grateful sweetness and purity.—Price 2s. 9d. per box.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

ON the 27th of June, the date of the latest intelligence from General Barnard's camp, Delhi was still in the hands of the rebels. A not unnatural feeling of impatience may possibly be felt in this country, at the unexpected, though inevitable, delay that has occurred between the massacre and its retribution. But, in truth, there is rather reason for congratulation than complaint, that the day of vengeance has been deferred. It may be that the immediate capture of the offending city would have struck a momentary terror into the mutineers, but the spirit of disaffection had grown to too great a height to have been finally crushed by the punishment of a mere section of the insurgents. It is altogether to our interest to have known the worst at once. There is now no room for half-measures, no pretext for forbearance. Since the first outbreak of the revolt, the entire Bengal army has melted away, or risen fiercely upon its officers. Very many of these misguided men have, no doubt, escaped to their homes, too timid either to aid or to resist their more truculent comrades. But of the latter, vast numbers have flocked to Delhi as their rallying-point, and thus have presented themselves an easier sacrifice to the sword of the avenger. Already their sufferings have been almost pitiable; famine and the cholera have driven them against the British bayonets, only to be hurled back into the doomed city with slaughter and dismay. They are, indeed, shut up as in a trap, and after the commencement of the rains all escape on the river side will be rendered impossible by the rapid rising of the waters. On four different occasions—the 17th, the 19th, the 23rd, and the 27th of June—they appear to have made desperate sorties, but were each time repulsed with heavy loss. General Barnard's army, meanwhile, was securely encamped on rising ground, from either side of which the waters would drain off into the low country. They have also in their possession the spacious palace of the late Gwalior chief, Hindoo Rao, which will serve as an excellent hospital for the sick and wounded. Throughout the month of July their position will be rather improved than impaired by the rains, and it is very unlikely that the insurgents will be allowed to hold their own for so long a space of time. The British army already mustered about 12,000 fighting men, of whom two-thirds were Europeans. The details are as follows:—

EUROPEANS (about 8,000 men of all arms).

Her Majesty's 6th carabineers.
Her Majesty's 9th lancers.
Her Majesty's 8th regiment of foot.
Her Majesty's 61st regiment of foot (one wing).
Her Majesty's 60th rifles.
Her Majesty's 75th foot.
Hon. East-India Company's 1st Bengal fusiliers.
Hon. East-India Company's 2nd ditto (6 companies).
Five troops horse artillery (about 600 men):—20 6-pounders,
4 9-pounders, 2 18-pounders, 5 howitzers.
Artillery recruits 120 men.
The siege train from the Sutlej.

NATIVES (about 5,000 men of all arms).

One squadron 4th regiment light cavalry.
Two light field batteries, each 5 9-pounders, 1 24-pounder.
A detachment of sappers and miners.
The Sirmoor rifle battalion—700 strong.
The Punjab guides—250 sabres, 500 bayonets.
1,000 men Punjab infantry, irregulars.
1,200 sabres Punjab cavalry, irregulars.
The Rajah of Jheend's force (strength unknown).

Reinforcements were, besides, daily arriving; and it may be fairly assumed that the next mail will bring the glad tidings of the fall of Delhi and the destruction of the mutineers.

The insurrection has now spread to every station in the Upper Provinces, with the exception of the Punjab, which remained tranquil. It appears to have been arranged that a simultaneous rising should take place at Bareilly, Shahjehanpore, Lucknow, and Moradabad; but various circumstances occurred to disconcert the plans of the conspirators. At Bareilly a shot gun was fired about eleven o'clock on Sunday, the 1st of June, upon which the officers, according to a previous understanding, hurried to the parade-ground. But they had hardly assembled before the mutineers sent a charge of grape among them, and compelled them to flee for their lives. Their flight was rendered further dangerous and distressing by the conduct of the villagers, who harassed and plundered them whenever an opportunity presented itself. Finally, however, after a ride of seventy miles, they contrived to reach Nynee Tal, whither they had previously despatched their wives and children.

At Moradabad the 29th regiment allowed their officers two hours' start, which enabled them to rally at Nynee Tal without the loss of a single life. At Shahjehanpore, there is reason to believe that many Europeans were killed. One of the most extraordinary incidents, however, connected with this marvellous revolt occurred at Fyzabad. The 22nd N.I. treated their officers with much respect, and even saluted them after they had renounced their authority. They went still further, for they furnished them with boats, and presented them with Rs. 900 taken from the regimental chest. Unhappily the fugitives did not always meet with the same forbearance; for about ten miles below Fyzabad they fell in with a body of mutineers, encamped on the bank of the river, who instantly fired upon them, and murdered at least two of their number—perhaps many more. At Mhow four officers were killed, but the rest escaped into a fortified square in the middle of the station, where they would probably hold out until relieved. At Saugor the officers took refuge in the fort, and at Nowgong they effected their escape. Very different was the fate of the officers of the 10th regiment, at Futtehghur, in Rohilcund, though their own sepoys allowed them to take to their boats without molestation. Not far from Cawnpore, however, the Rajah of Bhitore fired upon them with some small guns he had been permitted to possess, and took the whole party prisoners. It is feared that every man, woman, and child was barbarously murdered. The fugitives from Futteh-pore sustained various vicissitudes. At first they made their way to Banda, and were hospitably entertained by the Nawab. But on Sunday, the 15th, his troops broke out into mutiny, and demanded that the Europeans should be given up to them. This the Nawab steadily refused to do, and enabled his protégés to reach Nagoda in safety.

The murderers of Jhansi and Hissar have already received a foretaste of the fate that awaits them. The gallant General Van Cortlandt, who so signally distinguished himself in the Mooltan campaign, encountered these rebels at Sirsa, with a body of Buttianah irregulars, whom he himself had raised under the auspices of Colonel Edwardes. Two actions ensued, in the last of which the mutineers left 200 of their number dead upon the ground. The victorious general had since been joined by 2,700 men of all arms, retainers of the Bikaner rajah.

At Indore another example has been furnished of the danger of trusting to contingent forces. Although the young Holkar continues to profess the most ardent attachment to the British Government, his two regiments have gone off to Oojein en route to Delhi. To keep the Gwalior contingent in check, a considerable force had been despatched from the Bombay Presidency, consisting of—

3 horse-artillery guns (European).
500 men of H.M.'s 83rd.
400 „ 12th Bombay N.I.
2 squadrons 2nd Bombay light cavalry.

A light field brigade, under Col. G. H. Somerset, had also been concentrated at Malligaum, to command the valley of the Nerbudda.

Lucknow was still firmly held by Sir Henry Lawrence and his 500 European soldiers; and at Cawnpore Sir H. Wheeler had repulsed every attack of the enemy. With a mere handful of men he occupied a barrack, crowded with women and children, and yet gathered in supplies of food and ammunition from the very lines of the insurgent host. However, his deliverance was at hand. Col. Neill and his Madras fusiliers, after doing good service at Benares, had pushed on to Allahabad, where they arrived just in time to save the fort from being captured. The people of the city seem to have made common cause with the sepoys, and to have fired upon the troops from the flat roofs of their houses. For this act of madness the city was justly shelled, and the mutineers driven out into the open country. But they had not yet sufficiently learned to appreciate their inferiority to European troops. Under the command of a fanatical moulavie, they intrenched themselves in a very strong position, and actually repulsed one assault of the fusiliers. During the night, however, they prudently retreated, leaving behind 300 of their comrades killed or wounded. From Allahabad Brigadier Havelock and Col. Neill were preparing to march upon Cawnpore.

Calcutta appears to have recovered its serenity, except that the European press is fretting and fuming under what it is pleased to call Lord Canning's "gagging" act. No one who is acquainted with the violent denunciations of the Government and the governing men in which Indian journalists habitually indulge, can doubt that some restriction on their ordinary license had become absolutely necessary. For many years past, in each Presidency, there have been journals, conducted by Englishmen, apparently devoted to the task of bringing the Government into disrepute. It would have been utter madness to allow such a state of things to continue unchecked in an emergency like the present. The Governor-General, therefore, was wisely advised to place the press under a temporary censure; but his lordship could hardly have expected that the first warning would have been called forth by the Friend of India, a paper hitherto the warmest advocate of the Government. Such, however, has been the case. In the absence of its proper editor, a gentleman formerly connected with the Madras Athenæum has had the singularly bad taste to lose sight of the peculiar tone and tendency of the paper intrusted to his management, and to convert it into a vehicle for the expression of his own narrow-minded views. He has accordingly received a first warning, with an intimation that a repetition of the offence will cause his paper to be stopped.

The Madras army remained staunch and true, with the exception of a threatened outbreak on the part of the 3rd cavalry at Aurungabad. This movement was speedily suppressed by the movable column under General Woodburn. That fine officer, we regret to state, has been compelled by ill health to make over the command to Col. C. S. Stuart. At Madras itself, a panic broke out on the night of the 27th, owing to a report that the Mahomedans intended to rise on the following day, Sunday, and massacre all the European inhabitants. Measures were promptly taken by the authorities to dispel this needless alarm. It is worthy of note, however, that the Sabbath has been very generally selected for the work of slaughter.

Of Bombay it need only be said that eighty-eight lakhs have been subscribed towards the new loan, which is rapidly filling up.

The news from China is neither important nor interesting, though the Friend of China mentions—but with all reserve—a rumour to the effect that Hien Fung, the Tartar emperor, had abdicated the throne.

BENGAL.

PROGRESS OF THE REVOLT.

We continue the account of the progress of the revolt as given in the Friend of India of June 25 and July 2:—

The flame of insurrection is leaping from post to post throughout the vast extent of country still nominally under British rule, until it has become a point of honour to rebel with men who had no previous thought of disloyalty, but who say they must do now what all the rest of the sepoys are doing. Away up to the hills of Nepal, along the wide plains of the Deccan, on through the Punjab, and over the wastes of Central India, the flag of revolt is flying; the mutineers gathering fresh strength and boldness with every hour. Heaven has mercifully preserved us from enemies without our borders, and firm counsels have ruled the land until lately, or it is hard to say what might have been our condition at this moment.

Not the least amongst the thousand evils which will follow in the track of the rebellion, is the indurating effect it will have upon the feelings of our countrywomen when the struggle is over. There are many hundreds of English ladies who lie down nightly to dream of horrors too great for utterance; who scarcely converse except upon one dreadful subject, and would be found almost as willing as their husbands and fathers to go out and do battle with the mutineers, if they could only ensure the infliction of deep and thorough vengeance. It is a contest with murderers who are not satisfied with the life's blood that they have to expect daily. Their very servants are perhaps in league to destroy them, they suffer almost hourly worse than the pains of death. Many have already died by homicidal hands; but more from the pangs of starvation and travel, from the agonies of terror, and the slow process of exhaustion. And all this while friends and relatives sigh vainly for the coming of the day of retribution.

At Rohnee, in the Sonthal district, Lieut. Sir Norman Leslie has been foully murdered by his own sowars of the 5th Irregulars. He was sitting in the verandah of his bungalow, with Dr. Grant and Major Macdonald, when they heard the hasty footsteps of men near them, and in a moment three assassins, in the undress garb of sepoys, burst into the room, with drawn swords, and attacked them. The baronet was sitting on a low chair, and the first blow aimed at him, cut clean through the back into the lungs. He fell on his face, and received several other wounds on the head, but lived about half an hour, gasping in agony of mind more than of body, "What will become of my poor wife and children?" Dr. Grant was slashed on the arm, and had a deep gash in the hip, and Major Macdonald received three cuts on the head rapidly delivered, but he had sufficient presence of mind to snatch up a chair, and battle with his assailants, until the villains lost heart, and fled. An immediate parade of the troopers was ordered, and every man's sword was found clean and bright, a fact which entirely diverted suspicion from them, and fixed it upon some of the disbanded sepoys who were known to be lurking in the neighbourhood.

A day or two afterwards, however, a clue was found, which, being carefully followed, led to the arrest of the murderers, who turned out to be an old sowar and two recruits belonging to the 5th; the motive for the crime being a supposed wish to engage the rest of the corps in mutiny by the usual preliminary process. The guilt of the criminals was proved beyond a doubt, and they received their reward on the gallows. The list of the rebels done to death for mutiny and murder is growing formidably long, such as will make up in some degree for possible shortcomings in the field. The hangman redresses the errors of timid and insufficient counsels in high places. At Gopee-gunge three zemindars, who had set up in business as robber chiefs, were surprised in the exercise of their vocation, brought into the station, tried and hung. At Lucknow and Benares the gibbet, like the guillotine some sixty years since, is now a national institution, and is in almost hourly use. We hope it is not likely to be set up en permanence at Barrackpore, but one or two executions have taken place there lately, and we suppose that so long as the mutiny continues to spread, and the terror lasts, we shall hear of more examples of a like kind.

According to the usual legislative custom of blundering at leisure, and repenting in haste, the Council have brought in a bill for the punishment of mutiny. We all recollect how much was said about the severity of the orders for disbanding the 19th and 34th, and how that long considered act of authority was supposed to have extinguished in every corps, however disaffected at heart, the desire to rebel.

Well, the sepoys had grown to dread it so much, that they deserted by hundreds daily; and true to the policy of meeting their wishes half way, the Government in Calcutta and Agra opened the gates to them and politely wished the sepoy, once loyal and always independent, good morning, and a pleasant walk to Delhi. Agra is eighty miles from the former place, and the disarmed men of the 44th and 57th have had two months' furlow allowed them, it being officially expected that they intended to visit their native villages. At Fort William, upwards of a hundred men, who were brought in as deserters from the 43rd, were told to go to their quarters and behave better in future; and all over the suburbs were scattered men belonging to the 70th and other regiments at Barrackpore, who, it is supposed, were too deeply compromised in the late baffled treasons to feel at all comfortable at the prospect of being called to a reckoning when the hands of authority were sufficiently strengthened. It was no use for peaceable citizens to exclaim against the manifest impolicy of allowing those men to wander about in search of the means of existence. They were told that the service was well rid of such mutinous rascals, more especially at such a cheap rate, and we must have sat down contented with the answer, if it had not chanced that Sir Patrick Grant reached Calcutta whilst the stream of desertion was still flowing unchecked.

The Commander-in-Chief has no seat in Council, so that there is no published record of what he said on the subject, but the probability is, that he said it was not according to discipline for sepoys to leave their colours just when it suited them; and that auctions of the Queen's stores in the public streets of Calcutta were not exactly respectable; and that, furthermore, if the Bengal army was still to have a recognized existence, he would rather it should be a body of soldiers than a mob of disorderly ruffians. Perhaps Sir Patrick Grant said something like the above to the gentlemen whose business it is to make laws for the Indian Empire, but at any rate it is certain, that what was no offence on Thursday last, is now a hanging matter; and that the man who deserts henceforth, does so at the risk of transportation or the gallows. Perhaps it is a pity that the necessity for this kind of legislation is not taken into account somewhat earlier. Laws are not the better for being served up like whitebait, hot and hot. Of all hand to mouth work, legislation that comes under the description, is the least entitled to respect.

Col. Neile, with his handful of men, continues to do the state good service, always contriving to reach a station just as he is wanted, and when there, animating all classes by his wonderful activity and courage. Allahabad has been for some time in the hands of insurgents, an influential moultie having set up his standard in the town, and gathered round him all the elements of rapine and disorder. The band had committed numberless atrocities, but time was up with them on the 12th instant. Col. Neile arrived on the previous evening with forty of the Madras Fusiliers, and laid his plans at once for rooting out the banditti. At daylight the guns opened upon a suburb inhabited by a body of disaffected Brahmans, who were speedily dispersed, and the troops, numbering about three hundred men, of whom sixty only were Europeans, then entered the town, which they cleared at the point of the bayonet, the cavalry waiting outside to cut up the fugitives. The next day, other portions of the town were attacked with the same result, and the moultie was glad to fly for his life, leaving his nephew a prisoner, who, together with a crowd of followers, were certain to find under the gallows the justice which they escaped from the sword. Col. Neile has since pushed on to Cawnpore, clearing the roads and giving confidence everywhere to the loyal and well-disposed population.

At Hissar and Hansi the whole of the Europeans have been massacred. Four troopers came in from Delhi to the former place, and persuaded the troops to rise and murder young and old of English parentage. Dr. Waghorn appears to have been the only man who escaped; making his way to Kurnal, he gave the alarm, but there are no spare soldiers to avenge the butchery. Two guns and some cavalry have been sent to Sirsa, with the chance that they will join the rebels at the first opportunity. From Indore Colonel Durand has sent a telegraphic message concerning the mutiny at Neemuch on the night of the 3rd instant. The work of slaughter was commenced by the artillery, and all the troops joined heartily in it. A native officer opened the gate of the fort, and gave entrance to the rebels, who of course had it all their own way. Instead of giving the names of officers supposed to be murdered, we think it best to mention those only who are known to be saved. They consist of Captains Lloyd and Sir J. Hill; Lieuts. Ritchie, Ellice, and Stapleton, Dr. Coates, and the quartermaster-sergeant and family. Of the artillery, Lieutenant Walker and child, Lieut. Barnes, Dr. Clark, and the serjeant, the fate of whose family is unknown. Captain Macdonald, and Lieutenants Rose, Gordon, and Davenport, of the 7th Gwalior cavalry. The officers of the 72nd are safe with their families, and the rest of the list is made up of Mrs. Burton, and family, Dr. and Mrs. Hockin, Serjeant Brahyon, wife and family, and Mr. Williams. Intelligence has been received at Poona, that the Mehidpore contingent rose on the 13th inst., whilst on their way to Neemuch to trample out the ashes of the recent mutiny, and murdered their officers, Lieuts. Brodie and Hunt; a portion of the contingent is at Indore, where it is not likely they will long remain quiet. The remnant of the 1st cavalry, the corps which commenced the slaughter at Neemuch, is stationed at Mhow; and it is a point of much nicety if the Europeans who are marching on the place will reach it before they follow the example of their comrades. A company of European artillery has been ordered to Poona from Bombay, and the wing of H.M.'s 86th at Aden is recalled to the presidency. There seems no want of vigour on that side of India, even though Sir Henry Somerset is taking his ease in the hills. The 2nd light cavalry at Cawnpore, and the 1st and 56th N.I., have joined what is now emphatically the cause of the Bengal army. They looted the treasury, broke open the jail, burnt every bungalow, and murdered the Europeans with horrible barbarity, according to the prescribed formula. The 25th, at Shahjehanpore, in addition to killing several of their officers, dispatched the magistrate, Mr. Mordant Ricketts; but the 22nd, at Fyzabad, have introduced an innovation, which, if carried out, may save many lives during the next few weeks. They saluted their officers after mutinying, and placed the ladies under the protection of the King of Oude's Commander-in-Chief, who, it appears, is one of their regimental officers. They gave each captain and lieutenant a small douceur from the public treasury, and allowed them to carry away a portion of their personal effects. These marks of politeness say much for the manners, if they make nothing in favour of the morals, of the Fyzabad mutineers.

The tidings from Delhi are still harassing and uncertain. Whether it is that Sir Henry Bernard wishes to keep the door of the trap open till more of the vermin have entered, or that the task of capture appears more difficult than we can imagine, it is hard to say; but the fact is certain, that up to last evening no intelligence of its full had come to hand. A portion of the force has beaten the rebels for the third time, capturing twenty-six guns, and the latest information received is to the effect, that a part of the city wall has been battered down; but then why have the troops not been allowed to enter and make an end of the affair? To-morrow or next day will, we trust, furnish an answer to the question.

The Banda affair is a serious one, but we notice that Government have got into the habit of telling only a part of what they know, and that often at long intervals. The reticence serves no good purpose. Men who will not betray confidence by detailing the facts, find it impossible to avoid dropping hints that something very unpleasant has occurred in such a direction, and thus the public experience all the terror, and derive no share of the possible consolation that may be in store. It is hardly worth while at this date to alter any of their arrangements, but otherwise we should say it is a pity our rulers should exhibit such a fear of publicity.

Sir Henry Lawrence still holds Lucknow, but he is hard pressed, and must have speedy relief. Happily the China troops are close at hand, the river is rising, and we shall soon have the means of conveying forces to all the large stations in Bengal and the North-West. We hope that when the next batch of Europeans are sent forward, they will be better cared for than were the detachment of H.M.'s 37th, who left for Berhampore the other day, without tents or accommodation of any kind. Our high officials were never tired of petting the sepoys; perhaps they can now afford to bestow a little thought and attention on the men whose right hands alone uphold British India.

The fire must needs burn out when the fuel is exhausted, and the mutinies have almost ceased, because there are few corps left to be operated upon. A close scrutiny of the Army List, made a few days since by competent persons, gave a total of seven regiments who it was supposed might be relied upon as being really staunch, but for a policy of insurance on even their loyalty, a heavy premium would have to be paid. The most sanguine have grown too cautious now to guarantee the fidelity of any portion of the native army, and men who were abused six weeks since for their anticipations of wide-spread evil, have it now all their own way. The community have become stupefied with the succession of disasters, to which there is no set off, save in the isolated instances of bravery and fortitude furnished by Lawrence, Wheler, and Neile, who challenge admiration by the way in which they hold the ground covered by their tents and guns. Day after day and week after week rolls on, and tidings from Delhi grow fewer and fainter. Twenty-five days have elapsed since General Barnard was to have reached the city with his whole force. The daily journals of Friday last received intelligence from Government that the place had been captured, and three-fourths of the rebels destroyed, the news having come, not to the head of the state in Calcutta, but to a "great banker at Indore." For seven days, utter silence has been maintained by the authorities on the subject, who knowing of course how deeply important it is to thousands that the news of the downfall of Delhi should be circulated, feel perhaps that it is of greater moment still to withhold such information as they are supposed to possess. We question the wisdom of the policy, but time will clear up the meaning of it. The last reliable information from General Barnard's camp was to the effect, that he had made a hole in the city wall, and had sat down before it.

Yesterday Government circulated intelligence that Delhi had been taken, and 7,000 of the insurgents slain. They are reported to have fought with desperation, and to have been at last, not all exterminated, but driven from the city. If this be true, men will scarcely regard it as a victory, for the mutineers will but have been expelled from one stronghold to fly to another. Much credit, however, should not be attached to the report, for though officially communicated, it rests upon slight foundation. The story has travelled far, and passed through many hands. It originated at Ajmere, received strength and circumstantiality at Bombay, journeyed to Nagpore, and finally was transmitted by telegraph to the Supreme Government at Calcutta. From Colonel Durand at Neemuch, intelligence has since been received, that Delhi was stormed on the 14th, and the remainder of the rebels driven into the fort.

It will be recollected that some time back we spoke of a rumour that two native regiments in the camp of Sir Henry Barnard had mutinied, and were in consequence cut to pieces. The story of the crime was true enough, but not so that of the punishment. The Commander-in-Chief was afraid of the responsibility of action, and soothed the mutineers into good-humour. We do not blame the public for believing the whole tale. It was hardly possible to suppose that a body of sepoys would have dared to show insubordination in the presence of several European regiments, but still harder to believe that, having rebelled, they should escape scot free. The censure passed by Lord Dalhousie on Sir Charles Napier for his disbandment of the 66th N.I. would not have been repeated at this moment; besides which, the conqueror of Scinde was not blamed so much for the act as for the needless haste in which it was carried out. The Bombay papers have lengthy details of the subject, but the venilation of it only serves to deepen the heart-sickness resulting from long-deferred hopes of vigorous action.

It is singular that energy and power should be incapable of combination, but certainly recent events would seem to establish the paradox. Col. Neile, with 137 men of H.M.'s 10th regiment, and 37 of the Madras fusiliers, could establish order at Benares and punish three regiments, whilst General Barnard, with some hundreds of European troops at his beck, dared not to cut up the mutinous 5th and 60th. Every man who owes us a grudge believes that the time has come to exact payment. No idea can be formed as yet of the utter state of disorganisation which prevails in the Upper Provinces. Trade is wholly destroyed, the public highways everywhere overrun by thieves, the dispossessed zemindars in nearly all the villages have emerged into daylight, and ousted their successors. Scores of petty rajahs have proclaimed their independence, and make up for defects of title by ceaseless activity in the work of robbery and murder. Of all the villains engaged in those congenial pursuits, Nana Saheb would appear to be the most blood-thirsty. This man is the adopted son of the late ex-peishwa, Bajee Rao, and as such laid claim to the reversion of his enormous pension: but the Government overruled his pretensions, and he is now reaping the harvest of his revenge. He has organized a corps of assassins; and not a day passes in which some poor hunted European is not brought in and literally hacked to pieces. His last act of butchery was of a wholesale character; and it is a pity that he has not a thousand lives to make expiation for it. An alarm had broken out—causelessly, as it seems—at Futtyghur, and 132 persons, men, women, and children, in fifty boats, left that place for Allahabad; but none of them reached their destination. They had advanced as far as Bhitoor, when Nana Saheb first fired upon them, and then pursued them in dhingies. The boats were boarded, and their occupants landed and dragged to the parade ground at Cawnpore. There they were huddled into a heap and fired at, but the work of destruction proving too slow, the wretches closed in with their tulwars and backed them to death. Such an event has not occurred for ages; and yet so accustomed have Anglo-Indians become to these tales, that they are only too thankful that the portals of death were not rendered more horrible, and that the hapless victims were not dishonoured before they were slain. But even the sepoy becomes at last tired of watching the agonies preceding death; and eventually he who was but an amateur and loved killing as a pleasure but rarely to be obtained, and therefore to be indulged in with the greater zest, regards it as a business, and values the process only for its results.

Sattara has been recently thrown into considerable alarm, but the panic has now subsided, owing to the judicious conduct of Mr. Rose. On the 11th of June it was commonly reported that there was to be a rising of all the Mahrattas. There were 500 malcontents in the city, and 800 from the Bore country were en route. Lieut. Kerr was at once ordered off to arrest the insurgents. He had but fifty men, and with these he accomplished in twenty hours fifty miles. His sudden appearance, though he met with no armed force, was productive of no slight good. The would-be rebels were astonished, and when they thought themselves most secure were confronted by an armed force. A puttah-wallah, in the service of Government, attempted to seduce the 22nd regiment from their allegiance, but fortunately, owing to the fidelity of a soubahdar, he was seized. Affairs now wear a much better aspect, and it is not likely, unless any great disaster befalls our troops elsewhere, that the attempt to restore the line of the rajas will succeed. The arrival of an European force from Poonah has given an additional sense of security.

At Hydrabad there has been considerable alarm, and some real danger. Seditious placards were posted in some parts of the town, and a sepoy, the bearer of a treasonable message to the towns-people, was captured. But the Arabs proved staunch, and being placed at the gates of the city, effectually debarred the sepoys from holding any communication with the disaffected amongst the inhabitants. The Bhurtapore levies have proved as treacherous as the Mehidpore contingent, but as a set-off, the Malwah contingent have behaved most nobly. They resisted all the attempts of the cavalry to seize the treasury at Mehidpore, and with far inferior forces finally beat them off. The spirit of dissatisfaction has been carried to most unlikely places; even at Bushire there is a report that a mutinous spirit has exhibited itself in the 16th regiment of Bombay N.I. We attach no credence to the rumour, and feel assured that the companions in arms of those troops who acted so gallantly at Nusseerabad would not willingly even induce a suspicion. But the report is significant, and shows how easily amongst races so fickle as Asiatics, empires may be lost and won.

The outbreak of the local troops at Nagpore has been quelled, and the ringleaders shot by sentence of court-martial. At Seetabuldee matters are in a very unsatisfactory state; but, luckily for the quiet of the province, Kamptee is garrisoned by Madras troops, or the whole country would have been in a blaze of insurrection. Saugor, Jubbulpore, Nagode, and Dumoh were quiet on the 23rd ultimo, and Captain Pinkney had gone up from Jubbulpore, to put down the Thakoors in Chundagore and Jhansi districts. He took with him four companies of infantry from Saugor, a few irregular cavalry, and half a battery of guns. Seetapore has fallen, and it is known that Major Birch and several officers of the 41st are killed, but no names have been furnished. Fears are entertained for the safety of Messrs. Christian, Thomason, and Thornhill, of the civil service, and there is a long list of brave and distinguished men missing, and most probably murdered, to which we dare not refer. We have thought at times that the worst ought to be told, but the task is too painful, and we put it off till a later day; the sense of horror has grown dull, and the day of vengeance seems far distant.

The bulk of the residents at Shahjehanpore were saved, it is said, by the interference of native servants. The mutineers wanted to fire upon the Europeans in the church, but the syces protected them, and enabled them to quit the station, the magistrate, Mr. Ricketts, falling, however, a victim to the rebels. At Banda the 1st N.I., who were in possession of the treasure, were requested by the authorities to allow access to it, but refused. The raja's troops were ordered up to disarm them, but the congenial souls fraternized, and helping themselves to the coin, compelled the Europeans to fly for their lives. It is said that Mr. Dorin has called for a return of all the treasures looted by the rebels. The sum total will remind him of the days of Nadir Shah, and the sack of Delhi, and if the comparison fails with regard to the wealth of the despoiled, it will be exact enough with regard to their helplessness.

MUTINY.

AGRA.—Additional intelligence of the circumstances connected with the disarming of the troops at Agra has been received. The news of the mutiny of the two companies of the 44th and 67th, sent to escort treasure from Muttra, arrived on the 31st of May. The English troops were at once turned out, and the European residents hastened to their appointed places of refuge. The 44th turned out also, and great was their disappointment to find that the English troops were prepared. They felt that nothing could be done, so at once returned to their lines. On the same morning at 6 o'clock the native troops were paraded and addressed by the brigadier. He expressed his grief at having to disarm men of whose fidelity he was assured, but he was compelled to do so in obedience to the wishes of the European residents, or authorities. Accordingly, the sepoys were ordered to pile arms. The 67th at once did so, but the 44th fumbled with the locks of their muskets, and some twenty endeavoured to sneak off. They were ordered back, and the whole regiment threw down their arms. They were again ordered to pile arms; this at last they did laughingly, and in such a manner as to knock down the muskets already piled. The brigadier watched this disgraceful scene, it is said, without a word of rebuke, and the regiments were dismissed. Many of the muskets were loaded, and upwards of 12,000 cartridges were found secreted. The same evening more than 500 of the sepoys deserted, and the remainder, having received the two months' pay which was owing to them, were permitted to go on furlough.

It is some time now since we heard anything of or from friends "far away," nor have we had an opportunity of communicating our situation to them. Living in "the midst of alarms," some anxiety must be felt on our account, which we will endeavour to dissipate by showing how far we are prepared to resist any attack from without, and the precautions taken to prevent any local disturbance by disarming the tag-rag scum, the friends, and arming the wealthy and respectable, the enemies, of disorder. And we doubt not but our present issue will find its way even to Bombay and Calcutta.

It must be remembered then that we have Akhbar's fort here, and never during nor since the days of the old hero has his citadel been the scene of such rapid and complete preparations to endure a siege, or form the lair whence the British lion, in all the confidence of undaunted courage and unsubdued strength, might leap on the insurgent foe. The walls bristle with cannon, with ammunition in abundance and handy; in fact, the whole place exhibits a perfect paraphernalia of war. Our old friend Jotee Persaud has again shown himself the best commissariat officer in the world, by laying in, within thirty hours of receiving the order, stores and provisions to last 10,000 men for a month; old buildings have been repaired and rendered somewhat habitable, and accommodation for upwards of 3,000 individuals secured. In the search for these habitations, and the consequent clearings and excavations, many strange nooks and subterraneous passages and buildings have been discovered, which will, in more quiet times, form curious objects of research for the antiquarian. Among them is a large well, having six ranges of apartments piled one above the other, with steps leading down, the last range reaching the water's edge. The fort, however, is a last refuge, and will at first be used merely as a place of safety for the families of the soldiery, or those requiring special protection, so as to allow them complete freedom of action. However, the European inhabitants, although not in the fort, are not on that account scattered, nor defenceless; but, with a prudence taught by incidents of the mutiny, the largest and strongest buildings in the station have been fixed on by authority as places of rendezvous. Of these there are five or six situated in different convenient parts for the residents. Arms and ammunition are provided from the fort; and those living in the neighbourhood are desired to resort to them in case of any alarm. All men Christians have volunteered to form a garrison for one or other of these posts. The defences of the buildings, which already present a pretty formidable appearance, and the discipline of the men, which, being willingly submitted to, already does them credit, are intrusted to military officers. Those capable of riding horses are formed into cavalry corps, of whom some have already seen service on the Allypore road. A few men have already been dismissed from artillery practice, being pronounced fit to manage cannon.

We regret, however, to observe a want of system and unity in all these efforts, which has a tendency to create selfishness and disunion. We would recommend that all the different parties be considered as forming but different sections of one corps, which, though separately trained, may occasionally be taught to act in concert. The officers of the insurgent corps, who form so numerous a body here, may be placed in command; a regiment of a thousand men may thus be formed little inferior to the European regulars. The overgrown jail in the heart of the civil lines, against whose existence and extension we formerly protested so long and warmly, besides an increased guard of Burkundazes, is commanded by a couple of cannon, and a party of European soldiers, posted on an adjacent hill. In short, forewarned and forearmed, the station has hitherto been shunned by large bodies of the insurgents, who little like any opposition, and have hitherto been only successful against single unarmed men, and weak women and children. —Mofussilite, June 23.

ALLAHABAD.—The Hurkaru states that Mrs. Goldney, Mrs. Block, and Mrs. Strozan, of the Fyzabad party, are safe at Allahabad. There is no certain intelligence of their husbands.

All the fusiliers and the head-quarters of the 84th arrived on the evening of the 21st and morning of the 22nd in the steamer Calcutta and Mirzapore. Of these 300 are being prepared to be pushed on towards Cawnpore without delay. Railway reported to be in good working order as far as Pohunda. The locomotives are said to have been destroyed. But vans are uninjured and will be used. Inhabitants who had left their residence within 20 miles of Allahabad on the road towards Cawnpore are returning.

AURUNGABAD, June 20.—Our 3rd cavalry first showed a bad spirit, which I trust has pretty well settled; and the 1st, which was brought out from Ambah, broke out in open mutiny. The 14th dragoons and a regiment of native infantry, with horse and foot artillery, were called in from Poonah; so that fire has been smothered at least, if not quenched. One man (cavalry) was hanged on the 24th instant, a bavildar (golundauz) was shot on the 26th, and this morning one was blown from a gun, and three (cavalry) were shot by musketry! God send that such prompt and awful examples may have a good effect. Speedy and certain justice to the guilty is real mercy to all others. We are by no means done with the émeute as yet, but we are safe enough while Woodburn's column is here.—Bombay Times, July 3.

BERHAMPORE.—On the 21st of June there was a report that the two native regiments there stationed had mutinied. Immediately all the residents fled to the military hospital, and two guns loaded with grape were brought into the compound. There are now 280 European soldiers in Berhampore, and all alarm has subsided. The political agent and the judge, with their families, bolted to the nawab's palace from Berhampore. Mr. Spencer, the Berhampore magistrate, writes, that the nawab is doing everything in his power to assist the authorities.

BHAGULPORE.—All the ladies and children have left Bhagulpore; many of them are on their way to Calcutta in the steamer Benares. An émeute is expected daily at Dinspore, possibly there is only a vague apprehension that an outbreak may occur. The 5th irregulars and the native infantry are looked upon with great suspicion. A lady, who had only been confined a few hours, was put on board the steamer along with the others. Mutiny is spreading daily.

BANDA.—The only particulars we have of the mutiny at Banda are contained in a letter from Nagode, dated June 19, of which the following is an extract:—

"We have escaped from Banda to Nagode, and, through God's mercy, have been miraculously preserved. On Sunday, the 14th, the Nawab's troops mutinied, as well as the native infantry. The Mahomedans planted their flag and wanted to kill us, but the Nawab stood by us, and we got into buggies and on horses and got off. The place was in a blaze before we had got a mile: it was a fearful scene. We start again to-night for Mirzapore, and hope to reach it safely; but this district is very much disturbed. We have in our party Mr. and Mrs. Edmonstone, Mr. and Mrs. Webster, Messrs. Mayne, Sherer, Clark, Bews, Cousins, Hutchinson, Oswin, and Glyn. We are staying with Major and Mrs. Ellis, at Nagode. Their kindness is extreme, and we have rested two days."

BAREILLY.—The mutiny at Bareilly, which we reported in a few words in our last issue, seems to have been attended with circumstances of peculiar atrocity and treachery. Only the day before their outbreak the sepoys appealed to their officers to recall their wives and families from the hills, where they had been sent for safety; and even to the last moment these miscreants swore to protect their officers to the death. The regiments (viz., the 18th and 68th N.I., and the 8th irregular cavalry) rose en masse on Sunday morning, the 1st of June, a shot gun being fired as the signal, about eleven o'clock. The men at once rushed upon the officers' lines, and opened a fusillade upon the bungalows. They then set at liberty about 3,000 prisoners in the gaol, who laid the station in ruins. Such officers as were able immediately got on their horses, and made for the rendezvous previously agreed upon among them—the cavalry parade-ground. An ineffectual effort was made to bring back the troops to their allegiance, but the scoundrels opened upon them with grapeshot, and they had to ride for their lives. The country having risen in all directions, it was with extreme difficulty, and only by a ride of seventy miles, that the little band at last found safety at Nynce Tal, in the hills, where they had previously sent their families. Here the refugees are congregated in numbers which will probably awe any attempt to attack them, and, as the place is of very difficult approach, we may hope they are in safety.

BENARES AND ALLAHABAD.—We have authentic intelligence from Allahabad, under date the 21st June, embodying all that was known there of the outbreak at Sultanpore. At Allahabad nearly all that was authentically known of the disaster was received from the members of a party, who were at the time of the émeute on detached duty a short distance from Sultanpore, under command of the assistant commissioner, Lieut. Grant. Lieut. Grant was at Bela, a place close to Pertabghur. He had with him about thirty sowars of the 3rd irregular cavalry, 300 newly-enlisted men, and a small guard of the Oudh police force. There were symptoms everywhere of impending misfortune: from the thin attendance at Kutchery, and the slow collection of the revenue, it was plain that the people had lost confidence in the powers of Government, and were relaxing in their allegiance. It was on the 2nd that Lieut. Grant and his party proceeded to Bela. On the 7th news reached of the mutiny and massacre at Sultanpore. On the morning of that day a party of forty-five men, women, and children, fugitives from that station, arrived at Bela; while during the night a number of prisoners who escaped from the Allahabad gaol were seized by the night patrol. All Government servants in the place began to clamour for their pay, which of course Lieut. Grant had no means of supplying, even if so disposed. The Peshkar, by the bye, had decamped the previous evening; and the sowars had stolen a small sum of money which was under their charge. Under these circumstances Lieut. Grant deemed it advisable to place the Sultanpore party under the protection of Goolab Singh Talookdare of Jarole, but although that worthy at first magniloquently promised to defend them with the last drop of his blood, they had no sooner repaired to his house at Purtabghur than he professed his inability to protect the party. On leaving Gholab Singh's house, the carriages, &c. were attacked by a body of Chowkeydars, Ghoratts, and six and seven sowars of Harding's corps. The baggage was all looted, and several of the party narrowly escaped with their lives. They travelled along the Allahabad road till they came to Mulloppoor, the zemindar of which place, Ajeet Singh, gave them shelter. They were detained there for a week, almost in condition of prisoners, till, on the evening of the 14th inst., they started for Allahabad under a strong escort furnished by Ajeet Singh. The whole party reached Allahabad safe on the following day. The names of those brought into Allahabad from Sultanpore, are subjoined. It was reported at Allahabad that only the Cutchery and the civilians' houses had been destroyed; but that four officers had been murdered. These, it is feared, are Colonel Fisher and Captain Gibbings of the 15th irregular cavalry, and Mr. Block and Mr. Stroyan. The remaining officers' Captain Bunbury, Lieutenant Smith, Lieutenant Tucker, Dr. O'Donel, and Lieutenant Lewis are safe in the district. Before Lieutenant Grant's party left Mulloppore, the talookdars had commenced demanding revenue from those zemindars with whom engagements had been made during the summary settlement. They had also resumed some of the villages lost to them by that arrangement. No doubt many of the large Bycharra villages will fight stoutly for their rights; but it is believed that the great majority of the village zemindars will quickly and quietly submit to the authority of the talookdars. It seems, after all, that the Sultanpore districts are not in so disturbed a state as some of the districts in the older provinces.

It is said that the 15th irregular cavalry, the 8th Oude irregular infantry, and the police corps had marched from Sultanpore towards Lucknow, but at Allahabad, it was believed, that they would disperse by the way. As the talookdars are, and will continue to be, all at war among themselves and all the zemindars are interested in the restoration of our authority, the force required to restore order is not a very large one.

List of persons escaped from Sultanpore to Allahabad:—Lieut. and Mrs. Jenkins and two children, Dr. and Mrs. Cooper and one child, Mrs. Bunbury, Mr. and Mrs. O'Donel, Mr. Glynn, Mr. and Mrs. Birrell, two Mrs. Birrell, Mr. Birrell, Mrs. Cavanagh and one child, Mr. F. Cavanagh, Mr. H. Cavanagh, Mr. Sheridan, Mr. and Mrs. Chiaranda and one child, Mr. De Hoxan, Mr. Amies, Mrs. Pope and three children, Mr. and Mrs. Poirn and four children, Mr. Carney.

21st June.—The head-quarters, 6 officers and 180 rank-and-file of her Majesty's 84th, left for Allahabad on the morning of the 19th, on board the steamer Calcutta. Two officers and 80 men of the same regiment started, in the afternoon of the same day, towards Allahabad, to assist in keeping the road open.

22nd June.—Two officers and 84 men of her Majesty's 64th, and 1 officer and 9 men of her Majesty's 78th Highlanders, have arrived by bullock-train. Eight men of her Majesty's 78th Highlanders have arrived by palkee gharee dak. 150 men of her Majesty's 84th are to leave Benares at 5 P.M. on the 23rd, by bullock-train, for Allahabad.

Bewur.—Extract of a letter from Col. Dixon, at Bewur:—

"The 1st Bombay light cavalry has marched in here, and is pitched a short distance from the cantonment, on the Nusseerabad-road. In two days we expect a detachment of two hundred infantry, and forty horse of the Joudpore legion. And two days afterwards a further reinforcement of 250 Europeans, of H.M. 83rd regiment, 200 of the 12th Bombay native infantry, and three horse artillery (Europeans) guns from Deesa.

"In consequence of the large detachment sent from this to Ajmere, the strength of this corps has been reduced to 250 bayonets, but we have now been reinforced by the 1st light cavalry, and large bodies of native horse."

CALCUTTA.—The Phoenix gives a rather singular statement as to the way in which some seditious papers fell into the hands of the government. On Monday night, two youngsters of the pilot service, as they were being driven in a gharry, were run into by another gharry unprovided with lights. They got out to seize the offending coachman, when two baboos with bundles of papers, the occupants of the gharry, rushed out and bolted. Suspicion was aroused, the gharry was searched, papers were found in the native character, and the coach was taken to Fort William. The coachman called in the evening to recover his gharry, and was at once seized, and made a prisoner.

The Volunteer Guards consist of four troops of cavalry and five companies of infantry. A commandant and two adjutants are appointed by Government. The other officers are selected by the volunteers, these appointments being subsequently confirmed by the Government. Non-commissioned staff officers, who are pensioners, or have served their time, are attached to the corps, receiving the pay of sergeants while so employed. The cavalry are divided into squads of five, each under a non-commissioned officer, a certain number to form a troop under the command of a captain and lieutenant. The infantry are divided into squads of ten, each under a non-commissioned officer, a certain number of squads to form a troop under the command of a captain and lieutenant. As a temporary measure, members of the volunteer corps are permitted to supply themselves with brown holland blouses and helmet shaped solah or felt hats with white covers, the trowsers are to be of white American drill; but a neat blue uniform will be furnished hereafter by Government. The cavalry arms are a sabre, pistol, and hog spears, their equipments a black leather pouch, belt, and sling belt for sword. The arms for the infantry are a light infantry fusil with bayonet, and black leather waist and shoulder belts will be their equipments. The volunteers are to obey orders, to furnish nightly patrols and pickets, and no one is to patrol singly, or to stop or seize any native, except in obedience to the officer of his squad. The corps have been paraded. For the cavalry about 200 persons have enrolled, and for the infantry about 800. On the ground there were 600 infantry, and 180 cavalry. The two hours from five to seven were taken up in forming the men into troops and companies. They presented rather a motley group, for the blouses and solah topees were in many instances wanting. But on the whole their first appearance was creditable, and in the event of an outbreak they will do good service.

Our private letters inform us that trade was quite at a standstill; all the merchants, traders, and Europeans, thinking more of a brush with the mutineers than about their various occupations. Some letters say even the writers in the public offices go sulkily about their work. It is, however, gratifying to observe, that the Government loan is fast filling up, a sure sign of the native feeling.

Ramdiai Singh, naik, 9th company 43rd regiment N.I., convicted of deserting, and not reporting a secret combination against the State, was hanged on the branch of a tree yesterday, July 3rd, at half-past five o'clock, on the glacis outside Chowringhee gate at Calcutta. He died uttering gross and indecent imprecations upon the members of the court and the prosecutor. H.M.'s 53rd regiment were drawn up in line, facing the temporary gallows, and the reserve guards, consisting almost entirely of the 43rd, on the other side, facing the 53rd, at a distance of about thirty paces.

CANPORE.—A fugitive from Cawnpore had brought intelligence of the mutiny of the 1st and 56th regiment N.I. together with the 2nd Light Cavalry. The jail was broken open, every bungalow fired, and the treasury looted. It is to be feared that but very few Europeans have escaped, and those who were killed were slaughtered with the most unrelenting cruelty. A Gomashita, who left Cawnpore on the 18th June, has written from Allahabad, to the effect that Sir Hugh Wheeler was not only holding his ground, but would probably continue to do so, as the insurgents were quarrelling among themselves, and many of them had dispersed. This man mentions that the Mahratta chief of Bittore and other rebels had put to death nearly two hundred Europeans, including above a hundred fugitives from, as he says, Nynce Tall, but more likely from Futtygurh. Sir Hugh Wheeler, having been annoyed by a gun brought against him by the insurgents, sent out a party of twenty Europeans to spike it. This they not only succeeded in doing, but killed a good many of the enemy besides.—Phoenix, June 30.

DELHI.—We have been furnished by an officer before Delhi with the following letter:—

Camp before Delhi, June 25.

"Here we are, still without the walls of the imperial city; but here we shall not much longer remain. I dare say you gentlemen of England, who sit at home at ease, are wondering why we did not at once spring over the wall, as Remus did to annoy his brother Romulus. Perhaps one reason was that the walls of Delhi are somewhat higher than those of the infant Rome; and another certainly was that behind those walls were assembled a formidable force of desperate scoundrels, well armed and well disciplined, and numerically stronger than ourselves in the proportion of four to one. However, we can afford to wait, which is more than the rebels can do. Within the walls cholera is raging fiercely, and hundreds of wounded men are in vain longing for the hospitals and medical attendance of their late indulgent masters. Provisions are also running short, and money is only obtainable by plunder. On our part, our commissariat is capably supplied, and so long as the communication is kept open with Meerut, any quantity of grain is procurable from the rich country between that and Moradabad. As for the rains, they don't fall in such a deluge at Delhi as at most other stations up-country. Besides, they have already cooled the air; and even if the floodgates of heaven should open a little too wide for comfort, the water would soon drain off the ridge on which we are encamped. Thus far, the health of the troops has been excellent, owing, in some measure, to the pleasurable excitement kept up by the constant sorties of our much-petted sepoys. The fellows, it must be admitted, fight bravely, which only causes their loss to be so much the greater. On the 23rd, their dead and dying were lying about in all directions; there could not have been fewer than 500 of them. This is a foretaste of what they may expect when we get in; and they need not look for much quarter from our men, who are furious to pay them off for their fiendish cruelties to the poor women and children."

The following letter, addressed to the Delhi Gazette, dated "Camp before Delhi," will be found highly interesting:—

"June 18 (Waterloo-day), 1857.

"My dear —,

"Rather a brisk affair occurred here yesterday. During the day, but particularly in the afternoon, the enemy were observed outside the Lahore gate in large numbers, evidently planning and carrying out some special project. At half-past four o'clock p.m. our troops were turned out to ascertain, if possible, what it might be, and in a very short time they were busily engaged in most laudable musketry practice. Tombs (Major), with his troop of horse artillery, was, as usual, on the ground. The Rifles (H. M.'s 60th), and the Ghoorkas, being the other principal dramatis personae. After a time it was observed that a large Serai, called 'Eed Ghah,' opposite the Ajmere gate, was being occupied by the enemy, and that it had been strengthened from without by the defences which had been constructed during the day.

"It was resolved that the said serai should be ours; though I must tell you that it was an exceedingly strong position, which a few hundred stout-hearted men might hold in face of thousands. It was attacked accordingly and taken in glorious style. The enemy stood for a time; but their show of resistance was, on the whole, brief. The gates of the place were smashed, the enemy's ammunition (two hackery loads) blown up, and the only gun (a 9-pounder) which they had time to bring to the scene of action, spiked, taken, and walked off with tout de suite. Their loss was probably considerable. I should think at least 100 killed, whilst, I rejoice to say, we only lost three or four men in all, exclusive of a small number on the list of wounded.

"In the evening, whilst we were sitting at mess in the open air, General Barnard rode up and asked if Major Tombs was present. On being informed that he was not, the general, without dismounting from his horse, said that he had come to the artillery mess publicly to express his opinion of Major Tombs's gallantry in the affair which was just terminated. He said, considering the strong nature of the enemy's position, the resolute manner in which it was attacked, the masterly way in which our troops were handled, and the happy result of the whole engagement, he had never, in the course of his military experience, seen more remarkable bravery, or cooler, better judgment displayed by any officer in the field, than by Major Tombs of the artillery. The word by which the general characterized it was 'glorious.'

"Tombs was slightly wounded on the arm by a musket bullet, and had two horses shot under him—having already, since we left Meerut, lost three chargers in the same way. With such facts, such results, and such praise as I have mentioned, surely the Victoria Cross would be but a well merited reward to such an officer, who has already his share of medals and ordinary honours.

"The Rifles, Ghoorkas, and Fusiliers behaved splendidly yesterday. Jack Sepoy's courage was of Dutch character—probably springing from Bang Cherus, and like combustibles.

"Our camp keeps healthy, whilst rumour says that in Delhi hundreds of wounded are screaming all day long for the sons of Æsculapius.

"The order of the day here, as regards the siege, seems to be 'delay,' till reinforcements arrive. Shortly (within a week I believe), 1,500 European bayonets, two troops of Horse Artillery, and two Sikh regiments may be expected in this camp. Then for a tragedy, such as Chandney Chowk has certainly not witnessed since the days of Nadir Shah. If anything escapes destruction may it be the Palace Gardens, with the mangoe topes, cascades, and fountains, and the ice-pits. Du reste, let archaeologists and antiquarians write and fight.

"Camp before Delhi, June 24.

"I am sorry it is not in my power to give you any news from this quarter. Yesterday the enemy attacked us in great force from the Subjee Mundee side, and fought most desperately the whole day long. They had a strong position in a village and among the garden walls. Our loss has been great for us, but the loss of the mutineers has been very considerable. We have been quiet to-day; how long it will last it is impossible to say. Ever since the day we have arrived here have the troops been more or less knocked up by exposure to sun and fatigue, &c., but the men, notwithstanding, keep up their truly British spirit, and it is surprising how cheerfully all endure this harassing work, and how manfully through God's blessing, we have repulsed every one of their desperate attacks. We have now been here 16 days. A small portion of the reinforcements arrived yesterday, and Brigadier Chamberlain came in, I hear, to-day."—From the Delhi Gazette Extra, June 27.

The head-quarters of the 9th Irregular Cavalry reached Umballa on the morning of the 25th instant, and is expected to be at Delhi by the 30th.—Ibid.

The 1st Regiment Punjab Cavalry reached Ferozepore on the 25th, and marched again on the 26th en route to Delhi.—Ibid.

"Camp before Delhi, June 21.

"About our two attacks, yesterday and the day before,—the second was made early in the morning. They plied us with round shot, but halted as soon as we began to advance. Our reports from the city to-day are much better; they are said to be disheartened, and deserting in great numbers, and to wish to make overtures. They say, 'What's the use of going out to fight; they always get the best of it.' We certainly did them considerable damage in the attack on the 19th;—the ground was horrid to look at.

"We shall have 400 more Europeans two days hence, and a few days later another reinforcement.

"Our supports are coming from Ferozepore, Jullundar, and Lahore.

"Colonel Becher's wound in the arm is not serious, and he will be fit for work in a few days.

"We are sorry to learn, from later letters, that on the 19th the Nusseerabad mutineers, with some (said to be six) guns, contrived to get in rear of our position and created great confusion. They were of course driven back, with a heavy loss in killed and wounded and two guns; but our loss was also severe, and when we consider that common precaution would have averted this loss, we feel bound to state that there must be great incompetency somewhere; and the sooner the valuable lives of our brave soldiers are intrusted to other care the better. The losses we have to deplore are Col. Yule, H.M.'s 9th Lancers; Capt. Alexander, 3rd N.I.; Mr. Humphrey, and ten men killed; Col. Becher, quarter-master general, and several others, wounded.

"If our brave men, the heroes of our country, are to be made targets of after this fashion, we see no policy in delaying the assault. It would surely be better to lose them and gain the city of Delhi, and the punishment of the traitors within it, than to lose them and gain—two guns!

"The wing of Her Majesty's 61st Regiment reached Loodiana on the morning of the 9th, en route to Delhi, and expected to join Head Quarters Camp on the 22nd; the men all in good health and spirits, anxious to have a charge against the enemy. The wing is armed with the Enfield rifle, with which, they say, they can make good practice at 900 yards; they are dressed in dust-coloured uniform."—Ibid.

DACCÀ.—One hundred and twenty sailors have been sent here, and their presence has given the greatest confidence to the inhabitants; and all alarm has passed away.

FYZABAD.—Of the mutiny of the 22nd regiment at Fyzabad, which occurred on the night of Sunday, June 8th, it is stated that the 6th Oude Irregular Infantry gave the signal, which was immediately answered by the 22nd N.I. The mutineers guarded their officers and their bungalows, placed sentries over all magazines and public property. When the officers remonstrated with the men, they affirmed that they were bound to obey their native officers. A Soubadar of the 22nd has been appointed to the command of the station. The 17th N.I. marched into Fyzabad on the day the officers were leaving it, in regular order. Boats were provided, each officer was permitted to carry off a small bundle of personal property, and 900 Rs. taken from the public treasury were distributed amongst them. Maim Sing, who has been appointed Commander-in-Chief by the King of Oude, has taken all the ladies under his special protection. A Havildar has given protection to the wife of a captain of the 22nd, who was near her confinement, and she is permitted to remain with her husband in the Havildar's hut. The sepoys actually saluted their officers after mutinying, and expressed their regret at what had happened. Col. O'Brien, Cornet Anderson, Lieut. Gordon, and Lieut. Percival, have arrived safely at Dinapore. The following additional particulars are given by one of the party for whose escape boats were provided.—

I remember the officers in the two boats; I accompanied Lieut. Bright, 22nd N.I.; Lieut. Parsons, 6th Oude Irregulars; Lieut. Cantley, 22nd N.I.; Serg. Bushner, serg. major, quartermaster-sergeant, 22nd N.I. and myself were in one boat; Col. Goldney, Lieut. Currie, artillery; Lieut. Ritchie, 22nd N.I.; Serg. Edwards, and Serg. major Matthews in the second boat; three other boats followed behind. We waited two hours for them, but as they did not come we pushed off. As we were getting into the boat we saw the sepoys of the 22nd rushing towards the Treasury; there were about 2 lacs and 40,000 rupees in Capt. Drummond's house, where the treasure had been placed. On reaching a place called Begumunge about 10 miles below Fyzabad, we met some mutineers encamped; at half-past one these men fired on us; there were 800 or 900 of them; about 100 men fired on us when we were 600 yards off. Col. Goldney advised our pushing off to the opposite bank of the Gogra; we got on an island among some jhow fields. The mutineers got into dinghies and followed us; we made for the main boat from the island; there were about 40 or 50 yards of water between. Major Mills was drowned. The sergeant-major, Lieut. Bright, and I were taken prisoners, and taken to the camp of the mutineers, who were men of the 17th and 37th N.I. and the 17th irreg. cav. We were taken before the Soubahdar commanding the rebels. I don't know his name; he was a Hindoo, and belonged to the 17th N.I. He was an old man, slightly made, about 5 feet 8 inches high, with gray hair, no hair on his face, and dark complexion. He asked us who we were; we replied. He then appealed to the Mussulmans on the Koran, and to the Hindoos on the cow, not to injure us, and told us to go away. Two men of the 17th then stepped out and shot the sergeant-major and Lieut. Bright. I was rescued by an artilleryman, and was hid in a serai at Begumunge, and sent off in disguise. While we were talking to the Soubahdar, some fifteen or sixteen of the irreg. Cav. and ten or twelve sepoys went after the remainder of our party. We heard firing across the river; the party returned, and reported they had killed Col. Goldney and six other officers, and that three had escaped. On arriving at Tanda, on the 10th instant, I heard people in the serai saying that six or seven officers had been killed, and two or three were sheltered by some zemindar in Goruckpore district. After this I came via Mattoopoor, Shahgunge, and Juanpore. Capt. Reed, deputy-commissary; Capt. A. P. Orr, assistant-commissary; Mr. E. O. Bradford, ditto; and Capt. Thurburn, reached Rajah Mann Sing's house, and he promised shelter and protection. When I was at Mattoopore I heard that the above officers were going down in boats, with their families, escorted by some of the Rajah's guard. At Tanda I heard that a Mr. Fitzgerald, clerk in the deputy-commissioner's office, and Overseer Sergeant Hurst, who were escorting the families of some sergeants to Allahabad, via Sultanpore, were killed, and the women and children also murdered. I do not know what has become of the officers who were in the boats behind us when we left Fyzabad."

We are now (says a later account, dated June 22) with a friendly Rajah at Gopalpore, on the river, 25 miles from Goruckpore. He has promised to send us to Dinapore, which is distant 120 miles. I believe we are now quite safe, though we have been in danger, and suffered much discomfort and misery. Our party consists of Capt. and Mrs. Reid and two children; Capt. and Mrs. Orr and sister, and five children; Capt. and Mrs. Thurburn and one child; Capt. and Mrs. Dawson and four children; Mr. and Mrs. Bradford; Mr. and Mrs. FitzGerald and child; and Mr. and Mrs. Hurst and child.

A letter from Capt. Orr, dated Gopalpore, near Gogra, June 24, mentions that he and his family, with Miss Troup, and the rest of his party who escaped from Fyzabad, had reached Gopalpore in safety, and expected to be at Dinapore on the 29th. They were to proceed under the protection of the Rajah of Gopalpore, who has shown himself faithful to the British Government.

It is expected that most of the other Fyzabad people will yet turn up.

Mrs. Black, Mrs. Goldney, and Mrs. Strahan have been brought in to Allahabad by that noble fellow Ajeet Singh, who saw Lieut. Grant and the party of thirty-seven Europeans who accompanied him from his camp near Fyzabad.

A letter from Mr. Wynyard, the judge of Goruckpore, reports all quiet at that station on the 24th inst.—Englishman, July 1.

FUTTEHPORE.—The Europeans at Futtehpore kept the rabble at bay for ten days, and with the exception of Mr. Robert Tucker, the judge, all escaped. The latter refused to fly with the rest, and had commissioned the deputy collector to lay a horse dawk for him to Allahabad. This native protégé of the civil service complied, by bringing an armed force who killed Mr. Tucker, he, however, killed sixteen men before he died. His hands, head, and feet were cut off, and held up by the Cotwal for the rabble to see. The above account was given by a native Christian who was eyewitness to the facts above stated. The Government have furnished no information with regard to the rise at Banda, and whether the Nawab of that place was implicated or not, we have received no certain intelligence. As he now enjoys a pension of 40,000*l.* per annum, the Government will be able to punish him, should he have listened to the enemies of the British rule, most effectually.

The following have escaped to Nagode:—J. W. Sierer, Esq. C.S., E. Macnaughten, Esq. C.S., R. Sheathcote, E.I. Railway, W. Bews, do. G. Curren, do. Oswit, do. P. G. Anderson, Esq. agent, — Givnes, Esq. salt department, Mrs. Crawford, and family of seven.

GWALIOR.—The following is a list of those who have lost their lives in Gwalior:—

Major Black, 2nd infantry, Gwalior contingent; Lieut. Proctor, adj. 4th infantry; Dr. Kirk, superintending surgeon; Captains Hawkins and Stewart, artillery; Major Shirriff, 1th infantry; Rev. Mr. Coopland, Sergeant-major Twitcham, Quartermaster-sergeant Webb, Mr. Collins, brigade-major's clerk; Sergeant Cronin.—Mofussilite, June 23.

The following is a list of officers and the families who have arrived at Agra from Gwalior:—

Major Macpherson, Brigadier Ramsay, Mr. Innes, Mrs. Hennessey, son, and infant; Mrs. Christian and child, Mrs. Ferris and three children, Captain and Mrs. Meade and two children, Captain and Mrs. Murray and child, Lieutenant and Mrs. Pearson, Lieutenant Smarley, Dr. McKeller, Mr. Sheet, Mrs. Bryant and child, Sergeant Lynch, artillery; Mr. Martin, customs; two gentlemen of the Electric Telegraph Department, Captain Meade, H.M.'s 8th foot; Lieutenant Ryves, 12th N.I. Mrs. Raikes and child, Mrs. Gilbert and her children, Mrs. Kirke and child, Mrs. Campbell, Mrs. Blake, Mrs. Procter, Mrs. Coopland, Mrs. Monks and two children, Mrs. Cronin and child, Mrs. Webb, and Mrs. Janes. Mrs. Quick died on the road.

GYA.—Some anxiety is felt here, and a detachment of troops has been ordered to protect our treasury, which contains nine lacs of rupees.

INDORE.—Accounts received from Asseerghur, dated the 7th instant, give the following particulars:—The wing of Scindia's contingent had been moved down into the low country outside the fort of Asseerghur, and the company at Boorhaampore had been disarmed and made prisoners by Capt. Birch, with a small party of Bheels. This places the safety of the fort beyond all doubt, as the Bheels are trustworthy men, whose fidelity has never been questioned, and they are of a different race from these rascally mutineers, with whom they cannot possibly have any sympathy whatever.

The fidelity and goodwill of Holkar have been ascertained beyond all doubt. By very recent accounts he has sent troops after the mutineers, who had gone off towards Delhi. He has also offered a large reward for the capture of the chief instigator of the rising, and has sent his remaining valuables into the fort of Mhow. A force under Capt. Orr is moving up rapidly to his assistance, and Brigadier Stuart's movable column is by this time well advanced from Aurangabad.

It is to be hoped that by these energetic measures the peace of Central India may be re-established and preserved.

Capt. Hungerford, of the Bengal Artillery, who commands in the Fort of Mhow, is an officer of nerve and experience, and there is little doubt but he will adopt measures in concert with Col. Durand and Capt. Orr for the relief and security of his charge. Up to the 8th instant all was right in that quarter.—Poona Observer Extra, June 11.

Indore "in common with all Hindustan," has been more or less agitated. So soon as Col. Durand had any reason to suspect that the sepoys at Mhow were disaffected, he called in the Contingents from Bhopal and Rajpoot. There is a suspicion that the Mhow sepoys, seeing that they can effect nothing by themselves, contemplate moving up to Neemuch.

JHANSI AND HISSAR.—General Van Cortlandt, who is marching upon Jhansi and Hissar with the Buffumah Irregular Force, has had two engagements with the rebels in the neighbourhood of Sirsa, defeating them in each instance with severe loss. The last action was a very decided one, and the rebels fled in disorder, leaving 200 men dead upon the field, besides many prisoners in our hands. The troops of the Bikanir Rajah, 2,700 men of all arms, have joined General Cortlandt's force, though what reliance can be placed on these men remains to be seen. Major-gen. Nicholson's movable column was at Jullundur at the date of our last advices, via Lahore.

KISHANAGUR, June 22.—A correspondent complains that the sepoys are permitted to wander about at their pleasure. After they have left Calcutta some distance behind them, they commence to extort money from the villagers. In one village, in Cutwah, the sepoys obtained 500 Rs. in cash, and told the ryots that "it was better for them to pay, as they would not be molested when the sepoys had conquered the country." The above requires confirmation, and the village apparently having no name renders the intelligence unsatisfactory.

MORADABAD.—Here the desire of plunder seems to have prevailed over the murderous propensities of these miscreants, and they gave their officers two hours' grace to make their escape, in which they fortunately succeeded, the whole of the officers (29th regiment) and the residents, with their families, escaping to Nynce Tal, the day after the arrival of the Bareilly refugees. We stated in our last advices that great fear was entertained that the whole of the station of Shahjehanpore had been massacred. We are happy, however, to learn that a good many have escaped, but we are unable as yet to give the particulars.

MHOW.—The 23rd Bengal Native Infantry have mutinied here; the number of Europeans slain is at present unknown, but it is said to be four. The officers are holding a fortified square in the place, where the ladies and all the other Europeans have taken refuge. If the 3rd Nizam's cavalry prove staunch, they will soon be relieved, as Captain Orr was within 50 miles of Mhow some days ago.

NOWGONG.—Concerning the mutiny at Nowgong, we simply know the fact that the head quarters of the 12th Native Infantry and of the 14th Irregular Cavalry stationed there have followed the example of the left wing of each corps which was stationed at Jhansi, but that the officers are safe. The news of the Jhansi mutiny we communicated by last mail, with an account of the bloody tragedy enacted on that occasion by the massacre of all the Europeans in the place. We now learn that, besides, Mrs. Skene and family, Mrs. Browne, Miss Browne, and Miss Davidson were killed. Altogether twelve of our country men and women were slaughtered in this small station. The only persons known to have escaped are two Customs officers, who have reached Agra.

NEPAUL.—Thus far the Nepaulese Government have acted most loyally. It is even said that Jung Bahadoor had sent 5,000 Ghorkas to pursue the Fyzabad mutineers; but this statement requires confirmation.

NERBUDDA VALLEY.—To quell the mutiny, which is now general along the valley of the Nerbudda, from Mhow to Bundelkand, a light field brigade has been ordered to assemble immediately at Malligaum, under the command of Col. C. H. Somerset, and the troops are already on their march thither. This force will be composed as follows:—

- Half-troop Horse Artillery (Europeans)
- A squadron of Her Majesty's 14th Light Dragoons.
- A wing of Her Majesty's 86th regt. Foot.
- 5th regt. Bombay Native Infantry.
- 3rd regt. Nizam's Cavalry.
- A detachment of the Poonah Horse.
- A detachment of Sappers and Miners.

PATNA.—The Nujeebs of the Behar Guards at Patna who resisted the solicitations of, as it is said, the Dinapore Regiment, have been presented with 600 Rs. It is believed that the Dinapore Regiment had nothing at all to do with the sending of the treasonable missive, but that it was the work of some evil-disposed person. The cooly who brought it declared that the letter was given him in the dark, by whom he could not tell. Every citizen has been ordered to give up his arms within twenty-four hours' notice. Only those are henceforth to be permitted to wear arms who can obtain the permission of the magistrate. Patna is still quiet.

THE PUNJAB is perfectly quiet, and many of the disarmed men have begged the restitution of their weapons, and wish to be led against the rebels at Delhi. Were this allowed it would be a very unwise act, for there is no telling how long they would prove loyal.

ROHILCUND.—Of the whole country of Rohilcund, Futtehghur (Furruckabad) was the last station to rise. The 10th regiment has unquestionably given in simply to the force of the dangerous example all around it. The sepoys of this corps continued for weeks to guard the treasury and maintain discipline, while every station near them was in open mutiny. They do not appear to have offered any violence whatever to their officers, but a most melancholy rumour prevailed in Allahabad on the 23rd inst. as to the fate of the unhappy fugitives after they had left the place. We take it from the Englishman of the 29th ult.:—

"Did the report of the massacre reach you of the Futtehghur fugitives? It surpassed in atrocity all that has hitherto been perpetrated; 132 Europeans, men, women, and children, in fifty boats, left Futtehghur for this place.

"They were all the non-military residents of the place. On arrival at Blithoor the Nana Sahib fired on them with the artillery the Government allowed him to keep; one round shot struck poor Mrs. —, and killed her on the spot. The boats were then boarded, and the inmates landed, and dragged to the parade ground at Cawnpore, where they were first fired at, and then literally hacked to pieces with tulwars. Report says not one escaped."

Blithoor is a little place a few miles to the north of Cawnpore, and we sadly presage a confirmation of this intelligence, in view of the state of matters in that neighbourhood. A bloody reckoning will surely be exacted of these fiends in human shape.

REWAH, June 21.—Rewah and Nagode quiet. Banda fugitives expected on 22nd June, when, if possible, immediate steps will be taken to re-occupy that place. The following officers and ladies arrived at Nagode this morning from Banda, viz.—G. Edmonstone, Esq., C.S.; H. B. Webster, Esq., C.S., and Mrs. Webster; P. Clarke, Esq.; Lieut. Bennett; Ensign Fraser, 1st N.I.; Ensign Clarke.

RANEEGUNGE.—There have been serious disturbances between the sepoys and engine-drivers; but now all is quiet.

SAUGOR.—We are as yet without particulars of the mutiny at Saugor, the news of which reached us on the 8th July, from our correspondent at Kamptee, who was able, however, to inform us that no atrocities had as yet been committed, all the officers, and families, with the European artillery, having taken refuge in the fort. Saugor is the chief station in the districts known as the Saugor and Nerbudda territories, and must have a considerable European population, in the shape of writers, conductors, and others, concerning whose safety, after what has transpired at Jhansi, in these same territories, much uneasiness must be felt. It is to be hoped that these men and their families have taken refuge in the fort also.

SATTARA.—On the 11th of June Mr. Rose was informed of a contemplated rising of all the Mahrattas. He heard that 500 malcontents were in the city, and 800 more from the Bore country were about to make a junction. This being effected, a night attack was to be made upon all the Europeans, and the ex-rajah was to be placed upon the throne. Mr. Rose at once ordered Lieutenant Kerr to march out, and intercept the insurgents. In twenty hours Mr. Kerr, with fifty men of the 16th Irregular Horse, marched fifty miles; and though he met with no armed body of men, yet the effect of such a rapid march, and so sudden an appearance at Bore, cannot fail to intimidate loyal subjects of the ex-rajah. On the 14th of June a puttahwallah in the service of Government entered the lines of the 22nd Regiment, and entering into a conversation with a Soubahdar, said that the camp was to be attacked, and desired him to order his men to "fire high." The soubahdar managed to leave the man in conversation with a sepoy, and ran off for Captain Scott. The puttahwallah was immediately arrested, and will be hanged. Affairs are now wearing a much better aspect. Three companies of the light battalion have been recalled from Kolapoor, pickets under European officers have been posted on all commanding points, and the camp surrounded by a chain of sentries. Colonel Malcolm, with a detachment of the 16th irregular horse, is expected at Sattarah daily, and the natives who have given out that the whole of the Bombay army is in a state of mutiny will be grievously disappointed. A European force of seventy men of the 14th light dragoons, and 100 men of the 3rd Europeans have marched from Poonah to Sattarah.

SIRSA.—Brigadier General Chamberlain, commanding the moveable column formed at Jhelum, has arrived at Lahore with the troops. Some cavalry and two guns have been sent on to Sirsa, from which station all the ladies have fled.

TIRHOOT.—The Englishman has received a letter from Tirhoot which mentions that the police jemadar at Mootiara has been arrested. His correspondence which has fallen to the hands of his captors, discloses a plot of the Mussulmans at Patna and Mozaferpore to murder all their officers.

GENERAL WOODBURN'S COLUMN.—General Woodburn's moveable column, originally ordered to Mhow, stands fast at Aurungabad; and this arrangement is doubtless a judicious one, in view of the unsettled state of the Nagpore territories, and the doubtful temper of the Nizam's troops. We regret to learn that the general has been compelled to resign the command through severe sickness. Colonel C. S. Stuart is appointed to succeed him. This force is composed as follows:—

Two squadrons of her Majesty's 14th light dragoons

A battery of European horse artillery

25th regiment Bombay native infantry

24th ditto (one wing)

The light infantry battalion (Persia).

General Woodburn's column has already crushed the rebellion at Aurungabad, where our readers may remember a regiment of the Nizam's cavalry mutinied; and the presence of the force at that station will doubtless overawe effectually any open disaffection in that quarter for the future.

LATEST OFFICIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Lahore, June 27.

Intimation has been received from Umballa that all remained quiet at Delhi during the 24th and 25th. The loss of the mutineers during the fight of the 23rd is stated to have been 400.

Colonel Martley's force was to reach Delhi to-day, having reached Lassoali at the last accounts.

Several regiments of Punjab horse have been despatched from Lahore, and are now on their way to join the force before Delhi.

R. MONTGOMERY, Judicial Commissioner.

The men of Major Knatchbull's battery have been disarmed at Meeran Meer.

Judicial Commissioner's Office, Lahore, June 29.

It is reported from army head-quarters that the mutineers made several attacks on our pickets on the 27th, but were repulsed with loss, there being but trifling casualties on our side. The rains appeared to have set in. The bridge at Bagput has been broken, and the river has now become swollen by the rains.

Intelligence has been received from Peshawar that the 10th Irregular Cavalry has been disarmed at Nowshera.

A considerable body of Jowannah horse have reached Lahore on their way to Umballa.

The number of irregular horsemen despatched from Lahore during the last month is fully equal to the strength of three regiments.

R. MONTGOMERY, Judicial Commissioner.

Judicial Commissioner's Office, Lahore, June 30.

Some further brief details have been received by telegraph of the skirmishes which occurred before Delhi on the 27th.

It is stated that our artillery did great execution, while the killed on our side did not exceed 12. Lieutenant Harris, of the 2nd Fusiliers, was wounded, and Lieutenant Chalmers, of the Guides, slightly.

A letter received from Delhi, from the political agent at Bhurt-poor, dated the 22nd, states that all was well at Lucknow and at Allahabad up to the last advices; and at the latter station it is stated that the mutineers were very severely dealt with by the Sikh regiment stationed there. The letter further mentions that a large force of Europeans was collected at Benares, which will doubtless have moved upwards ere this.

It is reported that the mutineers of the Gwalior contingent are endeavouring to coerce the Maharajah, but their ultimate intentions are not known.

Further details have been received of the action at Delhi on the 23rd, on which occasion the efforts of the mutineers were more determined than on any previous one. It is said that their dead, at the close of the day, were counted by hundreds, their aggregate being estimated at not less than 1,000. The gardens and buildings outside of the city, in which they had sheltered themselves, and given us much annoyance, have been taken possession of by us; and it is said that, since the above date, they have, in a marked manner, evinced less boldness in their attacks than heretofore.

R. MONTGOMERY, Judicial Commissioner.

(From the Delhi Gazette Extra.)

News from Sir Henry Lawrence of the 13th Inst., where he was holding on well at Lucknow.

There have been a good many mutinies of regiments in the interior, but he had still with him in the cantonments a large remnant of corps that had mutinied, and that were behaving in an orderly and satisfactory manner.

Latest date from Delhi the 18th inst.—“The enemy endeavoured on the 17th to erect a battery to annoy our picket at Hindoo Rao's house. They were charged on that evening, driven back and one of their guns was captured.”

H. A. PRINSEP, A.D.C.

Government House, June 24.

Intelligence has been received, through Meerut, that Colonel C. Troup has reached Nynce Tal in safety from Bareilly.

LETTERS FROM THE BRITISH CAMP, TO THE 16TH.

An early assault is expected on the arrival of reinforcements. 1,000 Punjab infantry were expected to reach on the 18th. The 8th Queen's, a wing of the 61st, and three or four Punjab regiments, a troop of horse artillery, two companies of foot artillery, and large supplies of ordnance and other ammunition, are being pushed on from the Sutlej.

DARJEELING—MURDER OF LIEUT. E. WHISH.

The following is from Darjeeling, dated 17th June:—“You will be likely to see in the newspapers an account of a horrible murder which was committed in this station on Monday night, the 15th instant, but as it is not unlikely that the report may be exaggerated and mixed up with the sepoy affair, I write these few lines to assure you that the sepoys continue to be peaceable, orderly, and well-behaved. The murdered man is Lieut. E. Whish, of the 10th N.I.; his murderers are suspected to be his own servants, all of whom were those abominably treacherous Booteahs. Lieut. Whish detested Bengali servants, and would have no others than Booteahs to wait on him. It was known that he had lately drawn about Rs. 1,000 from the Darjeeling treasury. He lived by himself in a lonesome, distant, and unfrequented part of the station. He was last seen alive by a German family, named Stoelke, with whom he took tea on Monday night. Early on Tuesday morning one of the servants gave the alarm that the sahib was lying dead in bed with his throat cut from ear to ear. Two of the servants are not forthcoming, and a third has been found to have blood upon his clothes. All the cash is gone as also a pair of pistols. The derangement of the bed affords proof that the poor officer must have struggled hard for his life, and that the murder must have been effected by more than one person. All the servants have of course been put under a guard. This shocking affair has, you may well imagine, created a great sensation throughout the station.

“The sepoys are quite innocent. The murder has been evidently committed for the sake of plunder. It unfortunately happened about the same time that a person went down to the sepoy lines, and after asking the men a variety of improper questions assured them that Government would hang and shoot them all if they attempted to follow the example of the sepoys up-country. The sepoys not exactly comprehending the nature of this threat, and feeling greatly alarmed, went off to the commanding officer to complain. He in his turn went off to Mr. Junior Secretary Buckland; and the consequence has been that there has been a nice little row about nothing at all.”

The LONDON MAIL of May 26 arrived at Calcutta, June 28 (per Nubia). The mail of July 10 left Aden, July 28 (per Bengal).

THE VOLUNTEER GUARDS.—Mr. Peacock, in introducing the bill for the good order and discipline of the Volunteer Guards, observed that the thanks of the Government were due to the gentlemen of the corps for their public spirit, and for the energy with which they had discharged their duties. At the same time, he thought that when on actual duty they should be subject to the articles of war for European troops “only in so far as they are applicable to officers.” He further provided that general courts martial should consist of not less than thirteen members; and that regimental courts should be convened by the commander of the corps, three members constituting a quorum. The regimental courts martial may award, with the sanction of the commanding officer, a fine not exceeding fifty rupees, and in default of payment, the offender may be dismissed. Any person who resists one of the volunteers renders himself liable to a fine of 200 Rs. or imprisonment for six months. The government have the entire control of the body, and can vest their authority in any person they please.

BARRACKS FOR THE EXPECTED TROOPS.—Some of the Calcutta journals suggest that the churches should be used as barracks for the troops whose arrival may be expected daily. We suppose that the Government House might be made available for such a purpose with less impropriety than the desecration proposed.

THE EDITORS OF FOUR NATIVE NEWSPAPERS, the Bhaskur, Sultani ul Akhbar, Doorbin, and the Sundarchar Soodarbhassur have been prosecuted by Government for issuing seditious publications. They were all committed for trial at the next criminal sessions, and bound over on heavy recognizances to appear. Mr. Cecil Beadon appeared on behalf of the Government.

THE DAK CARRIAGES which conveyed 50 European soldiers from Benares to Allahabad were on their return attacked. The drivers were beaten, the carriages broken, and the horses taken away. Dak communication between Allahabad and Benares has since been opened.

THE KING OF OUDE.—An order has been issued that the King of Oude be treated with all possible respect. How will the King of Oude be punished? The Sepoy who gave the information which led to the arrest of the Ally Nucky Khan has merely been promoted to the rank of a Havildar; a recompense by no means proportionate to the service performed, any more than the punishment to the mutineers has been adequate. The apartments occupied by the King are surrounded on all sides by closed verandahs occupied by European troops.

THREE HUNDRED MUSSULMANS have been holding seditious meetings at Entally.

THE POLICE IN CALCUTTA.—Whilst the police of the suburbs of Calcutta were serving out arms to those who required them, the police in Calcutta itself were snubbing all whom they found furnishing up pistols or discharging old charges. The police are becoming very impertinent, pooh-poohing any danger, and interfering in an unwarrantable manner. Lord Canning has permitted arms to be supplied; clearly, therefore, men should be allowed to put them in a serviceable condition.

THE AMEERS OF SCINDE residing at Dum-Dum are permitted to retain about 200 armed men as followers. These men are, it appears, only furnished with firearms when they accompany the Ameers on hunting expeditions to the Soonderbuns. Very few of them are Scindians.

A ROBBERY on an extensive scale has been committed on the farm of Messrs. D. Wilson and Co. at Itally, now occupied by Mr. Gregory. The robbers, who entered the premises by breaking open the venetians, arranged their plans admirably. They carried off a sword, a loaded musket, Company's paper to the value of 5,000 Rs. and valuable jewels. Mr. Gregory did not awake, otherwise he would probably have been murdered, and that, too, by his own sword or musket.

BRIGADIER PONSONBY, now commanding at Benares, has been removed from the brigade staff of the army, in consequence of failing health. Brevet Lieut.-Colonel P. Gordon, of the 11th N.I., and commandant of the regiment of Loodianah, has in consequence been appointed to the command of the Benares district.

THE SOCIETY FOR THE PROPAGATION OF THE GOSPEL have sold the English Church at Clittoor to Government, for Rs. 1,142. It will be immediately repaired at a cost of Rs. 420, and furnished with every requisite for the performance of Divine Service according to the ritual of the established church.

ACCIDENTAL DEATH.—The Hurkaru records the death of a Mr. McCulloch under peculiarly distressing circumstances. He was an employé of the railway company, and laid himself down to sleep outside the engine-shed. He went to sleep on the rails, and was run over by the pilot-engine. His two legs were cut off above the hip-joint, his arms smashed and dislocated, and, after enduring frightful torture, he died in the railway hospital.

A BRITISH AGENT has been sent to reside in Karennee. The Burmese are making encroachments upon the Karennee territory, and the agent is appointed to show that the British Government have the Red Karens under their protection.

MR. REILLY, of Dinagore, has been suspended from his office for writing a letter, commenting upon the conduct of Mr. Colvin, to the Englishman. The letter, which was said to be strictly private, was inserted by some mistake.

MR. JOHN SCOTT has been appointed sub-assistant commissioner of the Santhal Pergunnahs, on a salary of Rs. 200 per month.

A DESPERATE END.—The Hurkaru has received a letter from Benares. A man has arrived from the Upper Provinces who narrates the heroism of an English officer. He was travelling with his wife, and in all probability seeking some place of safety, when he was set upon by many sowars. The officer defended himself bravely, and shot seven of them dead; at last, losing all hope of preservation, he, preferring death to disgrace, shot first his wife and then himself.

DEATH OF LIEUT. WILLOUGHBY.—We regret extremely to say that news was received yesterday from Meerut of the death of the gallant Willoughby, the result of the frightful injuries he received when he blew up the Delhi magazine.

DR. E. ROER has been appointed inspector of schools at Cuttack, Midnapore, Balasore, Pooree, and Sumbulpore. Mr. Brennand, the officiating principal of Dacca College, has been appointed principal of the Presidency College.

MR. L. CLINT, officiating principal of the Presidency College, has been appointed principal of the Krishnagar College, but is to remain in his present post until the arrival of Mr. Sutcliffe; W. Brennand, the officiating principal of the Dacca College, has been appointed pukka principal.

THE NAWAB OF MOORSHEDEBAD.—There is not the slightest truth in the report circulated by a Calcutta newspaper, that the Nawaub Azim of Moorshebad was suspected of being implicated in the present insurrection. By education and habits the Nawab is almost an European, and much too sagacious to become a party to such a mad enterprise at that attempted by the insurgents.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

THE RAMGURH IRREGULAR CAVALRY AND INFANTRY.

Fort William, June 4, 1857.—The officer commanding the Ramgurh force has reported that the native officers and men of the Ramgurh irregular cavalry have unanimously requested that the Government should be assured of their earnest desire to have an opportunity of proving their fidelity to the State.

It has further been brought to notice that these brave men have written to their companions now absent on leave in the Delhi territory, desiring them to tender their services to the general commanding the Meerut division.

A similar good spirit is stated to animate the Ramgurh light infantry.

The Governor General in council receives this report with high satisfaction.

The Ramgurh irregular cavalry is distinguished by its services in Burmah; and of its firm allegiance the Government has no doubt.

The Governor General in council hereby conveys his thanks to the Ramgurh force for this demonstration of their loyalty; and he directs that the offer of their services be entered on the records of the army of Bengal, and that this general order be read at the head of every regiment, troop, and company in the service, at the parade ordered for the purpose.

The Right Hon. the Governor-General in council has received with much satisfaction a report, that the whole of the 6th regiment native infantry at Allahabad have expressed their loyalty to the Government, and their desire to be led against the mutineers at Delhi; and also a further report, that the three companies of the 34th regiment native infantry at Barrackpore have expressed themselves in the same soldier-like manner.

The Governor-General in council thanks the men of these regiments for this mark of their devotion, and directs that this tender of their services, at a time when so many misguided soldiers of the Bengal army have swerved from their allegiance to the state, shall be placed among the records of Government, and shall be read at the head of every regiment, troop, and company, at parade ordered for the purpose.

MARTIAL LAW.—AJMERE AND NEEMUCH.

PROCLAMATION.—In further continuation of the proclamation of the 16th ult., the honourable the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces is pleased to declare Martial Law to be established in the districts of Ajmere and Neemuch, in conformity with the provisions expressed in the proclamation aforesaid.

By order of the honourable the Lieutenant-Governor N. W. P.

C. B. THORNHILL,

Officiating Secretary to Government, N. W. P.

SIR HENRY SOMERSET.

Fort William, June 4.—The Right Honourable the Governor-General of India in council is pleased to direct that his Excellency Lieut.-gen. Sir Henry Somerset, K.C.B. and K.H. Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay army, the senior officer in India, shall assume the command of H.M.'s and the Hon. Company's forces in India, until further orders.

His Lordship in Council is pleased to make the following appointments:—

Major-gen. T. Reed, C.B. H.M.'s service, commanding the Peshawur division, the senior officer in Bengal, is appointed provincial Commander-in-Chief, until the arrival at Calcutta of Lieut.-gen. Sir P. Grant, K.C.B. Commander-in-Chief of the Madras army, whom it has been determined by the Governor-General in council to place in the position of acting Commander-in-Chief in Bengal, pending the appointment of successor to his Excellency General the Hon. George Anson, deceased.

Major-gen. Sir Henry Barnard, K.C.B. H.M.'s service, commanding the Sirhind division, is appointed to take command of the field force proceeding against Delhi.

Brigadier Sydney John Cotton to be a brigadier-general, and to command the Peshawur division during the time that Major-gen. Reed holds the office of provincial Commander-in-Chief.

THE CALCUTTA MILITIA.

Fort William, June 4.—The Calcutta regiment of militia has, through its commanding officer, preferred a request to be permitted to proceed to any part of the empire, by sea or by land, in which the government of India shall consider that its services may, at the present moment, be most useful.

The right honourable the Governor-General in Council has received with great satisfaction this expression of zeal and loyalty on the part of the Calcutta militia.

This is not the first occasion on which this regiment has come forward to place its unrestricted services at the disposal of the government. The public spirit now again evinced by the Calcutta militia calls for the thanks of the government of India, and the right honourable the Governor-General in Council directs that the thanks may be publicly conveyed to the native commissioned officers, non-commissioned officers, and sepoy of the regiment, and be recorded in general orders, and read at the head of every regiment, troop, and company in the service, at a parade ordered for the purpose.

H.M.'S FORCES IN INDIA.

Fort William, June 12, 1857.—The detachment of royal artillery and wing of her Majesty's 37th regiment, arrived in the steam frigate Semiramis, and steam vessel Cape of Good Hope, are temporarily brought on the establishment of the Bengal presidency from this date.

TRIAL OF HEINOUS OFFENCES.

Fort William, Home Department, June 15, 1857.—The Governor-General in Council hereby extends to the whole of the north-western provinces of the Presidency of Bengal and to the provinces of the Panjab and Oude, the operation of Act No. XVI. of 1857, entitled "An Act to make temporary Provision for the Trial and Punishment of heinous Offences in certain Districts."

His lordship in council also hereby authorizes the Lieut.-Governor of the north-western provinces, and also every commissioner of revenue and circuit in the said provinces, and the chief commissioners in the Panjab and Oude, severally, to issue a commission or commissions, under section VII. Act No. XIV. of 1857, for the trial of persons charged with having committed any of the offences mentioned in that Act, or punishable by sections I. and II. of Act No. XI. of 1857, or by the aforesaid Act No. XVI. of 1857.

By order of the Right Honourable the Governor-General of India in Council.

CECIL BEADON,
Sec. to Government of India.

RATIFICATION OF THE TREATY WITH PERSIA.

Notifications.—Fort William, Foreign Department, June 18, 1857.—Authentic intelligence having been received that the ratifications of the treaty, which was signed at Paris by the plenipotentiaries of England and Persia on the 4th March last, were exchanged at Bagdad on the 2nd of May, the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council is pleased to direct that a royal salute shall be fired from the ramparts of Fort William, as well as at every principal station of the army, in honour of the peace which has been concluded.

The Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council has had the satisfaction of announcing from time to time the signal successes which have been achieved by the combined action of the military and naval forces, under the direction of Lieut.-gen. Sir James Outram, K.C.B., on the coasts and in the interior of Persia.

The surrender of Bushire on the 10th December, after a brief and ineffectual opposition; the operations against the Persian entrenched camp at Borazgoon; and the complete victory obtained over the Persian army at Khooshab on the 8th February; the bombardment and capture of Mohamreh on the 26th March; and the brilliant attack, by a few hundred men, against Ahwaz, on the 1st April, followed by the precipitate flight of the whole Persian army serving in that quarter, have signally instanced the vigour, the enterprising spirit, and the intrepidity with which the operations against Persia, both by sea and land, have been directed, and have earned for those who had a share in their execution the cordial approbation and the thanks of the Government of India.

The Governor-General in Council has now the gratification of announcing that the ratifications of the Treaty, which was signed at Paris by the plenipotentiaries of England and Persia, on the 4th March last, were exchanged at Bagdad on the 2nd May; and the entire withdrawal of the British forces from the soil and the waters of Persia, awaits only the fulfilment of the conditions of peace, which were accepted by the plenipotentiary of Persia on her behalf.

The peace which has been thus concluded accomplishes the principal objects of the war without needless humiliations to Persia, and places the relations of the British Government with that country, both political and commercial, on an improved footing. Though the negotiations by which this result has been obtained were conducted in Europe, their rapid and unchecked progress, and their early completion must be ascribed, in no small degree, to the vigorous operations and the successful achievements of the Persian expeditious force.

The brilliant reputation of Lieut.-gen. Sir James Outram, K.C.B. has acquired additional lustre from the promptitude, the vigorous energy and ability with which he has exercised the command entrusted to him; and the Governor-General in Council desires to record his high sense of the important services rendered by this distinguished officer.

The Governor-General in Council deeply laments that Major-gen. Stalker, C.B. should not have lived to witness the successful termination of the war, in the commencement of which he took so prominent and conspicuous a part.

His Lordship in Council cordially appreciates the zealous and active exertions of Brigadier-gen. Havelock, C.B. and commends the order and despatch with which the troops were landed and formed at Mohamreh under his direction.

To Brigadier Homer, who shared with his Brigade in the attack on Bushire, and in the operations against Borazgoon; to Brigadier Wilson, K.H., who commanded the 1st Brigade of Infantry at Borazgoon and Mohamreh; to Brigs. Hamilton and Hale, who were present with their Brigades in the advance upon Mohamreh; and to Brig. Stewart, who was at the head of the Cavalry 2nd Division on the same occasion; to Lieut.-Col. Shephard, who succeeded to the command of the 1st Infantry Brigade on the lamented death of Brig. Stopford; to Col. Stisted, who led the 1st Brigade 2nd Division in the march on Borazgoon and the victory of Khooshab; to Lieut.-Col. Tabb, who commanded the Cavalry Brigade on the same occasion as well as at Bushire; and to Lieut.-Col. Trevelyan, Commanding Artillery, who took a part in every operation of the troops, except that against Ahwaz;—to all these, whose valuable services have been gratefully acknowledged by the late Maj.-Gen. Stalker, C.B., and Lieut.-Gen. Sir James Outram, K.C.B., the Governor-General in Council begs to offer his warmest thanks and the assurance of his heartfelt approbation.

The late Maj.-gen. Stalker, and Lieut.-gen. Sir James Outram, K.C.B. have expressed their obligations to the officers commanding regiments and batteries of artillery, on the several occasions which called for their exertions; and the Governor-General in Council has great satisfaction in publicly tendering his best thanks to Maj. Sterling, of H.M.'s 64th foot; to Maj. McIntyre, who took command of H.M.'s 78th Highlanders during the expedition to Borazgoon; to Lieut.-col. J. S. Ramsay, of the 2nd Bombay European light infantry; to Maj. Manson, of the 4th Bombay rifles; to Lieut.-col. Shephard and Captain Macleod of the 20th; Maj. Travers, of the 23rd, and Col. Macan and Capt. Bowditch, of the 26th Bombay native infantry; to Capt. L. Stephen Hough, of the 2nd Belooch battalion; to Maj. Blake, Capt. Hatch, Capt. Gibbard, and Capt. Aikin, commanding, — the first, a troop of horse artillery, and the others, light field batteries; to Capt. Dickinson, of the Sappers and Miners; and to Capt. Forbes, of the 3rd Bombay light cavalry, whose gallantry on the field of Khooshab was conspicuous.

The Governor-General in Council cordially unites with the late Maj.-gen. and the Lieut.-gen. Commanding the Expeditionary Force, in expressing his marked acknowledgments of the ever ready and efficient assistance afforded by Col. Lugard, c.n. H.M.'s 29th Foot, the chief of the staff, and the several officers composing the general staff. To Capt. Malcolm Green, military secretary, Lieut. Sykes, and Capt. Hervey, a.-de-c., Capt. Arthur, Persian interpreter, and Maj. Taylor, transferred from the Persian mission, in the capacity of political secretary, as well as to Lieut.-col. Lord Dunkellin, detached from the staff of the Governor-General, who volunteered his aid on the personal staff of Lieut.-gen. Sir James Outram, k.c.b.; to Capt. Hunter, who served as a.-de-c. to the late Maj.-gen. Stalker on the attack on Bushire; and to Mr. Johnstone, of the Indian navy, to whose knowledge of the country, and unwearied zeal the late Maj.-general was much indebted, the Governor-General in Council begs to offer the expression of his approbation.

The valuable assistance afforded on every occasion of difficulty and danger, and especially in the brilliant expedition against Ahwaz, by Capt. Kemball, political agent in Turkish Arabia and consul-general in Bagdad, has been highly commended by Lieut.-gen. Sir James Outram, k.c.b. and merits the unqualified approbation and the hearty thanks of the Governor-General in Council, no less than does the gallantry of Capt. Hunt, H.M.'s 78th Highlanders, and of the other military officers who accompanied the expedition in question.

The Indian navy has taken a conspicuous part in the operations which have now been brought to a termination, and the Governor-General in Council must not omit to put on record the high sense which he entertains of its most valuable and important services.

To Rear-admiral Sir H. Leeke, K.H., royal navy, the Governor-General in Council begs again to offer his sincere acknowledgments for the promptitude and energy with which he gave his assistance in landing the troops at Hallila Bay, and in attacking the fortifications of Bushire. To Capt. Griffith Jenkins, captain of the fleet; to Acting-commander Adams, of the Assaye; and Lieut. Clarkson, of the same vessel; to Capt. Young, Commanders Rennie and Macdonald, and Acting-commander Foulerton, much praise is due for their gallantry on the same occasion.

The Governor-General in Council, however, desires specially to record his admiration both of the skill and energy displayed by Acting-commodore Young, I.N. (upon whom the command of the Gulf squadron devolved on the lamented death of Commodore Ethersey), in the conduct of the difficult naval operations against Mohamreh, and of the signal success with which they were crowned.

The Governor-General in Council has further remarked with the highest gratification the distinguished conduct of Commander J. Rennie, who, since the departure of Capt. Young, has most efficiently commanded the naval forces in the Persian Gulf. In the enterprising advance upon Ahwaz, the signal success obtained was due, in a very large measure, to the judgment and resolute gallantry of this able officer.

The acknowledgments of the Government are also due to Commander Selby, of the Semiramis; Commander Grieve, of the Cuce; Acting Commander Manners, of the Victoria; and to Lieutenants Commanding Tronson, of the Falkland, and Worsley, of the Ajdaha, who contributed largely to the success of the day; and the special thanks of the Government are claimed for Commander Adams, for the efficient manner in which he seconded the attack on the northern forts at Mohamreh.

Acting Commodore Young has commended the conduct of Lieut. Chitty, commanding the Berenice; of Commander Nesbitt, agent for transports; and of Acting Masters Commanding M'Laurin, of the Napier; Holland, of the Comet; Fletcher, of the Planet; Neale, of the Assyria; Davies, of the Ethorsey flat; and Dark, of the Rough Lindsay, for the effective aid which they respectively rendered in the attack on Mohamreh; and the Governor-General in Council has great pleasure in acknowledging their good services.

Finally, the Governor-General in Council wishes to offer his hearty thanks to all the officers and non-commissioned officers, of whatever designation, and to all the soldiers and sailors of the force, for the bravery, the endurance, and good conduct which they have displayed during the several operations in which they have been engaged.

It will afford the highest gratification to the Governor-General in Council, to recommend the arduous and successful services of the military and naval forces on the coasts, and in the interior of Persia, to the most favourable consideration of the Honourable Court of Directors and her Majesty's Government.

G. F. EDMONSTONE,
Secretary to the Government of India.

GENERAL GRANT.

Head-quarters, Calcutta, 17th June, 1857.—With reference to general order by the Governor-General in Council, No. 797, of the 17th instant, Lieut.-General Sir Patrick Grant, K.C.B., has this day assumed the command in chief of the Bengal Army. Sir Patrick Grant has been attached to the Bengal Army for upwards of six and thirty years. He has served with it in quarters and in the field; he has fought and bled in its ranks; and he had a heartfelt pride in believing it to be second only to the unequalled British army in every soldierly quality, and inferior to none in its loyalty and devotion to the state, and attachment to its officers. These illusions have now been most painfully dispelled. Many regiments have broken into open and defiant mutiny, and forgetful of their oath of fealty to the state, and their former well won high reputation, they have steeped themselves in crime, and committed a series of cowardly murders and cold blooded atrocities, so cruel and ruffianly as to be almost beyond belief. A heavy retribution awaits those miscreant traitors. Many of them have already paid the penalty, and all will ere long have it made manifest that the Government, which treats its good and faithful servants with unexampled liberality and unbounded consideration, is all-powerful to punish as well as to reward. As Adjutant-General of the army for a period of many years, Sir Patrick Grant had the best opportunity of becoming thoroughly acquainted with every regiment of every branch of the service, and he has the satisfaction to feel that he never has done an injustice to a soldier, nor refused to have any complaint (if preferred in a respectful, becoming manner) inquired into, and, if well founded, redressed; and the army may rest assured that the same principle which guided him as Adjutant-General will continue to govern the Commander-in-Chief in his present high position. If any soldier has a complaint or representation to make, the Commander-in-Chief calls upon him to come forward manfully and respectfully and prefer it, and he shall be listened to. All will receive even-handed and impartial justice; but his Excellency warns the turbulent and ill-disposed that he will pursue with unrelenting severity all who offend against discipline and bring disgrace upon the army to which they belong. The Governor-General of India has twice assured the native troops that there is no intention on the part of the British Government to interfere with their religion, and the Commander-in-Chief now repeats that assurance. In former times, the Mohammedan rulers of India tyrannically compelled thousands upon thousands of Hindoos of the highest castes to abandon their own religion and embrace Mohammedanism; and under Hindoo governments, even of a recent date, the outward and public observances of the Mahomedan religion were prescribed and forbidden. But the British Government never has interfered, and never will interfere, with the religion of any class of its subjects. There is, and ever has been, universal toleration for all; and all are free to worship as they please, secure from molestation or hindrance. This is well known and understood; and the native troops are again emphatically warned not to allow themselves to be duped and fooled into believing aught to the contrary. The Commander-in-Chief now calls upon the European officers of all grades, and the native portion of the army which has remained true and faithful to their oath and their colours, cordially and heartily to unite with him to re-establish order, and efface the memory of the foul stain which now unhappily attaches to the once honoured reputation of the Bengal army. This order is to be read and carefully explained at the head of every regiment, troop, and company in the service. His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief is pleased to make the following appointments on his personal staff: Col. F. P. Haines, her Majesty's service, unattached, to be military secretary; Lieut. A. C. Grant, 8th light cavalry, to be aide-de-camp; Lieut. Henry Fane, her Majesty's 84th foot, to be aide-de-camp; Lieut. G. T. Gough, her Majesty's 12th royal lancers, to be an extra aide-de-camp; Brevet Lieut.-Col. J. M. B. Fraser Tytler, commandant of the 9th irregular cavalry, to act as aid-de-camp until further orders.

MADRAS.

THE FIRST MADRAS N.I.

The Court of Inquiry into the so-called mutiny of the 1st N.I. sat with closed doors, and their proceedings consequently did not transpire, but the result is apparent from the General Orders in Tuesday night's Gazette. Lieut.-Colonel Duke has lost his brigade, and is posted to a regiment, with which he will have to serve under a brigadier, while Lieut.-Colonel Goldsworthy is sent to do duty as second in command of the corps, which has the president of the late Court of Inquiry at its head! As a G. G. O. on the subject will doubtless appear very shortly, we shall for the present abstain from commenting on these indications of the displeasure of Government and the Commander-in-Chief, but we must notice the light thrown upon the matter by the Examiner of Tuesday. Our good brother states that censure has been freely served out, and that the major-general commanding the northern division comes in for his share of it. At the bottom of the business, however, is said to lie a blunder, or want of care at any rate, on the part of the quartermaster-general, who has likewise been lectured about the necessity of weighing well the import of the words used by him in conveying his instructions, so that they may bear precisely the significance intended. It would appear that, owing to disregard of this wise rule, the instructions sent up to Major-General Tullock were anything save clear, and that he, misconceiving their import, went beyond his tether and issued orders more stringent than were necessary, for which error doubts are thrown on his fitness to retain his command. Colonel Duke, the brigadier, refused to disobey the division orders, whereas it is held that he should have done so, pending a reference, and he is punished accordingly for default, as we have seen above. Lieutenant-Colonel Goldsworthy's offence seems to have consisted in his endeavouring to accommodate his men with carriage, and listening to those who declined to march without it; wherefore his punishment is as gazetted. It is a queer affair altogether, and we feel curious to learn all the hidden particulars of it. So far as we can perceive at present, the quarter-master-general is chiefly to blame.

As regards the misbehaving regiment, Subadar Laul Sing is dismissed the service, and Subadar Mahomed Cassim removed to another regiment; but these punishments strike us as unsuitable to such grave offences as are supposed to be laid to their charge, at a crisis like the present. One would naturally conclude from their leniency, that the native officers could have been guilty only of some minor breaches of discipline, not approaching to mutiny. However, as we said before, we must defer offering any judgment in the case until the facts are published.

The Examiner adds, that some few of the sepoys of the 1st N.I. are to be tried by court-martial, provided sufficient evidence can be produced against them, and that it has been intimated by telegraph to the corps, that no further proceedings against them will be taken. Promotion, on leave, and other indulgences, will, however, be suspended for the space of one year.—Madras Spectator, June 14.

THE LONDON MAIL of June 10 arrived at Madras, June 9, en route to Calcutta.

RIVER BOATS.—The Government have sanctioned the building of two boats for the Adyar Canal, in the Madras Presidency. One of the boats is intended to be used for cargo, and the other will carry passengers. The whole cost is estimated at Rs. 1,500.

THE CHIEF ENGINEER of the Madras Presidency has presented a petition from Mr. F. C. Brown, who rents lands in the Cherrikal talook, to the Government, praying for a loan of Rs. 5,000. With the money he intends to open a road from Perambaddy Ghaut down to Aujenkandy. He, from his own resources, has already laid out Rs. 15,000 upon the construction of roads. The Collector of Malabar gave his support to the petition of Mr. Brown, and the Government have advanced the loan, which is to be repaid within three years.

CAPTAIN ARTHUR EDWARD BROOKE, of the 2nd or Arnee native veteran battalion, has been tried by court-martial at Fort St. George on no less than seven distinct charges of embezzlement. The accused was pension-paymaster of the station at Arnee, and the items against him were as follows:—First. Embezzlement of Rs. 2,402-7-0, compensation rice money. Secondly. Embezzlement of Rs. 2,399-14-6, pay of pensioners. Thirdly. Embezzlement of Rs. 245-2-5, family-certificate money. Fourthly. Embezzlement of Rs. 387-13-4, compensation money due to pensioners. Fifthly. Embezzlement of Rs. 38-4-11, proceeds of a deceased pensioner's estate, and in a second count, with a similar malversation to the amount of Rs. 215-7. Sixthly. Embezzlement of Rs. 129-8-0, family-remittance money. Seventhly. Embezzlement of Rs. 404-6-0, the proceeds of the sale of certain Government buildings. The prisoner was found guilty on all seven charges, and sentenced to be cashiered, and to make good to Government the sum of Company's Rs. 5,179-11-11. The court, however, recommended him to mercy with reference to certain medical testimony brought forward as to his mental condition. Sir Patrick Grant was however of opinion that this testimony was not of a nature that should influence his Excellency to pardon the accused.

THE SMALL CAUSE COURT.—A "FAST INFANT."—The papers have published the report of a case tried before Mr. Burgess, in which Mr. Goldfinch, the steward of Green's ship the Earl of Hardwicke, was plaintiff, and Ens. W. G. Carr, a passenger on board, was defendant. From the evidence given and the remarks of the judge, it appears that the defendant was supplied at various times with cheroots, raisins, and soda-water to the value of Rs. 300, for which sum he gave the plaintiff a promissory note. The promissory note was not satisfied upon the defendant's arrival at Madras, and Mr. Goldfinch brought this action for the recovery of the amount. Ens. Carr pleaded infancy, stating that he was sixteen years of age. Mr. Burgess considered the appearance and word of the defendant sufficient proofs of the fact of infancy, and nonsuited the plaintiff.

THE LOAN is rapidly filling, and the disturbances in Bengal have not depreciated the price of Company's paper.

A SUSPENDED JUDGE.—Government has at last suspended a Mofussil judge, Mr. R. Cotton, the Civil and Sessions Judge of Rajahmundry is now justifying on his out-of-employ allowance. We should be inclined to impute excellent motives and a most worthy design to the Government in this matter, were we not restrained by the law from doing so. Nor can we permit Mr. Cotton or his friends to attempt any justification through our columns, for we should thereby run the chance of weakening the lawful authority of Government. Therefore this affair must remain shrouded in impenetrable mystery. The Government cannot have the credit which is probably its due assigned it; nor can the suspended official offer any explanation of the event; while each of our readers must imagine for himself what can possibly have given rise to so unwonted a catastrophe. Regard being had to the difficulty of bringing about the removal of any civil servant, our readers may possibly impute far worse misconduct to the judge than really was the fact; and we must caution them, therefore, against taking so uncharitable a view of a case, the particulars of which they can know nothing about. We therefore merely chronicle the fact that a Civil and Sessions Judge has been suspended.—Athenaeum.

COLONEL FREDERICK COTTON has addressed the following letter to the Athenaeum; it speaks for itself:—"It is high time that we who are spared the losses, and sufferings inflicted upon our fellow-subjects, in other parts of India, should be collecting money, wherewith to alleviate as far as money can, their sad distresses. By the late accounts from Calcutta, it is evident, that many of all classes of society have lost every thing they possessed; our offers of relief, therefore, should be extended to all ranks; and if our subscriptions be in proportion to our means, so considerable a sum will be raised, that something may be done to help all who really require assistance, and will accept it at our hands. No effort need be made to awaken the sympathies of the Madras public; what every member of it feels cannot be doubted, and I am fully aware, that I should not have to open the list of subscribers, with my name, if it were not that those who are the most anxious to lend their aid in such cases, are also those who are the most averse to make their acts conspicuous. Some one, however, must begin, and I venture to do so with an offer of Rs. 1,000, suggesting that, as soon as a few more names are added, a committee shall be formed to determine the best means of disposing of the funds subscribed."

NATIVE MEETING.—A meeting of the Mahomedan and Hindoo inhabitants of Madras was convened on the 2nd of July by the sheriff, under a suite of tents, put up for the purpose opposite Patcheapah's Institution. It was very numerously attended, and included many of the influential members of both communities. Mr. McKennie opened the meeting with the following brief speech:—"Gentlemen, I can, in truth, say that I received your requisition to convene this meeting with much pleasure. I have now to congratulate you upon the large number of persons assembled at present. I really think that you have acted wisely in this instance: indeed, I do not know how you could have done otherwise, for you are all living under British protection, and, what is more, a great number of you are holding under it situations of no small trust. I now beg you will elect your own chairman."

Shurf-ool-Oomarah Bahadoor having been elected chairman, he thanked the Sheriff for his ready requisition, and briefly addressed the meeting in Hindoostanee, which was interpreted to the assembly in Tamil and Telugoo: the following is the substance of his address:—"The former meetings of the native community have generally been for the purpose of petitioning for a redress of grievances; on the present occasion, we have met to give public expression to our loyal feelings towards the Government, and to make our abhorrence of the rebellious insurrection of a large portion of the Bengal Army and of the crimes they have committed, considering it our duty as British subjects to rally round the Government and give it whatever support may be in our power, in a crisis so perilous as the present."

The following resolutions were then proposed and adopted:—

1st. By Nuzim Jung Bahadoor, seconded by G. Lutchmenarasoo Chetty, "That this meeting considers it expedient, with reference to the state of affairs in the north-west, to assure the Right Honourable the Governor in Council of the loyalty and allegiance of the native population of this Presidency."

2nd. By N. C. Moorogasem Moodelly, seconded by Ibrat Jung Bahadoor, "That to give effect to the resolution just adopted, the following address to the Right Honourable the Governor in Council, conveying this assurance, be adopted."

3rd. By Moostakeem Jung Bahadoor, seconded by A. Ruthnavaloo Chetty, "That the address now adopted, after being subscribed to by those present, be circulated for signatures, and then transmitted by the Chairman to the Chief Secretary to Government, for the purpose of being presented to His Lordship in Council."

The thanks of the meeting were then voted to the Chairman, and the assembly dispersed.

THE BANK OF MADRAS.—The directors of the Madras bank have declared a dividend for the half year ending 30th June, of twenty-five Rupees per share, or at the rate of five per cent. per annum on the capital stock of the bank. The amount of net profits during the last six months, is Rs. 75,741-0 5, or nearly Rs. 7,000 in excess of the previous half year; and the reserve fund, after passing the above dividend, will amount to Rs. 42,503-14 9. The cash credit and loans on deposit of government securities, amount to Rs. 25,15,247, against Rs. 21,59,737, for the previous six months; and there has been a corresponding increase in the amount of discounts realized. The present account exhibits Rs. 7,86,178, as the proceeds of government and private bills discounted, against Rs. 573,400 on the previous six months; the excess in favour of the past six months being Rs. 2,12,770, or thereabouts.—Spectator.

BOMBAY.

THE LONDON MAIL of June 10 had arrived at Bombay (per Cadiz). The Mail of July 10 left Aden, July 28, en route to Bombay.

THE BOMBAY ASSOCIATION.—It has been officially notified to the Bombay Association that it is the wish of the Bombay Government that their proceedings in the Public Works Department should be made known to the public through the instrumentality of the Association, but under certain conditions.

DEATH OF THE KHAN OF KHELAT.—The death of his highness the Khan of Khelat took place on June 2; his brother, Meer Khodadad Khan has succeeded to the sovereignty, the deceased Khan having left no issue. We understand that Capt. Macauley, of the Sind horse, has been directed to proceed to Khelat, to renew the treaty of friendship between the British Government and the reigning prince.

POONA.—Strong bodies of dragoons and artillery nightly patrol the cantonments, and the horsekeepers sleep at the stables to be prepared to harness and saddle the horses at a moment's notice. The whole of the shigrams, and other horse conveyances to be had in the camp, had been laden and dispatched with commissariat stores for the troops which had gone to Sattara and Nuggur. A general feeling of alarm prevailed throughout the station, and every precaution to meet danger should it arise had been taken.

BARODA.—The following is from the Poonah Observer,—"We are informed that a slight disturbance has occurred at Baroda, and that a misunderstanding has arisen between the Gaekwar and the Resident, Sir Richmond Shakespeare. Some of the Gaekwar's people have proved turbulent, and have gone so far as to cut down the Residency flag-staff. A considerable portion of the British troops from Baroda had been sent away to Broach, and only a portion of the 1st Grenadiers, the 8th Regiment N.I. and some Artillery remained. Some of the Gaekwar horse under Lieutenant Alban, the Assistant-Resident, had also been sent away to Broach. We do not understand the exact nature of the dispute between the Resident and the Gaekwar, but are informed that it has arisen out of Sir Richmond's having directed the withdrawal of some Europeans employed with the Gaekwar's household troops, and in that officer having declined to accept the services of one of these corps during the absence of the detachments of our troops from Baroda."

MOOLTAN.—The Sindian says, "Advices from Mooltan state that the road between that place and Lahore was a complete flood; the dawks are carried on horseback instead of in the mail cart. They were not without fears at Mooltan, and were anxiously looking out for the Bombay troops."

MHOW, JUNE 15.—All quiet here. Too much praise cannot be bestowed upon Colonel Platt, the commanding officer of the station. Morning, noon, and night, he goes into the sepoys' lines, and addresses the men, which gives them confidence; they are quiet and orderly, and if the regiments here remain so, reward is in store for them. The column from Poona is expected here on the 26th inst.

BENGAL MUTINEERS AT BOMBAY.—A correspondent of the Bombay Telegraph and Courier asserts that he saw and conversed with eight of the disbanded men of the 34th regiment at Bombay. The men were seated under a large Banian tree, and stated that they had come to Bombay to seek employment. Seven companies of the 34th were disbanded at Barrackpore on the 5th of May, and the men appear to have been seen at Bombay on the 28th of June. It is incredible that they could have marched so far in so short a time.

THE PILOT ESTABLISHMENT.—The Bombay Chamber of Commerce have addressed a letter to Sir Henry Leeke, K.H., for the purpose of directing his attention to the insufficient strength of the Bombay pilot establishment. There are now 130 merchant ships in harbour, and the arrivals and departures amount to fourteen or fifteen per diem. With such a demand for the services of pilots there are not more than six available for duty. The answer of Sir H. Leeke was to the effect that there were eleven pilots and one probationer borne upon the list of the establishment, besides three assistants to the master attendant, and two acting 2nd masters. These men are considered amply sufficient to meet the requirements of the port.

PERSIAN PRISONERS.—We hear that the three Persian state prisoners were brought to Bombay from Ahmednugger on the evening of Tuesday last, and will be sent to their native country by the H. C. steamer Berenice, which leaves this port to-day for the Persian Gulf.—Bombay Times, June 20.

THE EUROPEAN OFFICERS of the 5th and 11th have been ordered to take up quarters and reside in Fort George and the barracks.

A RUFFIANLY HIGHWAY ROBBERY IN KURRACHEE.—Four European soldiers, on the night of the 9th instant, attacked a native Christian, the servant of a gentleman residing at Clifton, who was on his way to camp, after leaving Clifton. The soldiers not only ill-treated the man, but robbed him of thirty rupees, and stripped him entirely naked, leaving him thus exposed on the highway, and made off with their booty.

MILITARY ON DITS.—The 1st B-looch battalion left Hyderabad on the 30th May, en route to Mooltan.—A horse-battery of artillery, with Europeans attached, has been ordered down to Bombay from Bushire. The 4th troop horse artillery has been ordered from Bushire to Kurrachee to be stationed there.—The first detachment of the 1st European Fusiliers were at Sukkur on the 10th June, and expected to reach Mooltan by the 22nd.

MOVEMENT FOR A MILITIA.—We observe that there is a movement for a militia in Bombay. The Bombay Times thinks that a European force, 500 to 900 strong, might be embodied without any difficulty; also a marine brigade of artillery 600 strong; a Parsee militia, available, if need be, for emergent service in the Deccan, 6,000 to 10,000 strong; and a Hindoo militia to a still larger extent, if it was desirable to call it out. Our contemporary says that the Parsees especially are anxious that the Government should avail itself of their numbers, and that a mistaken motion exists as to the morale of this people on the score of courage.

GOVERNMENT-GENERAL ORDERS.

THE NEW TUNIC.

Head-Quarters, Poona, 12th June, 1857.—1. The Commander-in-Chief is pleased to announce to the army, that the Honourable the Court of Directors have sanctioned the introduction of the new tunic for the artillery and infantry of the Honourable Company's service, of which sealed patterns will be lodged with the army clothing agent.

With respect to the tunic for general and staff officers, horse artillery, cavalry, engineers, and sappers and miners, instructions will be issued hereafter.

BURMAH.

RANGOON.—Certain sinister rumours about some of the Bengal soldiery here having betrayed a mutinous spirit—or been guilty of overt acts of insubordination, according to some—were floating lazily about town some few days back, tending in no slight degree to the derangement of the nervous systems of the more peaceably disposed members of the community, who, as may be readily imagined, were in an admirable state for receiving a "shock" of the kind, after the arrival of the "raw head and bloody bones" intelligence brought by the Calcutta steamer. Reports at last of the most ominous character so thickened upon us, that we had almost begun to believe in the existence in this province of a movement sympathetic with that which is now sowing broadcast murder and rapine and affright throughout Bengal and the oldest and fairest portions of the empire, when a ray of authentic intelligence burst through and scattered all the angry-looking clouds which terror-stricken rumour had been piling up, and we were informed that some of our sepoys had been behaving themselves very improperly, it is true, but there was nothing whatsoever in what we heard about red-handed mutiny striding through the country, hand in hand with massacre and pillage and terror, or any other such undesirable companions—nothing of deep-laid conspiracies or pent-up vengeance—nothing in fact of a character to compel a man of ordinary self-possession to despair, on retiring nightly, of finding his head in its legitimate place on his awakening.

So we heard, and we were composed, and thought it safe to put upon the shelf, at least pro tempore, certain most brilliant plans for the defence of the colony over which we have Lord Dalhousie's authority for asserting that the British flag must continue to wave so long as there is a sun in the heavens; which plans we should have indubitably have devised if we found that there existed any necessity for them—a discovery which most fortunately we did not make. The improper behaviour of which we have spoken, on the part of some of our sepoys, consisted in their having, certainly not in obedience to strict military rule and order, sent a volley of stones and brickbats after one of their officers, under the following circumstances which we retail as they were described to us: A certain piece of ground, it would seem, was allotted for cooking purposes by the brigadier commanding to the men of the 25th N.I. now in cantonments here, who proceeded so to use it accordingly. In doing so, however, it is said that they encountered an unexpected opposition from Capt. Wickham the executive engineering officer, who required the ground for some purposes connected with the work of his department, and proceeded to eject the sepoys. In carrying out this operation it is insinuated that the fortiter in re style of procedure was adopted rather too strikingly to the exclusion of the suaviter in modo method,—the result being the discharge by the occupants of the disputed cooking ground of the volley already alluded to, disagreeable certainly in its nature, but not what is generally characterized as deadly; and in the present instance, we are glad to learn, unproductive of any very serious effects.

We have received but a very rough outline of this affair, which, though so much more trivial than rumour at first painted it, is certainly not devoid of unpleasantness, and, particularly in the present state of the relations between the Government and the native army, is much to be regretted. A rather remarkable degree of peremptoriness in carrying out the proceedings of the ejection of the military cuisiniers from their al fresco kitchen seems to have been the casus belli, and might very well have been spared. What has been further done in the matter we have not yet ascertained. Of course, the matter could not be allowed to rest here. It would hardly answer our purpose to permit our native warriors to remain under the impression that letting fly a volley of stones and brick-bats at their officer is a legitimate and constitutional mode of expressing their dissatisfaction with any measure which they may deem an encroachment upon their rights or indulgences.—Chronicle, June 10.

CHINA.

"Since the despatch of the last mail the only military operation reported is the capture, on the 18th June, of the Chuenpee fort, a walled encampment of considerable extent on a height on the left bank of the Pearl River, about five miles below the Bogue—one shell over the fort from Commodore Keppel's flag steamer, the Hong Kong, and another from the gun-boat Forester, were quite sufficient to send the garrison, of about a hundred "braves," scampering over the embrasures, quiet possession being then taken by parties from the respective ships engaged; namely, the Sampson, Tribune, Highflyer, Fury, and vessels already named. The place is now occupied by 120 of our people, under the command of Lieuts. Boyle, Norman, and Ozzard, R.M., of the Tribune, and Mr. Acting Mate Hornby, of the Elk. This, we suppose, is the first of our permanent captures. Both as a sanatorium and strategic point, it is admirably situated. The disposition of the fleet is as follows:—About and below Teatofan Fort, Macao Passage (two miles from Canton), steamers Cruiser, Hornet, and sloop Bittern; second bar, steam corvette Highflyer; the Bogue; Alligator; depot-ship, bearing Commodore Keppel's flag when that officer is "at home;" steamers Sampson, Niger, Fury, and Sir Charles Forbes; frigate Amethyst, and sloop Acorn. At Chuenpee, steam-frigate Tribune, and sloop Elk. In Hong Kong, flag-ship Calcutta, Admiral Seymour; Sybil, Commodore Elliott. Macao Roads, frigate Nankin. Some of the gun-boats are not placed, it will be seen, but it is understood that each of the post-captains on the station has one attached to his vessel as a tender. On the whole, these gun-boats are ill-adapted for the service required of them; their rate of steaming is so insignificant, that escape from determined "fast crabs" would be impossible; whilst for creeks, with anything under six feet of water, they are quite useless.

"Accounts from Shanghai report everything quiet and satisfactory. From Foochow, we have dates to 31st ultimo. The Viceroy of Fokien was still at Yeng-ping with troops. The rebels who had invested that city had retired to a considerable distance."—Overland Friend of China, June 24.

Messrs. Wm. H. Allen and Co. regret that the whole of their last impression could not be struck off in time to save the country post on the Saturday. ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL, LONDON.

SATURDAY, August 15, 1857.

RETURN OF CIVIL SERVANTS TO INDIA.

AN order has been issued by the Court of Directors, requiring all civil servants, who are now on furlough, to return to India, unless they should be prevented by ill-health. We understand that a free passage is granted by the Court to such as comply with this call before the end of September.

APPLICATIONS TO THE EAST-INDIA COMPANY.

WE understand that numerous applications for employment are received, almost daily, at the India House, not only from Englishmen, but from Frenchmen, Germans, Belgians, and other foreigners, who are desirous of proceeding to India to join in the operations which are being conducted for quelling disturbances and restoring tranquillity. These offers being made, for the most part, under the impression that the services of military officers are required by the Government, it is as well to prevent disappointment by expressing our belief that such is not the case. It is only necessary to consider for a moment the number of officers who are now in India without regimental duty, to satisfy any one that the Government cannot require the aid of volunteers.

AUGMENTATION OF THE INDIAN ARTILLERY.

WITH the view of rendering the artillery branch of the Indian army as effective as possible within the earliest practicable period, we understand that sixty-six direct appointments of artillery cadets are to be made forthwith; half of them being for the Bengal presidency.

Candidates, who may be nominated for these appointments, will undergo an examination to be held for the purpose on the second Tuesday in the months of October, November, December, and January next; and in case of failure at one examination, the candidate will be allowed another trial upon the day last mentioned.

Sir Frederick Smith, K.H., the public examiner of the Military College, will conduct the examinations, and will class the successful candidates according to their qualifications at the dates of their passing. The cadets who may be appointed to the artillery service from Addiscombe at the ensuing examination at that college will very properly rank above those selected under the direct appointments; and cadets at that institution will also be allowed to offer themselves as candidates for direct appointments, without detriment to their position at the college in the event of their failure.

THE PROSELYTIZING MANIA.

WE have incurred the displeasure of several well-meaning, but not very judicious or well-judging people, by the freedom of our remarks on the growing influence of the proselytizing spirit in India, and by pointing to this as one of the sources of our present trouble. The fact, however, cannot be denied, that there is a wide-spread distrust of the Government, because its measures have for some time been seen to be aggressive against the religion and institutions of the country, both Hindoo and Mahomedan. Many legislative acts have been cited as bearing this character. The education given in Government seminaries is observed to unhinge the mind of the Indian youths from all the social and religious ties recognized by their fathers and uncles, and regarded by men of maturer age as normal conditions of their race for generations and centuries. The recent association of the Government with missionaries, by the admission of their schools into the Government scheme of education, and by the grants of aid to them from the public revenues, has been cited also as proof of the proselytizing aim of this painstaking and expensive teaching. Then, again, men filling the very highest offices of the State in India are members of missionary societies, and if they do not take an active part in converting to Christianity, they yet follow freely the royal example, and offer themselves as sponsors for the converts at the baptismal font.

These are all new things of comparatively recent appearance, and calculated to excite serious apprehension in men attached to the old religions and institutions. Hence the alarm for caste and creed, which the Governor-General has found it necessary to issue a proclamation to allay. He disavows any aggressive spirit or intention to interfere with either; and it is of vital necessity that confidence should be restored, for government is impossible if the bulk of the population look at every act of the governing body with suspicion, and are united in opposing it, and feel it to be their duty to devise means of resistance. But will this proclamation suffice to effect the purpose desired, and remove mistrust? Something more than mere verbal assurances will evidently be required, and the conduct of the authorities, at home as well as abroad, will be closely watched, to see how far the assurances of this proclamation are confirmed, or the contrary. Deeply indeed must that person be imbued with the fanatical spirit, who, approving of the proclamation as a wise and politic course for the Indian Government to have taken to quiet alarm, would yet advocate the prosecution of silent, insidious measures to undermine what cannot openly be attacked. Yet there are people who think the end would justify even such means,—Jesuits in heart and in principle,—who, in matters of religion and faith, feel little scruple in diverging from the paths of honesty and plain-dealing.

But we shall be asked, Why dwell on the mistrust and alarm of the population, when it is a mere military mutiny that we have to deal with? The population is not in arms against us, it is only the sepoys that have revolted. This is in a great measure true, and we may thank Heaven that it is so; but the watchword of the revolted sepoys is a cry for caste and creed. Their fidelity of a hundred years yields to the notion that these are not safe; to the fear that both have been assailed, directly and indirectly, by the Government they have hitherto so well served. How came this notion so to be taken up? how could it have so spread, if there were no acts or measures of the Government to warrant the suspicion? Emissaries have been at work to pervert the minds of the soldiery and to disseminate distrust and discontent. True; but they have seized the popular grounds,—they have dwelt on topics of preconceived doubt and apprehension. If as yet we have had only a sepoy revolt to deal with, that is because the disaffected have adopted this means of effecting their purpose. The sepoys may have been the dupes of designing malcontents, but their revolt is no less a proof of the general alarm and mistrust that has prevailed. And the sepoys themselves cannot fail to have observed the growing progress of this obnoxious proselytizing spirit. We do not wish to refer to the fact more than once stated in the Indian journals as well as in private letters, that the colonel of the 34th N.I. was in the habit of preaching and distributing tracts in his own sepoy lines; but we learn, from authority we cannot doubt, that missionary societies in Calcutta, of which high functionaries are presidents and members of the managing committees, have lately been in the habit, upon the invitation of pious officers, of sending missions of Hindoo converts and others, to be associated with such officers in the special work of converting the sepoys. Of such a mission Capt. Douglas, of the palace guard of Delhi, was stated by the archdeacon to have been the associate, in the letter which announced the cruel assassination of the whole mission, with circumstances of unusual barbarity. Can we be surprised that the sepoys should readily listen to emissaries of the Dhurma Subha, and to all others who preached distrust and disaffection on the ground of danger to caste and creed, when they were daily witness of these zealous but ill-judged proceedings?

A new light, however, has burst forth, to show that other motives than fear for caste and religion have been at work to produce this revolt,—the sepoys have been tampered with by political malcontents. The money of the ex-King of Oude has been spent to excite discontent and to spread sedition. The troops have been urged by motives of avarice to plunder the treasuries they were set to guard, and have been taught to believe that the power of the sword was theirs, and it was for them to dispose of the sovereignty and revenues of India, if they only combined for the purpose. The recent arrest of the ex-King of Oude at Calcutta gives some colour to this view of the revolt; and topics of the kind mentioned may have been used to excite the ambition and win the co-operation of many. Still the cry of the rebels was always one of caste and creed, to which these other motives were but accessory. It was the same thing precisely at Vellore, just fifty years of ago. The seeds of sedition were then, too, sown by political emissaries and malcontents, but the troops would never have broken out in revolt and murdered their officers if the cry of religion could not have been raised, and if there had been no ill-judged order to discontinue rings and caste-marks, and to wear stocks and caps of offending shape and materials, which seemed to justify that cry. The greased cartridge, which a company from every sepoy regiment had used without suspicion for practice with the Enfield rifle, before its offending character was discovered, was the accident that capped the climax of discontent, and was seized upon by these emissaries as the brand to light everywhere the train of pre-existing disaffection and mistrust.

But it is not only the missionaries and the proselytizing spirit displayed recently by civil and military servants of the State that has excited this alarm. Those who have raised the cry for progress have been even more active in measures of aggression against the social and religious condition of the population of India than those who deal only with matters of faith and belief. It is these men of progress who have changed the language of business, to the prejudice of Mahomedans, who, now that Persian has been discontinued, find themselves nearly excluded from office. It is these men, too, who have urged the legislation on matters of social custom bearing on inheritance, which has so much contributed to alarm the Hindoos. The very fact that these measures have been so received is evidence that the men of progress have been moving too fast—faster than the population was in a condition to follow. There must be a halt in this course of progression until the ground is better prepared. We must lay the rails before locomotives worked by steam are set to run. But there is a great distinction between measures of progress and missionary efforts,—the former can be explained, and shown to be for benefit without materially touching caste and religion; the proselytizing spirit can never be other than hostile to the status based on other faiths. The Government may be associated with one under the condition of being careful duly to prepare the minds of the population to receive the change; it never can be associated with the other without raising an alarm and spirit of resistance that no force and no persuasion will be able to subdue. The men of progress must be restrained by injunctions of more cautious preparation, but need not be excluded from high position in the Government; the proselytizing men must be kept wholly out of such positions as will give colour to the notion that their spirit guides the counsels and pervades the executive measures, and inspires the secret wishes and designs of those who rule the destinies of India.

Thus much we have thought it necessary to add in further explanation of the views we have stated in respect to the original causes of the present disastrous and barbarous revolt. We have hitherto dealt only with the fact that disaffection, based upon mistrust, is very widely spread in India, and with the imperative necessity of taking steps to restore that confidence in the ruling power without which government is quite impossible. The Governor-General has taken the first and a very wise step in issuing a proclamation disclaiming the designs and motives imputed to him. He must follow this up by more effectually severing his establishments and measures from those who avow the proselytizing mission; and this, too, must be the course and declared policy of the home as well as of the Indian authorities.

The particular measures to be adopted for the re-creation of an army entitled to confidence form quite a different part of the subject, and must be separately treated.

THE GENTLE HINDOO.

THE gentle Hindoo has at length dropped the mask, and shown himself in his true colours. Private letters teem with descriptions of fiendish barbarity that freeze the very heart's blood, and to which public journalists can only darkly allude. The diabolical ingenuity in torture exhibited by our attached and trusty sepoys will find only a faint parallel in the earlier annals of the Christian Church. Saints and martyrs, whether Catholic or Protestant, have alone endured sufferings comparable to those inflicted upon our countrymen, and their more wretched wives and children, by their own fellow-subjects. The atrocities perpetrated by these human monsters are the more astounding and incredible, that it has so long been the fashion to represent the natives of Hindostan as a mild, docile, inoffensive race, patiently waiting to receive the glad tidings of Christianity to become the exemplar of all the Christian virtues. For much of this false colouring we are indebted to Bishop Heber and other writers of the sentimental school of literature. Profoundly ignorant of the native language, and thus unprovided with any key to the native character, the worthy Bishop complacently accepted as genuine expressions of feeling the idiomatic exaggerations of Oriental politeness, so far as they were literally translated to him by his courteous entertainers. The cringing servility of the treacherous slave was regarded as a simple and childlike demonstration of respect and gratitude: it should more justly have been likened to the stealthy, crouching gait of the beast of prey before he bounds upon his unsuspecting victim. But a bishop and a poet had said it, and thenceforth the Hindoo became an object of interest and sympathy to all that maudlin class of philanthropists who drive the starved and shivering beggar from their door, and reserve their sighs and tears for the meek and uncomplaining heathen. For such persons as these history is written in vain. In all times, and while professing all manner of creeds, the Asiatic has exhibited only the virtues and vices of the savage. Hospitable to those who afforded no temptation to treachery, patient of fatigue and hunger, and blindly devoted to a religion whose moral precepts he never practised and whose doctrines he never understood, the Asiatic has in no way changed from the earliest periods of which we have any authentic records. Who has not shuddered at the recital of the barbarities inflicted by the Hebrews upon the Canaanites, and by the Egyptians and Assyrians on the Hebrews? Who is there that has not turned with horror from the narratives of Saracen, Moorish, and Turkoman cruelty? Who, in short, has ever perused the annals of the Mahomedan conquerors of Hindostan without indignation and loathing, and depression of spirits? Mussulman or Mahratta, it little mattered who was uppermost for the moment, the same tale of horrors is told, the only variation being in the names of the oppressor and the oppressed. Gholam Kadir Khan, in his brief season of success, could not refrain from heaping insult and disgrace on the unfortunate Shah Allum, and even pierced his eyes with his own dagger. Gholam Kadir Khan, in his hour of adversity, was made prisoner by Madhajee Scindiah, and died from loss of blood while being conveyed to Delhi, after his ears, eyes, nose, hands, and feet had been cut off. Such is the history of India under its native rulers, such are the pictures portrayed on every page. Recent Parliamentary Papers, too, bear witness that this fiendish disposition has not been softened or humanized in the lapse of ages. The tortures systematically inflicted by the farmers of the revenue in the kingdom of Oude previous to its annexation, and even in our own territory by the spontaneous zeal of the subordinate police authorities, evince the same demoniacal barbarity that characterized their forefathers. The teeth and the claws of the tiger may be drawn, but the monster still thirsts for blood—still lies in wait for his prey.

That estimable man and sagacious statesman Lord William Bentinck justly estimated the Asiatic character, when he compared the moral and social condition of the natives to that of the inhabitants of Europe in the dark ages. There was the same religious fanaticism, the same superstitious belief in magic and the marvellous, the same impulsiveness, the same passion for adventure, the same blind ignorance. The inference he thence adduced was the expediency of leaving to time the task of their education, of abstaining from all interference with their religion, customs, and usages, and of avoiding all unnecessary extension of the Company's territories. It is true that this excellent Governor-General was compelled, by the force of circumstances, to act contrary to his expressed views on the subject, and to annex the petty principality of Coorg; but his counsels were nevertheless wise, and worthy of adoption. His sagacity, indeed, was fully appreciated by the Court of Directors, who, acting upon the admirable instinct that had led them on to empire, in all their treaties and proclamations promised the most perfect tolerance, and fulfilled their promises. In those times the affairs of the Company were administered by practical men, who understood the people and the country they had to govern. So long as there was danger, difficulty, and expense to be encountered, the British Parliament and press were content to be spectators of the struggle, and to applaud the heroic efforts which were adding an empire to the Crown; but no sooner had the work of conquest been perfected, and before the Directors had time to recover breath after their superhuman labours, than all sorts of irresponsible individuals and societies rushed in, and clamorously proposed to Europeanize Asia. With this view treaties were misinterpreted, ancient institutions disregarded, and still more ancient prejudices slighted and set at naught. The result has been what Indian statesmen have repeatedly predicted. The conquered have been taught to despise their conqueror, whom they before hated, but feared. The ambitious and restless Mahomedan has seen the long-wished-for opportunity arrive for plunder and sensual riot. Under false pretences, he has dragged the credulous and fanatical Hindoo into a temporary coalition. Detesting each other, they have made common cause against the proselytizing and meddling stranger, and in the first exultant enjoyment of emancipation have recovered their true character, and displayed their hereditary ferocity. Let not this lesson be lost upon us. Let not this dear-bought experience prove barren of fruit. It is only waste of time to strive to wash the blackamoor white. Take him as he is. Let him retain his nature, and be content with his political and commercial adaptabilities. It is the country, not the people, that concerns us. Instead of troubling ourselves to turn out Double Firsts from among the latter, our business is simply to cultivate the former. For this purpose we require and must employ the services of the native inhabitants; but we need not their assistance in the work of government. And yet we must govern them much after their own fashion, only administering even-handed justice unto all. It is neither our duty nor our policy to force upon them institutions which belong to another state of society, and which have grown out of the habits and manners of a totally different people. There is quite as much individuality in races as in particular men. What is suited to one may be quite unfit for another, and any attempt to amalgamate different idiosyncrasies is just as absurd as it would be to graft the peach upon the Indian pear. We must give up all idea of manufacturing a gentle Hindoo to please Exeter Hall, or even her Majesty's Opposition. Nineteenth-century men are not made to order, especially in the East. Our European civilization is quite as much out of place on the banks of the Ganges or the Godavery, as the Crystal Palace or the Manchester Exhibition would have been in the time of the Plantagenets. Let it suffice that we have now once almost lost India by an anachronism, without again incurring a similar danger by the repetition of such a folly.

THE IMPERIAL CITY.

THE modern town of Delhi, or, more correctly speaking, Shahjehanabad, was founded, as its name indicates, by Shah Jehan, rather before the middle of the seventeenth century. The signification of the word Delhi, or Dehlee, has been variously interpreted. According to popular tradition, a sceptical, or philosophical, prince of the Tuar dynasty, being desirous to ascertain if the celebrated Kheel, or iron pillar of the Pandus, was really "fixed in hell," impiously dug about its foundations until "blood gushed up from the earth's centre, and the pillar became loose (dhilllee)." Unfortunately for this etymological derivation, that word is rather of Persian than of Sanscrit origin, and will therefore hardly account for the appellation of a Hindoo city that existed in a flourishing condition long previous to the first Mahomedan invasion. The original town, known for some centuries as Indrapres'tha (Indraput), was built by Yoodishtira about the time of the Mahabharata, some fourteen or fifteen hundred years before the Christian era. For a time, Indrapres'tha appears to have been an important, if not the chief, city in Upper India, until the seat of government was removed by Vicramaditya to Oojein, in the early part of the fourth century before Christ. It recovered a portion of its former greatness, however, during the supposed usurpation of a certain Raja Dhara (A.D. 383), of whom nothing is known except that he erected in memory of himself the iron Lath, or pillar, near the Kutub Minar. On the death of this obscure conqueror, Indrapres'tha again sunk into insignificance, until Anungpal, the founder of the Tuar dynasty, made it the capital of his dominions, about four hundred years later. Shortly afterwards the name of Indrapres'tha immersed into that of Delhi, or Dehlee, which is mentioned as the head of a powerful state in the time of Mahmood of Ghuznee. On two occasions, that fierce fanatic is described by Ferishta as hesitating to attack a place of so much power and importance. It preserved its independence, therefore, until the year 1193, when Raja Pitlora, the last of the Hindoo rulers of Delhi, succumbed to the arms of Sultan Moiz-ul-deen Mohammed Ghoree. The Patan, or Afghan, dynasty then commenced its stormy career, and held possession of the throne for upwards of three centuries. It is true their greatness sometimes suffered an eclipse, as when the Tartar hordes of Timour captured and plundered their capital; but the sceptre never departed from them until Timour's descendant, Sultan Baber, founded the Mogul empire. The Moguls were originally a small, fierce, predatory tribe, despised by the other Tartars as mere plunderers and freebooters, who first became known to the Hindoos in the time of Genghiz Khan, in whose van they marched, carrying desolation and death wherever they appeared. So great was the terror inspired by their ferocity, that the trembling natives of Hindostan gave their name indiscriminately to all the invading hosts of Tartars, Persians, and Afghans; just as they now call all Europeans Feringhees, or as the Turks and Saracens, in former times, gave the western nations the collective designation of Franks. Thus, by a singular caprice of fortune, a tribe of robbers became the godfathers of an empire long regarded in Europe with reverence and a certain mysterious terror. For two hundred years the descendants of Baber retained possession of the throne without challenge from foreign foes, though continually plunged in civil wars and internal dissensions; but a rival power then arose, and in 1735 the blazing suburbs of Delhi attested the fearless and unbridled cruelty of the Mahrattas. Four years afterwards, a still more formidable enemy appeared before the walls of the imperial city. A shepherd of Khorassan, "Khan, the slave of Thamas," had made himself master of Central Asia, and, under the title of Nadir Shah, had despatched an envoy to the court of the Great Mogul. This envoy, however, was murdered, with all his followers, at Jellalabad, and all demands for apology and redress were treated with contempt and ridicule. Nadir Shah could little brook insult or submit to a wrong. At the head of a large army he accordingly invaded Hindostan, and having defeated the emperor's troops at Kurnal, became master of the situation. The gates of Delhi were thrown open to him, and the Persian shepherd took possession of the palace of the Mogul. For two days his fierce soldiers conducted themselves with admirable forbearance; but a rumour having gone forth that Nadir Shah had been assassinated, the inhabitants suddenly rose upon their conquerors, and massacred a considerable number of them while unsuspecting of attack. The retribution was immediate and terrible. In a few hours 8,000 corpses strewed the streets, and the city was fired in several places. When Nadir Shah finally withdrew from Delhi, he is said by the native historians to have carried off treasure and jewels to the value of thirty-two millions sterling, besides a long train of horses, elephants, and camels. In 1756, Delhi was again the scene of monstrous barbarities, while occupied by the Afghan levies of Ahmed Shah Abdallee. A few years later, Shah Allum committed the capital error of engaging in hostilities with the British, to whom he was soon compelled to cede the provinces of Bengal and Behar. Having subsequently thrown himself into the hands of the Mahrattas, he forfeited all claim to the annual pension of 260,000*l.*, and other advantages secured to him by the treaty of 1765. In 1788, Gholam Kadir, the Rohilla chief, seized upon Delhi and the person of the emperor, whose eyes he blinded with his own poniard. On the defeat and death of this barbarian at the hands of the Mahrattas, the Delhi territory was bestowed in jagheer—a sort of military tenure—upon the French officers in the service of Madhaje Scindiah. The emperor himself was a mere puppet, without power or pageant, and was indebted for his very subsistence to the superfluities of the European officers. A change, however, was at hand, and the last days of the aged monarch were passed in tranquillity and comparative affluence. The battle of Delhi, on the 11th of September, 1803, opened the gates of the city to the British army under General Lake, and since that period the power of the Great Mogul has only extended over the 12,000 inmates of his fort or palace, while his revenues have been limited to an annual allowance of 150,000*l.* At first the imperial pension was only 120,000*l.*, in addition to a present of 1,000*l.* on certain Mahomedan festivals. For some time, too, the king of Delhi affected to bestow dresses of honour on native princes at their accession to the musnud, as a token of suzerainty; and the same farce was attempted to be performed towards the Governor-General. The British Government, therefore, wisely discontinued the custom of making presents, which were looked upon as tribute; forbade the mockery of investiture; and raised the pension to a consolidated allowance of 150,000*l.*, with the use of the palace. The title of king would have expired with the present possessor, to prevent its adoption as a war-cry in such a contingency as that which has actually occurred. Many persons indeed have been opposed to what they considered an arbitrary exercise of power on the part of the British Government; but existing circumstances prove the wisdom of the contemplated proceeding, and demonstrate the imprudence of leaving any rallying-point for the restless and discontented.

Within a few weeks after the capture of Delhi by General Lake, it was surprised, and narrowly escaped being retaken by Holkar. Leaving his cavalry to impose upon the British general near Mathura, or Muttra, that warlike chief suddenly appeared before Delhi with 20,000 infantry and upwards of 100 guns. The place was defended by only two battalions of native infantry and four companies of another regiment, besides 300 Mewatties and a handful of irregular horse. The Mewatties, however, deserted, and the cavalry fled at the approach of the enemy. Thus the real strength of the garrison did not exceed 800 men, with 11 guns, to defend a city seven miles in circumference, containing a dense population on whom no reliance could be placed. The walls, also, were in such bad repair that they crumbled away under the concussion of their own guns. Under these circumstances, Colonel Ochterlony, the resident, advised that the British force should be withdrawn into the palace, and that the city should be left to its fate. But Colonel Burn, the military commandant, nobly assumed the responsibility of opposing at all points the overwhelming numbers of the enemy. A brilliant sortie, under Lieut. Rose, succeeded in spiking a battery that threatened to make a speedy and practicable breach; and a furious assault upon the place was repulsed with equal valour. On the ninth day of the siege Holkar retired with disgrace; and since that day, the 16th of October, 1803, no enemy has ever been seen from the walls of Delhi until the army of retribution encamped upon the parade-ground in May, 1857. The walls, however, have since been faced with granite and otherwise strengthened and repaired, and martello towers erected to protect the curtain where the bastions were too far apart. An abundant supply of heavy guns, too, was stored in the arsenal, but the heroic devotion of Lieutenant Willoughby deprived the rebels of the magazine of powder. But neither walls, nor guns, nor the courage of despair, can long avail against the resolute and disciplined valour of British soldiers when athirst for vengeance.

THE BENGAL POLICE.

Just one month before the outbreak of the mutiny at Meerut, the members of the Calcutta Council were engaged in writing Minutes on the most approved means of imparting efficiency to the police of Lower Bengal. All were agreed as to the utter incompetency of that force; but much difference of opinion was expressed as to the precise method of rendering it serviceable to the State. As at present constituted, it appears to have been an object of ridicule to evil-doers, and a terror only to well-disposed citizens. Various suggestions were offered for its improvement; but, under existing circumstances, a radical change is both desirable and inevitable. Perhaps the best system to be adopted is that which has been found to answer so admirably in the Punjab, and which is thus described in a Minute from the pen of the Governor-General:—

“The preventive, or military police, consists of six regiments of foot, containing 5,400 men, and 27 troops of horse, numbering 2,700 men, and is superintended by four British officers as police captains. The infantry furnish guards for jails, treasuries, frontier posts, and escorts for treasure, and civil officers in transit. The cavalry are posted in detachments at the stations, and smaller parties, stationed along the grand lines of road, serve as mounted patrols. * * * The civil police in the Punjab are very much on the same footing as that in the North-Western Provinces and Bengal; but they are much more numerous. The territory is divided into 228 police jurisdictions or thannahs, in each of which is a police officer (darogah) on a salary varying from Rs. 100 to Rs. 50 a month, with one or two deputies, and about thirty policemen. The total strength is about 6,900 of all grades.”

This model has been approved of and recommended by the Court of Directors, and on the suppression of the present insurrection might be adopted with great advantage throughout the whole extent of our Indian empire. The employment of a military police in guarding treasuries and escorting treasure would obviate the necessity of maintaining a regular native army. A certain number of irregular corps, cavalry and light infantry, will always be required to put down local disturbances, and to do outpost duty with the European forces when engaged in hostilities with a foreign foe; but the services of a regular native army might entirely be dispensed with by doubling the permanent European force, and concentrating it on certain commanding points. The annual cost of maintaining 100,000 English troops in India will amount, in round numbers, to about ten millions sterling, or a trifle more than the present annual outlay of the combined forces. There is, however, a higher consideration than the mere question of expense, and that is—the stability of our empire. Never again will it be possible to repose the same confidence in the sepoy troops as has hitherto been done. At the same time some sort of career must be opened for the fiery spirits who now embrace the profession of arms as the only one suitable to a generous and ardent temperament. To men of this stamp, a military police force would present opportunities for adventure and distinction which service in the line fails to afford. Not only in the Punjab has this experience been obtained, but likewise in the frontier police corps of Oude previous to the overthrow of that effete dynasty. But the military police can only be regarded as supplemental to the civil police. On the latter must devolve the duty of apprehending ordinary delinquents, and of preventing the violation of social laws. Hitherto the native police has enjoyed a very indifferent reputation; but their efficiency might probably be increased by introducing British officers as superintendents of divisions. Much benefit may be also expected by enlisting the active co-operation of respectable native landholders and European residents. This might be done by conferring on them powers nearly similar to those with which justices of the peace are invested in this country. In the words of Lord Canning: "Persons so empowered would be competent to receive complaints in all except heinous offences, including affray, to issue summons, warrants, and subpoenas, to take evidence, to punish up to fifteen days' imprisonment, and Rs. 50 of fine; and in cases of theft, with one month's further imprisonment, in lieu of stripes, and to refer to the magistrate, or deputy magistrate, for final orders in cases requiring a severer measure of punishment." In this manner would be considerably lessened the inconvenience that arises from the paucity of European magistrates, particularly in Lower Bengal, where many offenders constantly escape, owing to the reluctance of the sufferers to waste their time in seeking redress at a distant magistracy. For the moment nothing can be done; but when the troubled waters subside, the reorganization of the police force must be one of the first buds put forth by the tree of peace.

THE CONTINGENT SYSTEM.

IN the uncertain and troubled times which followed the first occupation of Bengal by the British, it seemed—and perhaps was—good policy to command the services of surrounding princes and potentates. In those days, and indeed at all periods, the East-India Company found their sphere of action limited by the smallness of their incomings. India is, in reality, a poor country, and, for its extent, yields a ridiculously small revenue. With a yearly increasing expenditure, the Company experienced no corresponding increase of receipts as the tide of conquest swelled and rolled onwards. Not merely their prosperity, but their very existence, depended on the maintenance of a large military force, utterly disproportioned to their means. It seemed, therefore, an excellent expedient to keep up a large force of auxiliaries without any additional expense, and to be able at any moment to call out some tens of thousands of disciplined troops without burdening the exchequer to the amount of a single anna. Our statesmen, too, perhaps smiled in their sleeve at the facilities thus afforded for "drifting" into a "difficulty" with a weaker neighbour, who, through various circumstances, might be unable to fulfil all his engagements. It was thus we acquired a large proportion of our present dominions, as, among others, the Nizam and the princes of Oude know to their cost. So far the medallion is not unpleasing in a political point of view; but it happens to have an obverse. That obverse we are now regarding. The rulers of the native independent states have wisely adopted a "trimming" policy. They save their territories by refusing to join the mutineers, and they save their heads by allowing their soldiery to act as they please. This soldiery has been trained and disciplined by our own officers, and is almost, if not quite, equal to our own sepoy regiments. In other words, we have taken every pains to render a doubtful friend a very formidable foe. So long as our paramount power was not securely established, so long as there existed internal enemies, this policy was less dangerous, if not altogether prudent and judicious. As the North-American Indians let fire fight fire, so were we not unwilling to combat native adversaries with native allies. But now the scene is changed, the curtain has fallen, and the stage is being swept clean for a new drama. A thrifty manager is, above all things, anxious to keep down the number of his supernumeraries. In like manner, the British Government will do well to throw overboard all contingents and subsidiaries, and trust entirely to its own corps dramatique. The wisest and the cheapest policy will be to leave to each independent state full and unrestricted power within its own frontiers. Beyond friendly relations and commercial treaties, we should hold no connection with them. In the fulness of time they will drop, like ripe fruit, into our hands; but it is a silly impatience that causes the boughs to be shaken before the fruit has come to maturity. The more atrocious the misgovernment of these principalities, the more certain will be their doom. But instead of insidious interference, our part is open abstinence from all intermeddling. Example is ten thousand times better than intrigue. If the people see that the Company's subjects are more happy and prosperous than themselves, they will not be long before they place themselves under the same rule. In no other manner is their sincerity to be relied on, or their loyalty to be trusted in the hour of perplexity and peril.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE MUTINY OF THE BENGAL ARMY.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—Every one well informed on Indian affairs must be forcibly struck by the masterly article in your Indian Mail of the 15th July on the mutiny of the Bengal army. It appears worthy of the greatest attention at the present crisis; and not a great many have had more opportunities of forming just opinions on such matters than myself, having passed my professional life in India, discharging the duties of various situations, military, civil, and political. I fully concur in all the statements and suggestions it contains, and could earnestly wish the same well-informed and judicious author would enlarge on the all-important subject. It must be a matter of surprise, it may be said incredulity, to those connected with that devoted army in past times, that it could be maddened into its present state, alike forfeiting its own advantages—surpassing, perhaps, any in the world—and turning upon its previously cherished European officers with frenzied feelings of destruction; as well might it be expected that a fond mother would turn upon its beloved offspring. But, most unhappily, so it is; and I must add my conviction that, allowing for much deterioration of late years from various causes, yet nothing short of a decided persuasion of the Government contemplating an attack on their customs and religion, could have driven them to such suicidal proceedings.

To talk of Russia or any other power inducing them, as some of the papers assert, is sheer folly,—ourselves alone could effect it. Any attempt of the kind from a foreign power might have retarded it; and some will surmise that seeking for foreign causes indicates a self-consciousness of serious error.

It may be observed that some are disposed to cast blame on the Court of East-India Directors. Individually I have more cause for complaint against them than for gratitude; but truth, justice, and the importance of the occasion require me to state, that to the reduction of their power may be traced the present deplorable state of affairs. Their proceedings are so much controlled by the home Government that they are relieved from nearly all responsibility. In fact, they stand to the governing of India as the European officers do to their native regiments, little more than automata, to carry out strictly superior orders. If we lose India, either now or hereafter, it will most assuredly be owing to the curtailment, or, as we may surmise to be intended eventually, the total abolition of that Court. The home Government, after long trial, proved itself incapable of directly managing its own colonies of European extraction, and who might consequently be supposed to be more easily understood, yet they were kept in a state of almost continual discontent, breaking out occasionally into open rebellion, seriously endangering all connection with the mother country, till of late years they have been allowed to govern themselves, and thus became contented and loyal. Now, India never can govern herself, at least not for a very indefinite period. Such being obviously the case—that is, the home Government can never satisfactorily rule our Indian empire, and that India cannot govern itself—the safest and most congenial must be a Power constituted like the Court of Directors, of men well informed about the country, the habits of the people, and capable of appreciating their peculiarities, but they should have such real power as would enable them fearlessly to resist dangerous measures; and the system of occasional meetings of proprietors to discuss freely important measures, and thus bring public opinion to bear, might be revived and extended. Such may be distasteful in some quarters, but the Indian empire is at stake, and assuredly, under the present system, it is likely to pass away. The religion and customs of the people should be held sacred by Power. Let missionaries do what they can as individuals, but all undue influence should be most carefully avoided. Reform, especially in such a country, must be the result of time and education,—very gradual, originating with the people. In short, they must be brought up to the point of reform, and not reform forced immaturity upon them; and thus, if under any temporary delusion we should be forced to retire on Calcutta, we would roll back like a returning tide, and be received with open arms by the people at large.

The annexation of Oude has been adverted to as a possible cause of dissatisfaction to the native troops, and from the large proportion of them coming from that country, it may be supposed a subject of extensive influence amongst them, whether for good or evil in this particular I would not say. In other respects, however, the measure has always appeared to me much to be regretted, however called for by misrule. It would have been a gratifying monument of our forbearance to point to, at all times. The sovereign of that country has always been faithful to our Government, and often aided us in time of need with large subsidies. His interests were completely identical with ours, and it need not be pointed out how very serviceable his assistance would be in times like the present—what a check his power would prove on doubtful regiments at Cawnpore and all around. His fidelity could not be doubted, and his large bodies of cavalry, chiefly Mahomedans, would be much dreaded. As to misrule, much exists in many places where more wisdom is supposed to prevail,—as Ireland, in past times,—and evils might have been modified, without absolute annihilation of the native Government. Oude might also have contributed to discourage the outbreak in another way, viz., the sepoys and their families residing in that country might have been more afraid of severe chastisement under the arbitrary authority of a native prince, if called upon by the British Government, than as at present ruled by ourselves.

I have always had serious doubts as to the policy of raising volunteer regiments for beyond sea-service. Young lads enlisting will be ready to agree to anything. They know not the serious inconvenience of boardship. Being ever called upon is doubtful, and at all events distant at the time of enlistment; but when subsequently brought really home to them in all its horrors, it is very likely to establish a lurking discontent. Volunteers may always be had from the army at large, and they will ever prove best for such extraordinary occasions. It causes bustle and promotion, which men like.

The destruction of all native powers may not be without influence in producing present disasters, first, by closing all channel for discontented enterprising spirits and bad men, discharged from our own army, to find vent for their feelings; and, second, our men might the more easily be impressed with unfavourable intentions on the part of our Government it is when free from all dangers from without. For instance, had Runjeet's rule still existed in the Punjab, the present outbreak would not have taken place.

It appears a question for serious consideration whether the native commissioned-officers are in a proper position,—whether too high or too low. Too high, considering that they rise from the ranks, and virtually uneducated, or too low for the responsibility attached to them. It appears more than doubtful whether any influence they might obtain would in very trying times be advantageously exercised in our behalf; whereas it could scarcely fail to give them an undue opinion of their own importance, and thus to think of matters foreign to their simple discharge of duty; my opinion is, that they have been made too much of. It would be well to hold in view the two great objects of their creation: first, to discharge the minor duties which European officers, in such a climate, could not undertake; second, as rewards for their faithful performance.

As to future arrangements, a great deal will depend upon the causes of the present outbreak, and it is to be feared, in one respect, that the unfortunate culprits have had great cause for complaint, and much to extenuate their guilt. However this may be, there is little doubt but that, under suitable regulations, the result will be greater stability to our Indian empire. The native troops will be satisfied of the extreme folly and inutility of such conduct as they have pursued; and, on our own part, greater watchfulness and consideration will be induced. The continuation of present general connections are too obviously for the good of all to allow of a deliberate separation.

The recruiting of high caste appears objectionable in the opinion of some. I would rather suggest the exclusion of none on the score of caste. It would naturally tend to excite an adverse feeling in the excluded, and we should always hold in operative recollection that our duty is to rule for the people's good, and all contributing to the support of government should have equal rights. Before, we excluded men of low caste; in future, let all be admitted,—many of inferior caste will thus be in our ranks.

I observe the late Sir C. Napier's opinion of the native army adverted to. He was a wonderful man, who seized with surprising aptitude the salient points of all subjects to which he adverted. His remarks on the young officers, however, appear in some respects a little inconsistent, as to drinking champagne, &c.; as to this, may it not be justly said, "look at home?" How many young officers have been obliged to resign for debt, and what scenes were exposed, a few years ago, before courts-martial.

Doubtless, the young officers are not altogether what could be wished; but it is very much owing to the absence of experienced officers to guide them. As a lieutenant-colonel commanding a regiment, I had not a single captain present, and only four lieutenants; one of those was adjutant, another quarter-master, and the other two were more qualified to do harm than good. Then there were seven or eight young ensigns. One great evil is the facility which the provincial banks afford to young officers obtaining money, and at a ruinous sacrifice. I know an instance of 60*l.*, the sum required, entailing the loss of 100*l.*

I have already said more than at first contemplated; but one important subject, "the rage of the day," remains, viz., education and competitive examinations for all public servants.

Though ever a decided advocate for education for all classes, poor and rich, even when many wise men doubted, yet it appears to me not free from serious objections in some respects; and it is an interesting fact, that it is since education has extended so much in the Indian army, that it has fallen off.

It is obvious that memory is the great requisite for ready educational acquirement, and it has been remarked that good memories are not often accompanied with sound judgment and other valuable qualities. How often does it happen that boys dull at school become eminent in life. Again, highly educated officers are likely to be more litigious, aspiring, and discontented with the dull routine of regular military life, desirous of absence from duty, and eager for any other employment, and the native army requires officers contented, fond of their regiments, their duties, and their men.

Formerly, no educational qualification was necessary, even for staff appointment; but latterly, passing examinations in two languages has been necessary, not only for staff, but for, I believe, the command of companies.

I would not have it supposed that I oppose education, particularly of a professional nature; but merely to point out the difficulty, in order that it may possibly be obviated. No doubt the system will exclude many sound-judging men of sterling value.

August 1, 1857.

Yours, H.

SIR,—As my communication of the 1st inst., signed "H," was too late for publication in your last number, I now add a few observations arising from the intelligence received by the mail of last week.

It appears to me clear, from various particulars of an authentic nature, that all cause for apprehension for our Indian empire has ceased; that the mutineers have had their day; the tide has turned; and that, even should the fall of Delhi be retarded, matters will recover fast.

It is also most clear and satisfactory, that it is, at least in origin, merely a military revolt, not only unaided by the inhabitants, but much to their horror—and further that all the native establishments of police, revenue, &c., &c., appear free from taint. In all these respects our rule has been severely tested, with most happy results.

I do not think a tenth part of the troops that broke out into open revolt, or were disarmed on suspicion, are traitors at heart; and that few, indeed, had any idea at first of the dreadful extremities to which events suddenly led them; and which unfortunately some of our early proceedings hastened, if they did not forced them into, partly through fear and self-defence.

It is also manifest that foreign powers are unconnected with it, and that Russia in particular would find rather discouragement in such events, for the extension of her empire, than otherwise. It is to her an awful warning. A close examination of the details show that many regiments of the line have withstood all temptation, and amongst them I observe two to which I belonged; as also a local corps which I raised and commanded for many years.

From all these facts it appears, that, taking into account the certainty of speedy re-action, a large force will be available for the restoration of order, and that arrangements for the future may come under immediate review.

On this head some points occur to me that may appear not unworthy of consideration.

1. The severest unrelenting example possible should be made of those corps or portions of corps which have been guilty of atrocities against their officers and Europeans in general.

2. Those regiments guilty of open mutiny should be punished severely, only by selection of their instigators and leaders.

3. The rest of those regiments, as well as all others known to have been prepared to revolt, should be re-enlisted under revised regulations of a stringent nature, including flogging—of course, allowing their discharge to all not liking to re-enlist.

4. All regiments remaining loyal, either in part or whole, should be distinguished by the prefix of "Royal," with considerable promotion, which may be the more extensive because unattended with expense, as all will be required to make good the deficiency created by the annihilation of the mutineers.

5. As a general permanent rule, promotion by seniority not to be attended to, but to be conferred upon such as may prove their devotion to the service in the opinion of their European officers.

6. Regiments should be held severely responsible, both as a body and individually, for the safety of their European officers.

7. Such augmentation of European officers to regiments as will, ensure, combined with some obvious restrictive rules, a suitable number of standing and character to be always present.

8. Continue to extend the system of dependent chiefs and native powers.

I shall now offer some remarks on those suggestions. Some will object to flogging. It should doubtless exist, but be used with the greatest moderation. It will be readily understood that the fear of prompt severity will contribute to exclude the first contemplation of evil; whereas when, on the contrary, punishment is mild, distant, and doubtful, people will think of and discuss much that they otherwise dare not venture upon.

The absolute necessity of constant attention to have qualified officers in command of regiments, as well as the presence of subordinate officers of standing and merit, is too obvious to require much notice.

Perhaps the most desirable way of effecting this would be to augment the lieutenants of each regiment.

If officers be excluded from political and other non-regimental employments, not only will they be discouraged and thrown into a drowsy state, but the public service will also be under serious disadvantages, for the army furnishes highly qualified men for rough work and trying times like the present. The plea of expense is obviously groundless, as every officer so employed saves a civilian who would cost more. The scheme, long under thought, of a staff corps to meet the emergency, will not be found to answer so well.

The re-enlisting (vide suggestion 3d) holds out two advantages, that men entering under the new rules could not afterwards complain of their being forced upon them contrary to original agreement. 2d. The forfeiture of all the advantages attending previous length of service, would act as a most suitable and salutary punishment, coming home to them all their lives. All the native commissioned and non-commissioned officers should retain their rank respectively, but with date only from the new enlisting.

All measures should tend to the restoration of European officers to their former influential position.

Regarding Suggestion 8, I observe that part of the public press view present events as decisive proofs against our allowing native powers and dependent chiefs to exist in India. In my opinion, it is quite the reverse—that our policy is shown to be an extension of such, rather than diminution. They may be considered friends to our rule, and interested in its duration; besides the wisdom of such general application to India, as having as great a variety of interests as possible, so that if discontent should arise in one, others might be free from its influence. It is too common to find people forward to condemn as bad all that exists, because some casual evil arises. Even the emperor of Delhi is no exception to our wise policy. He has probably been forced to give some countenance to the rebels, as to his own and even our own advantage, and wait the turn of affairs; but if sincere in his enmity, it is better we should be open to the reproach, if such it could possibly be, of having treated him too kindly, than of having given him just cause of resentment by an opposite course. His ancestor we found a prisoner in Delhi, with his eyes put out, as a disqualification for reigning, when Lord Lake captured that city in 1803. We restored him to his throne and palace, with a handsome income, and treated him and his descendants with imperial respect. The world will thus naturally contrast most favourably for us, instead of thinking we have been treated as we deserve.—H.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

RESPECTED FRIEND,—The mutiny and rebellion of so large a portion of the native East-Indian army is a calamity which requires great precautionary measures, not only for the present, but also for the future, as to the course to be adopted with those ignorant and misguided men. When the rebellion is suppressed, the question will consequently arise, What is to be done with the mutineers? The adopting of the Draconic law has already created, with some of the regiments, the dangerous effect of so exasperating the survivors as to excite them to mutiny and rebellion, instead of restoring order amongst them; and therefore not only mercy but expediency and discretion also, require that sanguinary punishment shall not be resorted to. This merciful course produced the desired effect on the suppression of the Irish rebellion in 1798, and so it will do with the sepoy rebellion. But upon the rebellion being suppressed, these fifty thousand or more or less mutineers will find themselves thrown upon the country, without the pay or other means for support which they have heretofore received as soldiers; and in this state, and to provide for themselves, they will be committing perhaps worse outrages, in bodies of greater or lesser numbers, among the peaceable inhabitants, than they have done as mutineers, unless some sources are devised for employing them. And the object of this letter is to suggest the remedy for meeting that difficulty, being the same that was adopted in many localities in Great Britain, when upwards of 100,000 militiamen and other soldiers were disbanded, soon after the termination of the long war of 1815. At that time, the apprehension of dangerous consequences from those soldiers, and also the necessity of providing them with the means for subsistence, induced the upper and middle classes of the inhabitants to contribute liberal subscriptions for employing those disbanded soldiers, and others of the working population who were also thrown out of their accustomed occupations, in re-forming, levelling, or widening roads, or such other useful employment as could be proposed for them.

And a similar system appears to be the most desirable amongst the late mutinous sepoys of British India. Great sacrifices will be required by one course or the other, as, if the mutineers are not provided with employment, they will live by some means without it, and disastrous outrages will be the certain consequences; and therefore it is proposed that employment should be offered to them on the forming of roads in such parts of British India where they are most required, as the surest and safest means for restoring those ignorant and rebellious natives to subjection under the British rule; and this course will insure their future gratitude instead of their future revenge.

Trusting that these remarks will be deemed worth inserting in the Indian Mail,

I am, respectfully,

Warrington, 9th of 8th mo., 1857.

EMBODIMENT OF THE MILITIA.

Lord Panmure brought in a bill to enable the Government to embody certain regiments of the militia, should the requirements of the public service render such a step necessary during the recess. The object of this measure is to supply the vacuum which is created by the demand in India for forces from this country. In order to do that the Government have determined, in the first place, to raise ten new battalions to supply the place of those that have already left this country, and they have also determined to raise the battalions of the regiments at home from 840 rank and file to 1,000, and to raise those in India from 1,000 to 1,200. This, indeed, could be done without the powers of the present Mutiny Act, which provides that the charge for regiments going to India shall fall upon the revenue of the East-India Company, and not upon the revenue of the Imperial Treasury. But at the present season of the year this additional force could not be raised without some delay, and consequently the services of the militia might be required to do garrison duty in lieu of the troops suddenly called into active service.

WORKS IN INDIA.

In reply to Col. W. Patten, Mr. V. Smith promised to lay annually before Parliament the following returns: "1. A return of the sums expended in each year in British India in the construction of roads and bridges, and works of navigation; specifying the districts in which they have been constructed, and the length and expense of new road and navigation in each district. 2. A similar return as regards the construction of works of irrigation, distinguishing those which serve the purpose of navigation and irrigation, and including the construction or improvement of water tanks.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

THE KING OF OUDE.

Lord Campbell said he had just received a petition which he felt it his duty to present, in order that it might be generally known that their lordships were ready to hear the petitions of all persons who addressed them with proper respect. The petition came from the Queen of Oude, the eldest son, and the brother of the King of Oude. They expressed the deepest pain and regret at the news recently received from the East-Indies of the general defection of the troops in the Bengal presidency, and they went on to state their surprise at its being supposed that their relative, the King of Oude, had been at all concerned in that movement. They denied all complicity in it on the part of the sovereign, and they said they felt confident, from assurances they received from him, that he was entirely innocent of the charges brought against him; that all the members of the royal family of Oude were faithfully attached to the connection with Great Britain, and that for the redress of any wrongs they thought they had suffered they only looked to the Queen and Parliament of Great Britain. The prayer of the petition was that it might be disclosed to the King of Oude what charges were made against him and that they might have the opportunity of proving his innocence and of corresponding with him. He had done his duty in presenting the petition, but he must express his confidence that the Government of India, in what they had done in the matter referred to had acted with perfect propriety. He individually had entire confidence in their wisdom in that respect, but at the same time it gave him satisfaction to witness this testimony from the royal family of Oude of their devoted attachment to this country, and he should rejoice if the charges against the King of Oude should prove to be unfounded.

Lord Redesdale, however, having noticed that the word "humble" was not attached to the petition, according to the invariable usage of their lordships' House, Lord Campbell at once consented to withdraw the petition.

CLOTHING FOR THE TROOPS IN INDIA.

In reply to an inquiry by Sir H. Willoughby, Sir J. Ramsden read the list of articles issued to the troops on their arrival in India, in addition to the ordinary supply of necessaries which they had in this country. They were as follows: for the cavalry, four white jackets each, six pairs of white overalls, two pairs of Settringee overalls, six shirts, four pairs of cotton socks, and one pair of white braces. For foot soldiers, four white jackets, one pair of English summer trousers, five pairs of white trousers, five white shirts, two check shirts, and one pair of white braces. Those articles were not supplied in this country, but formed a part of the soldiers' necessaries on his arrival in India, and were made of material made on the spot, and best suited to the climate. During his stay in India, China, Ceylon, and at other hot stations, he was provided with a tunic and shell jacket in alternate years, and in the year in which the tunic was not issued the difference in the value of the two articles was paid to the soldier, to be expended, under the authority of the officer commanding, for his benefit in any articles suited to the climate of the station. In addition to these, the troops now going out to China and India had been provided with white cotton helmet and forage cap covers.

TROOPS FOR INDIA.

In reply to Mr. W. Vansittart, who inquired if any additional Queen's troops had been sent to Bombay and Madras to replace the regiments which had been despatched from those presidencies to Calcutta,

Mr. V. Smith said, that since the unfortunate occurrences in India, her Majesty's Government had sent one regiment and a battalion of the 60th Rifles to replace the regiment which was withdrawn from the Madras Presidency during the Crimean war. They had also sent four regiments to Point de Galle, to rendezvous until they were sent, at the discretion of the Governor-General, to Bombay, Madras, or Calcutta. Besides that, the Directors of the East-India Company had applied to her Majesty's Government, and her Majesty's Government had complied with the request, to send two regiments of foot to Madras, two regiments of foot to Bombay, and two companies of foot artillery to each presidency. The 3rd Dragoon Guards were also sent to Bombay.

THE ROYAL FAMILY OF OUDE.

Sir F. Kelly presented a petition from the Queen and Princes of Oude, expressing their deep regret at the deplorable events in India, and their continued devotion and attachment to the British sovereign and people. They prayed that they might be permitted to communicate with the King of Oude, declared their conviction of his entire innocence, and hoped that he might be allowed a full opportunity of refuting the charges which had been brought against him. In conclusion, the petitioners, while insisting that they had suffered grievous wrong, declared themselves ready to rely upon the justice of the British Sovereign, Parliament, and people.

Tuesday, August 11.

Sir De Lacy Evans drew attention to the military arrangements for meeting the contingency in the Bengal native army, taking a comprehensive view of the possible effects of the events in India upon the interests of the country, foreign and domestic, and recommended that troops should be sent from Malta, Canada, and the Cape.

Lord Palmerston made a detailed reply to the suggestions of Sir De Lacy, to whose opinions, he said, he had listened with the respect and deference due to his high military character. He had, however, in his opinion, over-estimated the European difficulty that might be produced by the events in India. The nations of the world had seen with what an unanimous spirit and energy the British people had responded to the call which the Government made to them in a moment of national emergency. While some 30,000 troops had been sent to India, troops were being raised at home as fast as possible; and not only was the regular army being increased, but a portion of the militia was about to be embodied. Recent events in India were undoubtedly serious; but, as far as Europe and foreign countries were concerned, nothing had occurred to alter the conditions of peace. He assured Sir De Lacy and the House that while the Government were at present doing all they thought necessary to meet the difficulty, not going beyond the necessity, if events should take a turn different from what they expected, they felt they had at hand the resource of calling Parliament together, and asking for additional means of national defence.

Mr. Whiteside read extracts from a letter in the Times, signed An Anglo-Indian, and thence attempted to infer that it was the intention of Government to put down caste. The Government had exhibited no foresight, no watchfulness, no judgment.

Mr. V. Smith entered his protest against the assertion, which he denied, that the Government were not aware of the gravity of the events in India, and asked whether it was worthy of that gravity for a member to come down, as Mr. Whiteside had done, with scraps of newspapers, and to found upon anonymous statements charges against the Government of India, the conduct and policy of which Mr. Smith defended, commending the judgment and vigour displayed by Lord Canning.

Mr. Disraeli was dissatisfied with the speeches both of the Premier and of the President of the Board of Control. Nothing had occurred since his recent speech upon the subject of India to refute the opinion he then expressed, that the outbreak was not a military mutiny, and that one of its causes was the tampering by the Indian Legislature with the religious prejudices of the people. He warned the Government that everything depended upon the second campaign, which would commence in November; if our energy and resources were adequate it might re-establish our empire upon a firmer foundation; but if that campaign should prove unfortunate, and a third was entered upon, we should have others to contend with besides the princes of India. The Governor-General, he remarked, was not an isolated individual; he was surrounded by men—the Council of India—whose conceit and arrogance had endangered our Indian empire, and who ought to be called to account.

Col. Sykes read extracts of a letter from Col. Edwardes, at Peshawar, who stated that the mutinous soldiery had met with very little sympathy from the people in any part of the country, and that the Hindoo sepoys were beginning to find that they were made tools of by the Mahomedans. He showed the extreme danger attending the slightest interference with the laws of caste, owing to the jealous susceptibility of the Hindoos upon this point.

Lord John Russell, in reply to Mr. Disraeli, expressed his conviction, that whatever errors the Indian Government might have committed, it had imparted a great amount of good to the people of India, and that its intentions were as benevolent towards the people as those of any Government that ever existed. The mutiny, he observed, must be put down; tranquillity must be restored in India, and it was the primary duty of the House to assure the Executive Government that its support should not be wanting. There was one subject, he remarked, respecting which he had heard no explanation—the financial efforts which the Indian Government would have to make, large amounts of treasure having been seized, and it being but too certain that there would be great irregularity in the payment of the taxes. The Imperial Government should, in his opinion, aid the financial efforts of the Company, and he trusted they would not hesitate to give them the assistance they required.

SIR C. NAPIER AND THE EAST-INDIA DIRECTORS.

Mr. H. A. Bruce drew attention to a statement contained in a return on land tenures made by the East-India Directors on the 18th of June last, which charged Sir C. Napier with having, while Governor of Scinde, sold the grain to the people at famine prices, and purposely raised the market standard in order to increase the revenue. The charge had been rebutted by Sir C. Napier; but his reply could not be found. Mr. Pringle, his successor, and Col. Rathbone, his collector, gave strong evidence in favour of the wisdom, justice, and humanity of Sir Charles's rule.

Mr. Willoughby explained that the statement was founded on an official report. Sir Charles was not answerable for the revenue system; but for the manner in which it was carried out.

Mr. Roebuck, with some warmth, vindicated the character of Sir Charles Napier, and with equal bitterness accused the Home Government and that of India with hating that great man because he was a great man.

Mr. D. Seymour said that the paragraph in question had been accidentally inserted in the return, and protested against all suspicion of a desire on the part of the Bombay Government to depreciate Sir Charles's character.

Mr. Butt thought it was incumbent on the House to insist that Sir Charles Napier's reply should be forthcoming.

EXPENSE OF BRITISH TROOPS IN INDIA.

In reply to Sir H. Willoughby, the Chancellor of the Exchequer said that it had been the duty of the Government to communicate with the Court of Directors of the East-India Company on the subject of their finances, and the latter, being informed that her Majesty's Government were ready to consider any representation they might desire to make as to a change in the law regarding their power of borrowing money, or any financial assistance they might wish to receive from the Government, stated that they did not find themselves under the necessity of applying to the Government at present for any financial assistance; that their present means were ample in the existing state of the Indian treasury. Her Majesty's Government, therefore, as at present advised, did not feel called upon to submit to Parliament any proposition upon this subject.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

THE BENGAL ENGINEERS.

The Earl of Ellenborough said, it would be in their lordships' recollections that about a month ago a noble and gallant lord, who he regretted was not now present—Lord Melville—had made some statements with respect to the discipline of the Bengal army, in the course of which he mentioned a complaint communicated to him by an officer, to whom it had been made by a non-commissioned officer of, he believed, the 3d Bombay native infantry. The complaint was that, notwithstanding orders to prevent persons from passing, three engineer officers of the Bengal army had forced their way through a gate after the capture of Mooltan; that they were questioned as to what was covered by a certain tarpaulin, and replied that it was engineering stores; but that upon the removal of the tarpaulin it was discovered that plunder was concealed beneath. This struck him as very extraordinary. He received, only two days ago, a letter from Major Harvey Maxwell, of the Bengal engineers, who was brigade-major of the engineers at the siege of Mooltan, and who requested him to state, on behalf of himself and twenty-three officers of the corps who were present at the siege, that the matter was inquired into by the late Gen. Whish, and that it was found the officers were not guilty of that which was imputed to them. Why the result of that inquiry was not communicated to Lord Melville, Major Maxwell did not know. Major Maxwell had written to him, and begged—as he (Lord Ellenborough) thought, with great reason—that their lordships would suspend their judgment until the particulars of the inquiry were sent from India. As it happened, Gen. Whish had been dead several years, and therefore he was afraid it might be difficult to obtain the information which had been written for. With respect to the Bengal engineers, all he knew was that they were selected officers taken for the engineer corps by competitive examination, having entrusted to them matters of great responsibility, and he had never yet heard of a single instance in which the smallest charge was made against one of the officers of that corps.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

COALING STATIONS FOR INDIAN TRANSPORTS.

In reply to Mr. Stafford, Mr. H. Baring explained that, under the engagements between the East-India Company and the owners of steamers taken up to convey troops to India, the latter were bound to provide coals for the entire passage. He was able to assure the hon. gentleman that the European and American Steam-Ship Company, from whom four ships had been chartered, had provided such a supply of coal at St. Vincent's as would suffice to take those ships to Calcutta without stopping at any intermediate place. The owners of the other vessels would no doubt take means to provide coal, and he believed there would be no difficulty in obtaining coal at Madeira and the Cape de Verd Islands. As to the steps which had been taken by the Board of Admiralty to assist the shipowners, he was able to state that, when the hostilities with China commenced, care had been taken to replenish the stores of coal at all the naval stations, and those stores had been kept up ever since. As soon as the news of the Indian mutinies arrived and it was known that troops would have to be sent out, the Board of Admiralty informed the East-India Company, that if any of the transports should require coal from any of her Majesty's naval stations, and more especially the Cape of Good Hope, the storekeepers would supply them. He could assure the House that, after deducting the coals necessarily used for the supply of ships going to China, there still remained an ample store at the Cape of Good Hope to fill up the deficiencies of screw-ships going to India.

NAVIGATION OF INDIAN RIVERS.

The Court of Directors of the East-India Company have appointed a commission to investigate the subject of navigating shallow rivers, and to specify the description of boat which they consider best adapted for employment on the Indus and other Indian rivers. The commission consists of Major J. H. G. Crawford, Bombay Engineers; Capt. Balfour, N.I.; and B. Winter, Esq., C.E. We understand that these gentlemen have proceeded to visit the Danube and the Rhone, the characteristics of which rivers are supposed to be analogous to many of the rivers of India.

The Sindh Railway Company have made arrangements with the East-India Company for establishing a line of steamers on the Indus, in connection with the Sindh and Punjab railways, and they will use the description of boat which may be recommended by the commission above mentioned.

We understand, also, that arrangements have been made with Mr. Bourne, under which he has engaged to place upon the Indus a train of boats of the description which he has so long advocated for shallow streams. We are glad that an opportunity will then be given of practically testing the adaptation of Mr. Bourne's system to the internal navigation of India.

RAILWAYS IN INDIA.

Mr. C. Freshfield, in respect to an application made to the Chairman and Directors of the East-India Company for a guarantee on the proposed Oude Railway, advanced the position that the arrangements between the East-India Company and the various companies for making railways in India, embodied in the guarantee of interest, had not, up to this point, involved present burden on the revenues and resources of India, and that the experience of the working of railways was sufficient to dispel the apprehension that there would be any ultimate charge on those revenues and resources, resulting from the guarantee. He adverts in his statement to the past history of railways in India, the unsatisfactory nature of the contracts, and the impossibility of estimating the profit of a railway where the course of the line, the mode of construction, the cost of the railway, the working and the fares, were all to be prescribed by an external authority, whose interests must in many respects be at variance with those of the railway company. The appointment by the East-India Company of an ex officio director, with a veto on the proceedings of the Board, then the obligation to submit the matter to the Directors of the East-India Company, and afterwards to the Board of Control, had caused much delay and complications in the progress of the various undertakings in course of execution. He believed that the following propositions would be found to be substantially correct—namely:—

"1. That the East-India Company (under the stipulation by which all the capital raised by the railway companies has been, and must be paid into the treasury of the East-India Company) have always been in possession of a much larger sum than the aggregate interest advanced by them under their guarantee.

"2. As to the East-Indian Railway Company, that the East-India Company have now about 1,250,000*l.*, or thereabouts, of the capital of that company in their hands, while the aggregate amount of interest paid to that company does not exceed 600,000*l.*, or thereabouts.

"3. As to the Bombay Railway Company, that the East-India Company have now in their hands about 2,000,000*l.* of the capital of that company, while the aggregate amount of interest paid to that company does not exceed 220,000*l.*, or thereabouts.

"4. As to the Madras Railway Company, that the East-India Company have now 1,000,000*l.*, or thereabouts, of the capital of that company in their hands, while the aggregate amount of interest paid by the East-India Company to that company does not exceed 150,000*l.*

"5. During all the time that the railway capital has lain in the hands of the East-India Company it has been employed at interest, or with equal advantage, for the purposes of the East-India Company."

He states that it is quite clear that up to this time, not only have the railway companies not been a burden on the revenues or resources of India, but that the East India Company has actually, during the period of seven years which has intervened since their establishment, been in possession, through means of their capital, of considerable sums over and above the sums advanced for interest, which have been available for their own purposes; that this state of things would continue at all times, so long as the capital of the railway companies was in course of subscription, and until their capital accounts were closed. The railway companies were always ready and willing to call up capital in order to secure the guaranteed interest, and the East India Company, as their self-stipulated bankers, had at all times the control and use of the money subscribed.

With respect to one observation by the Chairman of the East India Company, doubting whether future railways should not be left to their own inherent prospects, Mr. Freshfield states that he had given much consideration to the question, and had arrived at two main conclusions, viz. :—

"1. That the railway companies, as individual enterprises, would do better without the guarantee of the East-India Company, if its absence would secure them immunity from the control and restrictions imposed in the contract, and submitted to for the sake of the guarantee; assuming always that the capital could be raised without a guarantee.

"2. That the East-India Company derives a large benefit from the guarantee through the conditions which it enables the Court to impose upon the railway companies, and through the means which it affords of obtaining the necessary capital; and that it is neither their interest nor their policy to resign it.

"In arriving at these conclusions, he assumed that the restrictive stipulations in the contract submitted to by the railway companies were the price of the guarantee, and that if the guarantee were not given those conditions could not be exacted, but that the railway companies must be, as in England, free and unfettered; and, further, that the interests of India required that the railway system should have full scope in that country at the earliest period, and that there was no class of public works there which was of such primary importance as the establishment of roads through the country."

The stipulations in the contract not only involve great advantages to the East-India Company, but leave the railway company tied and bound in their hands. After adverting to the inducements held out for large investments of English capital in foreign railways, he states that it is for the East-India Company, as the Government of India, to consider whether they should be backward in undertaking and encouraging these great works, and lose the opportunity of securing the capital for the purpose, while it is open to them.

CEYLON RAILWAY.

The annual meeting of this company was held yesterday at the London Tavern, Mr. A. Hastie, M.P., in the chair.

The report stated that the directors are now in a position to lay before the proprietors a final arrangement in three agreements concluded by the company with Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, and confirmed by ordinances of the governor and legislative council of Ceylon. It was only on the 6th of July last that the contract for the construction of the railway was finally accepted by the Home Government, after a survey of the country made by Captain Moorsom, an experienced engineer recently sent out for the purpose by Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies. Capt. Moorsom made a very favourable report to the Ceylon government. In accordance with a provision of the contract with the government, the directors have paid into Bank of England 31,839*l.* to a government account, making, with 8,160*l.* allowed by the contract for preliminary expenses, 40,000*l.* as a first instalment of capital bearing guaranteed interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the 6th of July as regards the sum of 8,160*l.*, and from the 1st of August as regards the remainder; interest at the same rate will run on future instalments of capital from the dates of their being paid, as may be required, to the government accounts. Measures are being taken for organizing an engineering staff to proceed to Ceylon, and every effort will be made to send out the necessary materials and to push on the works as rapidly as possible. It is proposed that the Board should consist, as at present (including the ex officio director), of nine directors. The first vacancy which may occur should be reserved for the ordinary director whom the Ceylon government will become entitled under the contract to nominate on acquiring shares to the amount of 50,000*l.* A sum of 1,729*l.* has been received for interest on the deposits. The proprietors will probably wish that the interest which has been thus earned by the use of their money should be divided among them. It amounts to 9*d.*, free from income tax, on each registered share, as a settlement for interest to the 1st of August. The statement of receipts and payments to the 6th of July showed that 45,859*l.* had been received, and 8,183*l.* expended, leaving a balance of 37,675*l.* The liabilities of the company amounted to 1,892*l.*, including 985*l.* solicitor's bill, 500*l.* brokerage, and 407*l.* advances made by the directors.

The Secretary then read the heads of three agreements entered into with the Government for making a railway from Colombo to Kandy, in Ceylon, the route to be selected by the local government, the crown lands to be given free to the company for the concession of 99 years. On obtaining possession of the land, the company are to proceed with the railway. A Government engineer would be employed to inspect the line, and the Government may require the company to open the line in sections. The first section from Colombo to a station not beyond Ambeposse is to be opened in three years, and the whole line in five years after obtaining possession of the land, with power to the Secretary of State for the Colonies to extend the period for opening it if he should think it necessary; the fares to be fixed by the Ceylon Government, so as not to allow the profits to exceed 8 per cent. It is also stipulated that the post-office service should be performed by the railway company free of charge. The capital to be 800,000*l.*, but may be increased to 1,200,000*l.*, provided the line exceed 90 miles in length. A dividend of 6 per cent., payable half-yearly, is guaranteed on a capital of 800,000*l.*, including preliminary expenses, and 5 per cent. per annum on any sum beyond that amount up to 1,200,000*l.*; the surplus revenue over 6 per cent. to be divided between the Ceylon Government and the company until all advances by the Government in the shape of interest are repaid; the whole of the surplus would then belong to the company. On giving up the line to the Government at the end of 99 years, the latter are to pay the company the value of the rolling stock. Powers are given enabling the Government to purchase the railway at the end of 25 years, and in case of default by the company, the Government have power, under the agreement, to take possession of the line, and to convert the then paid-up capital into an annuity of 5 per cent. for 99 years. The supplemental agreements postponed operations until the result of the Government survey was known, enabling the Ceylon Government to appoint a director on subscribing 50,000*l.* towards the undertaking, and allowing the company 8,160*l.* for expenses, and a further sum for other items also incurred for law and other expenses.

The Chairman moved a formal resolution adopting the agreements entered into with Her Majesty's Government, which was seconded and carried unanimously.

Resolutions were passed fixing the number of directors at nine, re-electing Messrs. Hastie, Anstruther, J. G. Frith, H. G. Gordon, Macvicar, Stuart, Jolly, and Nairne. The election of auditors was postponed. The remuneration of the directors was fixed at 1,200*l.* a year from the 6th of July last, and 1,200*l.* was placed at their disposal for past services; a dividend of 9*d.* per share was declared payable on the registered shares of the company.

The proceedings concluded with a vote of thanks to the chairman and directors.

THE ARMY.

THE TROOPS FOR INDIA.

The whole of the large force placed under orders for India before the arrival of the last mail will have embarked by the end of this week. It has since been determined substantially to increase the reinforcements, and along with some addition to the royal artillery force, two regiments of cavalry and four of infantry will be immediately placed under orders for the East. The 7th hussars will be one of the cavalry corps; the other is not yet selected, but either the 4th or 5th dragoon guards will probably be chosen. The infantry regiments for this service are the 56th, 66th, 72nd Highlanders, and another not yet determined on, but which in all likelihood will be the 44th regiment. They will be made up to 1,200 each. In consequence of the large artillery force being sent out, Major-General Dupuis will proceed in command of that branch of the army, and we presume, from the great increase to the European troops, that some of the colonels of the army will be appointed to the command of brigades, with the temporary rank of major-general.

AUGMENTATION OF ROYAL ARTILLERY FORCE FOR INDIA.

Woolwich, August 4.

This morning, at eight o'clock, the 5th and 8th companies of the 14th battalion royal artillery, under the command of Captains Paget and Ommannay, proceeded to Greenhithe, and embarked on board the steam vessel Warrior Queen, which will leave the river direct for India. The remaining four companies, under orders for the same destination, will, as at present arranged, embark tomorrow. This afternoon an important general regimental order was issued at head-quarters, by the terms of which it appears that government intend to send an artillery force to India, comprising nearly double the number of officers and men that were previously determined on. In addition to the eight troops and companies now on their departure, Lieut.-Colonel H. F. Strange's C troop, Lieut.-Colonel J. Turner's H troop of royal horse artillery, and no less than twelve companies of foot artillery were this day placed under orders to be in readiness for immediate embarkation to India. As each troop and company will be made up to 150 gunners, exclusive of officers and artificers, the total force under orders this day is about 2300 officers and men.

THE MUTINY IN INDIA.

The reports of the proceedings at some of the loyal meetings of Hindoos and Mahometans in India, although brief, contain some points worthy of notice, as exhibiting the sound good feeling manifested towards the Imperial Government. Thus, a meeting was held by some young men at the premises of Baboo Gooroo Churn Dey, Bhowanipore, Chuckerbaria, in the suburbs of Calcutta, and a committee was appointed, who "felt it a necessity to remove false apprehensions and unfounded tales regarding the exaggerated affairs of mutiny" from the minds of peaceful subjects. The committee arrive at the conclusion that "some of the members will alternately take round at every night, with a view of catching or detecting any wrongdoer that may be found in the work of abetting some such malicious tales or rumours as the town will be 'looted' and plundered by the Sepoys on some certain day, and its inhabitants be cut down to pieces; and will, by every means in their power, impress on the minds of timid and credulous people the idea of the mightiness of the power of the British Government to repel aggression of any foreign enemy, however powerful and indomitable, or put down any internal disturbance and disorder." The committee thought it desirable to add to the numerical strength of their members by enlisting the sympathy and co-operation of all the respectable inhabitants of Bhowanipore, and to hold meetings occasionally to consider further measures, if necessary; and, in order to carry their object into full effect, the committee secured the services of some strong and brave men, and thought it proper to ask the magistrates of the 24th Pergunnahs the co-operation, if necessary, of the police. The committee finally determined to communicate to the Government these "noble feelings of loyalty and attachment to the beneficial rule that had actuated them to meet." The names of the committee are worth quoting as an exercise for the pronunciation of Hindoo words. These loyal subjects included the following "baboo":—Gooroo Churn Dey, Essan Chunder Mullick, Womesh Chunder Mitter, Raj Mohendro Mitter, Nubo Kissen Bose, Chunder Coomer Bose, Prosono Coomer Dey, Russick Chunder Dutto, Puttit Pabun Daurjee, Prosono Coomer Chaturjee, Huro Prosad Chaturjee, Umbica Churn Banurjee, Khettur Mohun Doss, and Copal Chunder Goopla. The Mahometans of Calcutta met and expressed "the utmost confidence in the Government," and declared that "having formed (found?) a dwelling and asylum under the Government, where they live in peace and safety, protected by the equity and fostering care of the British Government, and suffering no kind of injury or loss;" that having, moreover, ever lived in safety and comfort under British rule, and having never been interfered with in religious matters, they were determined "with the utmost eagerness and sincerity to serve the Government in case of necessity to the utmost of their abilities and means." The murder of "God's creatures" by the bloodthirsty and barbarous mutineers excited "feelings of deep regret and disgust" in the bosoms of the loyal Mahometans. The inhabitants of the town and zillah of Baraset tell the Governor-General that they "observed with the deepest regret that ignorant, designing, and artful individuals, under slight or no pretext, have raised a feeling of suspicion in the minds of the native soldiers and the uneducated population towards the Government." "We therefore beg (they continue) to offer your Lordship a sincere and grateful expression of our confidence, that in its endeavours for the moral and social improvement of the people of this country the British Government has been actuated by the purest of motives. History does not record a conquering nation different in faith from the conquered, more tolerant towards the religious belief of its subjects. Up to this period of its history we fully believe that there has been no intention on the part of Government to interfere with the religious belief of any sect or caste of the natives of this country, but that on the other hand there has always been a marked and decided endeavour to avoid in any way disturbing the religious feelings of either Hindoo or Mussulman." The Americans of Calcutta also came forward to support the Government; and last, though by no means least, the French residents, headed by their Consul at Calcutta, issued the following manifesto, which we print in the original:—"En présence des graves circonstances dans lesquelles se trouve actuellement le pays par suite de la révolte à mains armées de certains régiments natis de l'Inde, les soussignés, tous résidents Français à Calcutta, en vue des dangers qui peuvent menacer d'un moment à l'autre les propriétés, les familles, et la vie, se sont réunis d'un commun accord et viennent se mettre à la disposition de votre Excellence, en cas de besoin, la priant de vouloir bien accepter leurs services pour le salut commun, et comme preuve de patriotisme et de dévouement envers Sa Majesté la Reine d'Angleterre." These loyal addresses were all duly acknowledged by the Indian Government.

CONSISTORY COURT—TUESDAY.

LING V. LING.

This was a cause of separation on the ground of adultery, brought by Major Ling against his wife. The parties were married in India in 1849, Mrs. Ling being the daughter of Sir John Littler, G.C.B., and there were two children of such marriage still living. In the month of January, 1855, Major and Mrs. Ling came back to England from the East, and went to reside at Sir John Littler's house at Brigadon, in Devonshire, until December 8, in the same year, when Major Ling, having obtained an appointment in the Osmanli Irregulars, left for Turkey. A short time after his departure, Mrs. Ling was detected by Lady Littler in a clandestine correspondence with Major Croker, who had been an aide-de-camp of Sir John Littler in India. Sir John Littler, in the meantime, had died, and Lady Littler dismissed her daughter.

ter from Brigadon. Mrs. Ling then occupied various lodgings in different parts of London, and at length was discovered living with Major Croker, at No. 5, Alsop-place, New-road, where the couple passed as Mr. and Mrs. Thompson. It will be remembered that a short time since there was a civil action, in which Major Ling recovered 1000*l.* damages from Major Croker. On behalf of Mrs. Ling, and in answer to the charge of adultery, a recriminatory plea was put forward. It was asserted that Major Ling had committed adultery with a married lady during the return voyage from India, and while Mrs. Ling was ill from her confinement.

Drs. Jenner and Middleton appeared for Mrs. Ling; Drs. Curtis and Phillimore for Major Ling.

The Court said that, looking at the evidence, it was impossible to deny there were facts and circumstances which raised a case of considerable suspicion against Major Ling; but out of the five witnesses who deposed against him four could not be said to have given impartial testimony, as they were undoubtedly biased in favour of Mrs. Ling. The adultery of the wife was most distinctly proved, and nothing could have been more vain than any attempt to assert the contrary. Not only was the adultery established beyond doubt, but the case was one of as gross a character as had ever stained the annals of the court. Looking at all the circumstances, he (the learned judge) was of opinion that the charge of adultery against the husband fell to the ground, and that the Court must pronounce a sentence of divorce against Mrs. Ling.

DIRECT CADETS.—The following gentlemen, having obtained nomination as Direct Cadets for the Indian Military Service, passed their required examination on the 4th instant:—J. C. Berkeley, H. W. H. Cox, T. W. Hogg, H. W. Irons, H. A. Plowden, A. G. Ross, C. H. Webb, T. C. Wharton, F. C. W. Drummond, J. S. Irvine, H. B. Webster, R. Milne, F. J. Granville, W. F. Bartleman, W. N. L. Beattie, W. Birch, W. T. Brereton, L. B. Byass, G. E. Erskine, W. H. B. Fitzgerald, W. L. S. Harrison, R. C. Kinchant, A. P. Martin, G. E. Martin, H. K. O'Grady, G. Randell, H. U. Smith, G. C. Swiney.

GENERAL WILLIAM ROSE MANSFIELD arrived in town a few days back from Warsaw, at the request of the Government, and on Saturday last left London for Marseilles en route overland to Calcutta. This gallant officer goes out to India to assume an important command. General Mansfield entered the army as ensign in November, 1838. He has seen considerable service in India, having served with the 53rd regiment in the campaign on the Sutlej in 1846, and was present at Buddiwal, Aliwal, and Sohraon, at which last engagement he was aide-de-camp to General Lord Gough, the commander-in-chief, for which actions he has received a medal and clasps. He commanded his regiment in the Punjab campaign in 1849, and was present at the battle of Goojerat, and was constantly employed in the operations on the Peshawar frontier in 1851 and 1852. He was at the affairs of Nawadun, Ranghur, and Sharhote, where his horse was wounded. In February, 1855, he was appointed assistant-adjutant general in Dublin, and was attached to the British embassy at Constantinople from July, 1855, to July, 1856. He was appointed consul-general at Warsaw in September last year, and was given the local rank of brigadier-general in Poland while so employed.

THE INDIAN MUTINY.—Yesterday, Aug. 11th, was published a supplementary paper relative to the late mutinies in the East Indies, of 12 pages in extent. It includes a resolution and proclamation of the Governor-General of India in Council on the 16th of May last, disavowing all intention of interfering with the caste or creed of the Hindoos; a resolution of the members of the Calcutta Trade Association, offering assistance to the Government, and the reply of the Government of India thereto; a resolution of the Masonic fraternity, pledging the Freemasons to assist the Government; an address of the French Consul and French residents of Calcutta to the Governor-General, very kindly offering their services in case of need; a report of a meeting of the British India Association, held on the 22nd of May, expressive of regret and disgust at the recent outrages at Meerut and Delhi; the report of a public meeting of the native community at Calcutta, under the presidency of Radhakant Raja Bahadoor; the report of a meeting of the Mahomedans at Calcutta, the spirit of which was most loyal; and a meeting of some young men, held on the 23rd of May, at the premises of Baboo Gooroo Churn Dey, Bhowanipore, Chuckerbaria, in the suburbs of Calcutta, for the same patriotic purpose. The inhabitants of the town of Baraset also made a loyal demonstration. Independently of this paper a bulky blue-book of 400 pages (yesterday issued) forms an "appendix" to the papers already published, and contains sundry enclosures in the despatches already noticed in The Times.

SIR COLIN CAMPBELL arrived at Aden on the 28th July.

MR. EDWARD THORNTON.—We understand that Mr. Edward Thornton has retired from the East-India House, after a service of nearly forty-five years. Mr. Thornton has, for the greater portion of that period, been a distinguished ornament to the Company's home service, which has always had in its ranks many men of a high order. After conducting, under the chief secretary, Sir James C. Melvill, the financial branch of the correspondence with the governments in India for some years, he was selected, on account of his eminent qualifications, for the charge of the new statistical department in the East-India House, which was formed in 1847. Besides holding these high official positions, Mr. Thornton is also well known for his literary merits, as the author of "The History of British India," "The Gazetteer of India," and other works relating to that country. We regret that failing health should have compelled Mr. Thornton to retire from the public service; but we may hope that cessation from official labours will prove a restorative, and that while watching, from "the loopholes of retreat," passing events, he will occasionally give public the benefit of his deep research and long experience in Indian matters.

IN RE SYERS, WALKER, AND SYERS.—The bankrupts were East-India merchants, ship-owners, and ship and insurance agents, of Bell-alley, Lombard-street. This was a dividend meeting under the separate estates of Morris Robert Syers and James Walker. It is stated that under the first-mentioned estate there will be twenty shillings in the pound for the creditors, but under Walker's the dividend will be very small.—Declared pro forma.

THE INDIAN EMPIRE.—A Parliamentary return just published, on the motion of Colonel Sykes, M.P., gives the following statistical details of our empire in East India. It would appear that the gross total area of all the governments of India is 1,466,576 square miles; the British states occupying 837,412; the native states, 627,910; and the French and Portuguese possessions, 1,254; and that the gross total population is 180,884,297 souls—viz. 131,990,901 in the British states, 48,376,247 in the native, and 517,149 in the foreign possessions of France and Portugal. The British states under the Governor-General of India in Council cover an area of 246,050 square miles, and are peopled by 23,255,972 souls; the states under the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal occupy 221,969 square miles, and are peopled by 40,852,397 souls; the states under the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces occupy 105,759 miles, and are peopled by 33,655,193 souls; the states under the Madras Government occupy 132,090 miles, and are peopled by 22,437,297 souls; and the states under the Bombay Government occupy 131,544 square miles, and are peopled by 11,790,042 souls. The native states in the Bengal presidency occupy 515,533 square miles, and are peopled by 38,702,206 souls; those in the Madras presidency occupy 51,802 miles, and are peopled by 5,213,671 souls; and those in the Bombay presidency occupy a space of 60,575 square miles, and are peopled by 6,440,370 souls. The French territory in India covers an area of 188 square miles, and is peopled by 203,887 souls; while the Portuguese territory occupies an area of 1,066 square miles, and is peopled by 313,262 souls.

It embraces a brief history of British India; its productions, manufactures, and commerce; its animal and vegetable kingdom; coins, weights, and measures; the usages of Anglo-Indian society; the sports, institutions, colleges, and religious societies; the mode of travelling by land, sea, and river; description of the armies, civil service, navy and ecclesiastical establishments; the requisite outfits of writers, cadets, ladies, &c.; the various routes to India. An Itinerary of the principal places, such as Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Agra, Delhi, Hyderabad, Dacca, Cawnpore, the Punjab, the Eastern Islands, Ceylon, Kashmir, and all the Hill stations; the progress of improvement in railways, canals, and the electric telegraph, together with a vast variety of miscellaneous information, the result of much research and personal experience; nor are the important considerations of pay and allowances, furlough and retiring rates, omitted; and great pains have been taken to convey an accurate notion of the relative qualities of the climate of different localities, by citing the thermometrical and barometrical register.

LIEUTENANT ARNOLD'S EAST-INDIAN NOVEL.

Lately published, in 2 vols. post 8vo., price 21s. cloth, OAKFIELD; or, Fellowship in the East. By W. D. ARNOLD, late Lieutenant 58th Regiment, Bengal Native Infantry. The Second Edition, revised.

"The first edition of this work was said to be an unjust attack on the Indian army, to which Mr. Arnold belongs; and for this reason the second edition now appears under his name, with some prefatory remarks, in which, whilst disclaiming any attack on the Indian service, he justifies his censure."—Press.
"The peculiar feature of this book is its delineation of Anglo-Indian camp and cantonment life. There may be a little exaggeration, but there is probably too much truth in the picture sketched by Lieut. Arnold. It is only by a better tone of opinion in the society described that the evils referred to can be checked or removed; and wherever this book finds its way it must have a moral influence in the right direction."—Literary Gazette.

THACKER'S OVERLAND NEWS, FOR INDIA AND THE COLONIES;

A fortnightly Summary of British and Foreign Intelligence, published on the 10th and 26th of each month, in time for despatch to India via Marseilles. One uniform system is preserved throughout the Paper, and the information is so epitomized and arranged as to present a perfect and comprehensive view of the history of the fortnight, with special reference to those subjects most interesting to Anglo-Indians.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

THE CALCUTTA "ENGLISHMAN."

"Pains have been taken with the arrangement. It is evidently got up with a knowledge of what information Indian readers require, and will therefore, we expect, soon attain a considerable circulation."

THE CALCUTTA "DAILY NEWS."

"Fully bears out the assurance given in the prospectus that it should 'be all that the Overland Papers are, and something more.' We do not think that a single item of news or fact of interest which had transpired during the fortnight can possibly have been omitted, and the power of condensation displayed in this Paper is much beyond what we had expected."

"THE MOVUSSILITE."

"It is well written, and carefully compiled. It is not so diffuse in its information as the 'Home News,' and does not reprint long articles from the London journals; but it will probably not be the less acceptable on this account to a large portion of the public."

"BENGAL HURKARD."

"We gladly pronounce this first number an extremely good one, and we think the periodical is full of promise of something still better. The Editor has contrived to condense into a comparatively small space a vast quantity of miscellaneous information, of a character interesting to his readers here. This superior condensation of his materials is perhaps the leading character of the Newspaper,—and a very important one it is, especially for those Indian readers who may receive this one London Paper only."

Nor at this season can we be too careful to preserve the teeth from the deleterious effects of vegetable acids (the immediate cause of tooth-ache), by a systematic employment, night and morning, of ROWLANDS' ODONTO, or Pearl Dentifrice, a white powder, compounded of the rarest and most fragrant exotics. HANWELL COLLEGE, MIDDLESEX.
SEVEN MILES FROM LONDON.

INDIA AND THE COLONIES.

The increasing importance of the cultivation of the LANGUAGES of the EAST, and the immediate advantages that result from their acquisition, have induced the Principal to make arrangements for affording INSTRUCTION therein.

The rudiments of Hindustani, Persian, and Arabic, will be taught to all who are intended for employment in our Eastern Possessions; and the more advanced Pupils will be prepared for their examination on their arrival in India.

The course of instruction includes not only that which is necessary to pass at Addiscombe or Haileybury, but all that may be requisite for those who are destined to pursue an Indian career.

The history and geography of the country, and the general features of Anglo-Indian life, are taught by a gentleman whose perfect acquaintance with India, from long residence there, peculiarly qualifies him for the duties he has undertaken.

The great advantage to Parents in India of an Institution of this kind must be evident. At a short distance from London, in a proverbially healthy locality, they may place their children from AN EARLY AGE under a system from which there need be no departure until their education is completely finished; a class being expressly formed for the matriculation at the University of London, wherein they may matriculate at sixteen years of age, and graduate two years after that time.

Prospectuses, with full particulars, may be had on application to the Rev. J. A. EMERTON, D.D., Hanwell College, Middlesex.

IMPORTANT WORKS ON INDIA.

MR. THORNTON'S GAZETTEER OF INDIA.

A G A Z E T T E E R

OF

AND OF THE NATIVE STATES ON THE CONTINENT OF INDIA.

By EDWARD THORNTON, Esq., Author of the "History of the British Empire in India."

The work has been compiled by the authority of the Court of Directors, and though comprised within a single volume, it will be found to contain the great mass of information comprehended in the four volumes of the "Gazetteer of India," published by the same author in 1854. This result has been obtained by retrenching some few redundancies, and by adopting an enlarged page and distributing the matter into two separate columns. By these means space has been also acquired for the insertion of much new matter, rendered necessary by the political and territorial changes which have more recently taken place within our Eastern Possessions.

On the character of the work a few remarks will be sufficient. Its chief objects are,—

1st. To fix the relative position of the various cities, towns, and villages with as much precision as possible, and to exhibit with the greatest practicable brevity all that is known respecting them; and 2ndly. To note the various countries, provinces, or territorial divisions, and to describe the physical characteristics of each, together with their statistical, social, and political circumstances.

To these are added minute descriptions of the principal rivers and chains of mountains; thus presenting to the reader, within a brief compass, a mass of information which can not otherwise be obtained, except from a multiplicity of volumes and manuscript records. The volume, in short, may be regarded as an epitome of all that has yet been written and published respecting the territories under the government or political superintendence of the British power in India. Its merits have been frequently discussed in the General Courts of the East-India Company, where successive Chairmen have borne ample testimony to the utility of the publication, and where it has been characterized by the best-informed among the Proprietors as "a complete history of India, untainted in any degree by political bias."

THE MOST COMPLETE HISTORY OF INDIA.

HISTORY OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE IN INDIA TO 1844.

Illustrated by Maps, showing the Possessions of the East-India Company at various periods. By EDWARD THORNTON, Esq. 6 vols. 8vo. cloth, 42s. 6s.

"Mr. Thornton is master of a style of great perspicuity and vigour, always interesting, and frequently rising into eloquence. His power of painting character, and of bringing before the eye of the reader the events which he relates, is remarkable; and if the knowledge of India can be made popular, we should say his is the pen to effect it."—Times.

"Mr. Thornton in this history presents such a mass of valuable and authentic information, respecting the origin, government, and resources of our Indian territories, as to be found in no other publication. He has produced what may be truly designated a national work, the details of which, in whatever point of view they may be considered, whether in a political, a statistical, or a commercial one, bear the impress of more extensive knowledge, greater impartiality, and sounder discrimination, than have been displayed by any previous writer on this important subject."—United Service Gazette.

"If any work can make Indian History popular in England, it will be Thornton's."—Conservative Journal.

In consequence of the late hour at which our Indian papers and letters were received on Saturday, it was impossible to publish this Journal in time to save that evening's post. The delay, however, has enabled us to present our readers with an amount of intelligence far greater and more varied than can be found in any other paper. Indeed, it cannot fail to be observed that we have, gratuitously, increased our ordinary bulk by thirty-two additional columns.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE unfavourable rumours that have been in circulation during the past fortnight, with regard to the heroic little band intrenched at Cawnpore, are unhappily confirmed by the present mail. It is only too certain, that, discouraged by the death of their gallant commander, and exhausted by famine, the garrison consented to accept terms from Nana Sahib, the Rajah of Bhitore. Sir Hugh Wheeler was spared this humiliation. That brave veteran died from wounds received in battle, and resolutely held out until the last moment of his life. With him perished the last hope of the handful of heroes, who had hitherto repulsed every attack of the enemy. Worn out with constant watching, and enfeebled by want of food, they at last intrusted their lives to the treacherous Mahratta, after he had taken the most solemn oaths to allow them to escape unharmed to Allahabad. They were permitted, indeed, to embark in boats for that purpose, and even to put on board a considerable amount of treasure. But no sooner had they loosened from the shore, than a fire of artillery was opened upon them with murderous effect. It is not quite clear how many were massacred on this occasion, for it was subsequently reported that Nana Sahib had nearly one hundred European prisoners in his hands. Some of these he appears to have butchered in cold blood, on the eve of his last engagement with General Havelock's force, previous to his evacuation of Cawnpore. There is too much reason, however, to fear that at least 240 women and children have lost their lives, including eighty ladies, the wives of civilians and officers in the Company's service, and sixty women belonging to H.M.'s 32nd regiment.

The monster had not long to enjoy his triumph, or to plume himself on his fiendish treachery. On the 7th of July, General Havelock began his march up-country, from Allahabad, at the head of nearly 1,800 Europeans; viz., 600 men of the 78th Highlanders, 500 of H.M.'s 64th, 600 of the Madras fusiliers, and a company of royal artillery from Ceylon. After a distressing march of twenty-four hours, he came up with Major Renaud's advanced column early in the morning of the 13th. His further progress was opposed by a rebel force, computed at 15,000 strong, with guns in position. At first, the general proposed to halt, and allow his wearied troops time to repose after the fatigues they had endured; but the enemy brought on a general action by firing on a reconnoissance under Colonel Tytler. An immediate advance was therefore ordered. Captain Maude, with eight guns, took the lead, supported by the infantry, drawn up in quarter-distance columns. And now was proved, beyond all doubt, the immense superiority of the Enfield rifle. The rebel gunners were shot down at their guns, without their being able to make any return, while the European artillery made terrible havoc in the crowded ranks of the mutineers. Within the space of four hours from the commencement of the engagement, the enemy was utterly routed, and fled in confusion through the streets of Futtehpore, four miles in the rear of their position. Eleven guns were captured in this brilliant action, without a single casualty on our side.

Two days later, General Havelock again encountered the rebels, with a similar result, and took two more guns; and on the 17th, he drove them out of Cawnpore, with the loss of thirteen guns, and great slaughter. He did not, however, long delay amid the blackened ruins of that blood-stained station, but rapidly pushed on in pursuit of Nana Sahib, who had fled to Bhitore, about twelve miles distant, after massacring his prisoners and blowing up the powder-magazine. The next mail, we trust, will bring the glad tidings of the destruction of that fort, and the capture of the miscreant, for whom death would be too mild a punishment.

Another task to be effected by General Havelock, is the relief of Lucknow, which was still manfully held by H.M.'s 32nd. Alas! he will arrive too late to be welcomed by him whose name has so long been the theme of praise and admiration. Sir Henry Lawrence is no more. On the 2nd of July he headed a sortie, which proved abortive, through the disaffection of the native artillery; and in the retreat, that was thus rendered inevitable, Sir Henry appears to have been wounded in the leg. Lockjaw ensued, and on the 4th, his brave and gentle spirit passed away from a scene of bloodshed and misery.

Delhi was still in the hands of the rebels, nor was it likely to fall until large reinforcements could join the army of observation. It cannot be called the besieging army, for it merely occupies a position commanding a portion of the land side. Fortunately, there is no lack of supplies, as the country in the rear is kept open by General Van Cortlandt's levies. The communication, however, with Meerut had been interrupted, in consequence of the Baghput bridge having been broken down by the Jheend rajah's men, who had been sent out from camp to oppose an imaginary enemy. As a set-off, it may be mentioned that the Jumna had suddenly risen to a great height, and carried away the bridge of boats. The mutineers will therefore be deprived of all communication with the Doab, whence they derived their chief supplies. It will also be very difficult for the insurgent corps to join them. If rumour be worthy of credit, scarcity of provisions was already being felt in the city, and sickness was prevalent to a terrible extent. Several sorties, or rather regular attacks, have been made since the departure of the former mail. On the 28th of June, the rebels are supposed to have lost nearly 500 men; but they nevertheless again sallied out on the morrow. Again, on the 3rd July, a large force, consisting of the newly-arrived mutineers from Bareilly and the Rohilcund stations, came out with guns and elephants, and attempted to get to the rear of our position, near the village of Allipore. But this was rather a demonstration than a real attack; for they retreated almost without fighting so soon as the British troops could be got under arms. On the 9th and 14th, they made a more determined stand, and are represented to have lost one thousand of their number in killed and wounded. These severe lessons appear to have taught them caution, or their movements were restrained by the heavy rains that had set in. The British army had again lost its commander. General Barnard, like his predecessor, died of cholera, on the 5th, and was succeeded by Major-General Reed, an experienced and gallant officer. The command of the engineer department had devolved on Lieut.-Col. Baird Smith, previously at Roorkee.

Agra, the seat of government in the North-West Provinces, has been in some danger, and even now can hardly be said to be secure. The Kotah contingent, about 600 strong, horse and foot, at once deserted to the insurgent force that was advancing from Neemuch. With a view to save the station from pillage, a portion of the 3rd European fusiliers, with Captain D'Oyly's guns and a corps of mounted volunteers, numbering in all about 500 men, marched out to check their further advance. The enemy was first seen near the village of Shahgunge, six miles from Agra, on the road to Futtehpore Seekree. Though numerically superior, and much stronger in the artillery arm, he was gradually beaten back, and would probably have been utterly routed, had our troops been better handled. As it was, having expended their ammunition, the Europeans were constrained to retreat, though in excellent order, but were closely pursued by the exulting sepoys. At night, the cantonments were plundered and set on fire; but the entire Christian population had previously taken refuge in the fort. The only persons, therefore, who were massacred, were Major Jacob, formerly in Scindiah's service, and Mr. Hubbard, of the Agra College. But in the action at Shahgunge, our loss was very heavy. In the artillery, Captain D'Oyly and three men were killed, and Lieut. Lamb and fourteen men wounded. The 3rd Bengal fusiliers had twenty-nine men killed; while Major Thomas and Lieuts. Pond and Fellows were wounded; besides sixty-four rank-and-file, of whom ten have since died. Of the Civil Lines Cavalry Militia, Messrs. O'Connor, C. Horn, P. Horn, J. Carleton, R. Smith, and Monsieur Jourdan, the equestrian, were killed; and Major Prendergast, and Messrs. White, Ray, Blackburne, Bramley, C.S., Freeze, Outram, C.S., and Oldfield, C.S., were wounded. Of the Civil Lines Infantry Militia, only Mr. Deedes was killed; but five gentlemen were wounded; namely, Messrs. Bagley, Mahyo, Steadman, Halligan, and Faville. The unattached officers' corps also came in for their share of wounds, though no lives were lost; in the list of wounded we observe the names of Captain Alexander, of the 10th light cavalry, Lieuts. Cockburn, Williams, and Bramley, Dr. Watson and Conductor Hunter. On the following day, the mutineers marched on to Muttra, probably with the intention of proceeding to Delhi; but it is not impossible they may return, if foiled in their attempt to enter that city.

The Punjab remained tranquil, so far as its own people were concerned; but the 14th N.I., at Jhelum, had given battle to a wing of her Majesty's 24th, and were cut to pieces after a fierce struggle, in which Colonel Ellice, Captain Spring, and Ensign Scott, of the latter corps, were more or less severely wounded. At Sealkote, the 9th light cavalry and 46th N.I. mutinied, killed Captain Bishop and two medical gentlemen of the name of Graham, and wounded Brigadier Brind, C.B. They then crossed the Ravee at a ford, but were soon afterwards twice attacked by Brigadier Nicholson, and driven into the river, with the loss of 200 men, besides their baggage and plunder.

The death of Colonel Dixon, superintendent of Ajmere, is announced; and also that Colonel George Lawrence has been made a brigadier-general, and invested with the chief military, as well as civil command, in Rajpootana. It is likewise satisfactory to state that Major-General Penny, C.B., has succeeded Major-General Hewitt in command of the Meerut division.

In the Bombay Presidency slight disturbances had occurred at one or two points, but were immediately suppressed. The spirit of the native troops was excellent, and thus far they had served with alacrity whenever called upon to act. At a public meeting held in Bombay for the purpose of raising a subscription for the relief of sufferers by the mutiny, the sum of 15,030 rupees was collected in the room, and shortly afterwards this amount was raised to 33,000 rupees. Very many of the subscribers were Hindoos and Parsees,—the Jamsetjee family alone contributing upwards of 400%. In the Punjab, nearly 15,000 rupees had been subscribed for the same charitable purpose; and in Calcutta, the sum of 72,476 rupees had already been received by the committee of management.

The state of the Madras Presidency, though less satisfactory, still holds out hope that it may emulate the good example furnished by Bombay. At Hyderabad, in the Deccan, a serious riot had taken place, but was promptly crushed by the horse artillery. A body of Rohillas, followed by a mob of miscreants, attempted to force the lower gate of the Residency, but were soon repulsed with a few discharges of grape-shot. At Madras, the respectable Mahomedan and Hindoo inhabitants had given the most solemn assurances of their loyalty to Government; and we must hope that they were more sincere than their "loyal" countrymen in Bengal. The European residents in that city have wisely determined to accept these professions for what they were worth, and have accordingly enrolled themselves into a militia, consisting of 95 horse and 536 foot.

The Governor-General is apparently determined to exercise a wholesome severity; the privilege of pardoning a rebel being reserved for himself in Council. Subscriptions to the open five per cent. loan, it is notified, may be paid one half in cash, and the other half in the promissory notes of the four per cent. loan. This measure was expected; and thus the four per cent. loan will be virtually reconverted to its former rate. The financial difficulties of the crisis are beginning to be felt. All public works, except those of a military character, are temporarily suspended; and in the Punjab an open six per cent. loan is invited by the local government. Nothing more has transpired with regard to the king of Oude's complicity in the revolt, but his ex-majesty remains in safe custody in Fort William. Considerable uneasiness continues to be manifested by the Christian community, which is naturally increased by the constant arrival of fugitives from the upper provinces, each with a new tale of horrors, and all in a destitute and pitiable condition.

The Rt. Hon. the Earl of Elgin and Kincardine, C.B. and P.C., Her Majesty's Ambassador Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to China, arrived at Hongkong on the 2nd July, and was received with the usual honours. It is reported that his lordship, accompanied by Sir Michael Seymour and two or three of the best ships of the naval squadron in those seas, will visit the northern ports of China and Japan, calling at Chusan and Formosa on the way. Until the arrival of reinforcements, hostilities must necessarily be suspended. Not satisfied with the enemies they already have on their hands, the Cantonese have attacked the Portuguese lorchas in the river, and killed about twenty of their men as they attempted to escape on shore.

The unlucky war steamer Transit has been lost in the Straits of Banca, but the crew and troops were all saved.

BENGAL.

THE PROGRESS OF THE REVOLT.

We continue the account of the progress of the revolt as given in the Friend of India of July 9 :—

Though fresh mutinies and disasters are now of daily occurrence, though town after town becomes in its turn the scene of cruelties and treacheries, each if possible more atrocious than any that have previously occurred; and the flame of rebellion, which it was thought at one time had burnt itself out, has found more fuel to kindle, yet not a doubt as to the ultimate result has ever for an instant found a place either in the heart or the brain of any Englishman. All feel too well assured of the stability of the British empire in the East, and are too confident of that destiny which, against our will, has brought us into contact with nation after nation, until our territories have acquired their present extent, to suppose for a moment that the rebellion of mercenary soldiers, as devoid of patriotism as they are full of cowardice and cruelty, can effect ought but present embarrassment, and prevent in no slight degree the carrying out of philanthropic schemes for the improvement and advancement of the governed. The prejudices of race will in some measure be again revived, and we shall be loth to acknowledge as brothers those who have perpetrated the massacres of Meerut and Delhi, of Jhansi and Hissar. Nana Sahib, the self-styled rajah of Bhitoor, will be one day seen in true colours, perhaps by the descendants of those very men who now, crying death to the Feringhees, applaud his actions.

The Mus-ulmans of India who have rebelled have set themselves the arduous task of destroying a hydra and vanquishing a Titan, who as oft as he is beaten to the ground arises with renewed vigour. If every Englishman in India were murdered; if Lord Canning, like another Regulus, were taken prisoner, yet the success of the rebels would be but temporary, and their evil fate would be only staved off for a day. It can scarcely be supposed that the descendants of those who have withstood the world can in a few short years have become so degenerate as to be driven from an empire which they have won by justice and moderation, and which those now in open revolt have lost by injustice and cruelty. There is no doubt as to the fall of Delhi, but the particulars have not yet been received. General Barnard's despatch, dated the 8th of June, and containing an account of the outpost affair, is the only official intelligence, and that appears to have been received via Bombay. The despatch contains nothing that is not already well known, with the exception that the engagement lasted for about three-quarters of an hour, and the loss of the English was fifty killed, amongst whom was Colonel Chester. The Goorkha battalion, and other native troops, including those of the Jheend Raja, behaved well, and vied with their European comrades in efforts of determined gallantry.

If Delhi had been stormed earlier, and that despatch which was so essential had been used, its capture would have been a death-blow to the hopes of the rebels, and the losses at Allahabad, Cawnpore, and elsewhere, would not have occurred. But the prestige of success has been thrown away by delay, and a desultory warfare will have to be maintained throughout nearly the whole of India. But the disaffected will now pause before they openly rebel, and will hesitate setting out merely for the sake of murder and plunder, being certain of being cut off in detail, sooner or later. Colonel George Lawrence at Nusseerabad has strong hopes of giving a good account of the mutineers at Neemuch. The cruelties of the rebellious sepoys are earning for them universal execration, and even men of their own race now feel but little compunction in shooting down wretches who have outraged every law of humanity. At Neemuch, a sergeant, with his wife and two children, barricaded his house. His wife said that she would shoot the first man that entered; she was as good as her word, but the villains forced an entrance, the house was fired, and the husband ran off. The two children made an effort to follow, but were caught and thrown into the flames. Brigadier Johnstone has overtaken the mutineers who escaped from Jullundur. They were halting at Loodianah, which place, on the arrival of the pursuing force, they hurriedly evacuated, and broke into two or three parties, hotly pursued by the artillery, cavalry, European foot-soldiers, and the 4th Sikh infantry. One subadar, six havildars, eleven naiks, and twenty-two sepoys of the 54th N.I. were, on June 10, blown away from guns. In the Punjab there has been no faltering, and Brigadier Chamberlain has disarmed the two native regiments at Mooltan.

The puttahwallah who endeavoured to seduce the 22nd regiment N.I. at Sattarah, has been hanged. He seemed well versed in English law, and appealing to his countrymen, said, "I am illegally condemned, and have not been tried by judge or jury." Doubtless he would have liked to have appealed to the sudder, but he found to his cost that the time for such fooleries had gone by, and as his countrymen would not have European justice, they should at least have Asiatic.

A telegraphic message has been received at Bombay from Indore to the effect that there has been a rising at Sepree. Major Macpherson, commandant of the 3rd Gwalior Infantry, Captain Ryall, and Dr. Silhant of the same corps, with Captain Lemarchand of the Gwalior artillery have escaped and under an escort of Captain Harrison's troop of 2nd Gwalior cavalry are seeking a place of safety. The rising does not appear to have been general, but the news from Gwalior is not of a very satisfactory description. From Cawnpore the tidings are most disastrous, and that bloodthirsty villain Nana Sahib, the self-styled rajah of Bhitoor, has had ample opportunities of revenge. It was hoped that the force under Sir Hugh Wheeler would hold out until supplies of troops and provisions could have reached him from Allahabad. But the Government, who are the last to obtain intelligence, miscalculated; and though Col. Neile made every exertion to push on, yet, owing to the want of carriage, and to the difficulty of procuring provisions, he had not, up to the 5th of July, been able to quit Allahabad. On that day he received a note from Major Renaud, who commands the advance column, that Sir Hugh Wheeler had been mortally wounded. On his death, the troops capitulated, on the express condition that Nana Sahib would provide them with boats, and let them depart intact. Boats were procured, and all embarked. They took with them everything they had, and treasure to the amount of three and a half lacs of rupees. No sooner had they pushed out into the stream, than guns were brought to bear upon them from the bank, and every boat but one was swamped. That boat was pursued and brought back, its occupants dragged out, and all cruelly murdered. Thus we have one more instance of the proverbial faithlessness of Asiatics, and another proof that it is better to endure all the horrors of a siege and die miserably, it may be, but still manfully, than be tantalized with the hope of safety and expect pity from men who, like the tigers which inhabit their jungles, delight to play with their victim before despatching him. The names of the killed are not yet well ascertained. The following is a correct though not a complete list :—Brigadier Jack, Lieut.-colonel Williams, Major Prout, Sir George Parker, Bart., joint-magistrate, Capt. Halliday, Lieuts. Redman, Eckford, and Lindsay, Ensign Supple, Capt. Reynolds, Lieut. Prole, Messrs. Jervis, Chalwin, Hillersdon, C.S., and Mrs. Wiggins. The loss has been very great, for, in addition to the first company of the sixth battalion of artillery, seventeen men of the Madras Fusiliers and about 90 men of her Majesty's 84th, there were nearly 60 women and children belonging to the 32nd Queen's, who had taken refuge in the entrenchments. It is impossible to say whether any of these escaped. How will Englishmen envy the good fortune of Colonel Neile, which will in all probability allot to him the task of revenging such brave and gallant officers as have fallen! However much we may deplore the loss of so many brave men, and regret that the offers of Nana Sahib should have been accepted, yet decimated by disease and the sword, embarrassed by helpless women and children, receiving no intelligence of the advance of succours, surrounded by an overwhelming force—for the mutineers at Lucknow had coalesced with those at Cawnpore—how could they have done otherwise? But a tribute may be paid to the memory of Sir Hugh Wheeler—it was not until his death that there was any thought of yielding; and perhaps he himself with his last breath counselled them to adopt the only course which seemed consistent with wisdom. Who can tell how many of the troops had been killed or that those who embarked on the boats were other than women and children? It is however horrible to reflect that men who have served their country in many a well-fought field, who were present at Maharajpore, and with the army of the Punjab, who fought at Chillianwalla and Sadoolapore should die by the hand of such a ruffian as Nana Sahib, against whom it were a degradation to use even a sword. There are times when every man would desire to be a soldier, and we are quite sure that the praise of General Barnard when he said that the civilians had done him good service before Delhi was sincere.

The massacre at Hissar on the 29th of May commenced upon the arrival of some sowars in green chupkuns. These men were no sooner admitted into the fort, than the company of the Hurrianah light infantry, in charge of the treasure, attacked the Europeans, and commenced an indiscriminate slaughter. It appears that one gentleman alone escaped. He was attacked by a Chupprassie, but cut the fellow down; and after hiding in a field for three days, he eventually succeeded in reaching Umballa.

Saugor, it is said, is still quiet, and all the guns and treasure are in the fort. Major-general Woodburn has attacked the mutinous 1st cavalry of the Hyderabad Contingent, and completely cut them up. Sixty prisoners were taken, and about one hundred escaped. This regiment, it is said, had sent a message to the Nizam, stating that they had thrown off the British yoke, and would gladly place themselves at his disposal. The Nizam, however, with that faithfulness which has become constitutional, prudently declined, and it is believed, in spite of the rumour that Salar Jung had been taken prisoner, and that the Nizam was at the mercy of the disaffected, Hyderabad is still safe, and that the vigour which was shown on the last attempt at rebellion has had due effect in cowering the unruly spirits. But affairs in that city are viewed with no little solicitude, and news is anxiously expected. So long as the Rohillas remain well disposed no alarm need be felt; but a successful rising in that part of India would affect the Madras Presidency, which has hitherto so happily escaped, and in the Deccan there would be another Delhi.

It is certain that Brig. Sibbald and Dr. Hay were killed at Bareilly on the outbreak of the troops on the 31st of May. Fortunately, as early as the 28th of May, all the non-combatants had been ordered to quit that station for Nynce Tal, otherwise the slaughter would have been much greater. At Nagode and at Jubbulpore all is, up to the present time, reported quiet, and the 50th N. I. at the former station with the 52nd N. I. at the latter, have as yet remained true to their allegiance.

On the outbreak of the rebellion every European considered that Patna and Dinapore would be amongst the first places to rise, and day after day their quiet was a subject of congratulation and wonder. In Patna, however, so desirable a state of things was not permitted to last, and on the 3rd of July some of the disaffected attempted to create a disturbance. Dr. Lyell, the Acting Opium Agent, with a small party of the Behar Station Guards and the Sikh Police Battalion sallied out to restore order. No sooner did he come up with the rioters than he was at once shot dead, and two of his party were wounded. It is to be hoped that there will be no great outbreak, and that the loot was not caused by hatred to the Europeans, but originated in some street squabble.

On Saturday, the 4th of June, at seven p.m., a company of H.M.'s 35th were ordered to prepare for instant departure to Berhampore. The men accordingly packed their kit and rolled their bedding, which was conveyed at once to a "flat" and put on board; the officers also held themselves in readiness. The night passed, Sunday came and went, Monday ended, Tuesday wore away, and neither an order for setting off nor one countermanding that previously sent was received. Such was the state of affairs on Tuesday evening, and such we believe it to be now. The men have been kept without a change of clothes for certainly four days, and may probably be kept so for four more, to say nothing of the discomfort of sleeping on the ground. The 5th fusiliers, who so recently arrived in the Simoon, are armed with the Enfield rifle, and will doubtless do good service by killing mutineers at 900 yards.

The mischief occasioned by permitting the men of the disbanded 19th to wander at large through the country, has not yet ceased, for some of them have made their appearance at Secunderabad, and have been endeavouring, but without success, to enlist. We do not say that these men are disaffected, but it is at all times impolitic to turn men loose upon the country without their having a possibility of obtaining a livelihood by any honest means.

There are apprehensions that the European artillery now in Fort William are under orders to proceed immediately to the Upper Provinces. On their departure the fort will be left without a single English gunner, so that in case of need the guns would have to be worked by natives. The alleged incorruptibility of the Golundauze has proved to be totally without foundation; and we question the wisdom of the policy which will leave Calcutta to be defended by native gunners, especially when there is a current report that the bread served out to the 3rd in the Fort, and to the fusiliers on board the Simoon, on July 7, was poisoned. Whether the allegation was groundless or not, is foreign to our purpose; for the mere fact of assigning such a cause as an explanation for throwing the bread into the river, which is undoubtedly true, exhibits the state of feeling in Calcutta. So soon, therefore, as the inhabitants feel themselves to be defenceless, so soon as they see the city denuded of European troops, there will be a second panic, which may not end so harmlessly as the first. And the fear will be increased when they learn that out of the China expedition, but two thousand troops are to be spared for India. We suppose that so soon as communication can be held with Lord Elgin, he will be desired to send on the rest, but the delay will cause some disappointment, and the hope of a speedy termination of the present disturbances will be again postponed. But even on the hypothesis that little will be done until after the wet season, the infatuation of the natives who have rebelled can scarcely be accounted for. What can they hope to effect without food, without a leader, and with no Delhi as a place of refuge? They will be hunted from place to place, shot down here and hanged there, and will only have the satisfaction to know that they have more firmly rooted our power in the land by the very effort they made to drag it out. The storm when it has passed over, will have but denuded the tree of its dead branches, and blown away that dust from the leaves which they had acquired in the sunshine of prosperity.

MUTINY.

AGRA.—THE BATTLE AT AGRA.—The last number of the Mofussile was published at our printing office in the station of Agra, on Friday, the 3rd of July, since which time events of the most stirring nature have occurred; and we now, in consequence, print the paper within the fortress of Agra, where we, and the whole of our local subscribers, have been located since the 5th.

At the end of last month it was pretty generally suspected, and perhaps actually known in some quarters, that a very large body of rebels, consisting chiefly of the men of the regiments which mutinied at Nusseerabad and Neemuch, were approaching Agra, and preparations were accordingly made for their reception—or rather it would be more correct to say, that preparations were made to avoid them, inasmuch as day after day the Christian inhabitants abandoned their houses and took up their permanent quarters in the fort, which the authorities had previously cleared out, and made as habitable as circumstances would admit, besides placing it in as good a state of defence as the means at their command rendered possible—guns and ammunition being abundant, but experienced gunners scarce.

On the 2nd instant, the Kotah contingent of horse, foot, and artillery, up to that moment believed by some to be loyal, marched into cantonments, to the great alarm of the majority of the residents; and then, to the astonishment of all, one detachment of them was sent to relieve the European guard over the jail (in which 4,000 desperate criminals were imprisoned), and another to guard Government-house. It being known, on the afternoon of the 4th, that the expected enemy were then close at hand, the contingent was marched out of cantonments, in order to take up an advanced position on the road; but, as might have been foreseen, no sooner had the contingent reached the destined halting-ground, and the opportunity offered, than one and all bolted to join the ranks of the rebels. Full particulars of the affair will be found in another column.

The same afternoon, every lady and child in the cantonments and civil lines, who had not previously done so, removed to the fort, and shortly after daylight the next morning probably no man was outside, excepting the regular European troops and the first division of militia.

Early in the day, the enemy, about 10,000 strong (say 7,000 infantry, 1,500 cavalry, and eight guns), encamped within three hundred yards of an open plain in the rear of the village of Sussia, close to the fourth mile stone from Agra on the road to Futtehpore Seekree; and shortly after mid-day our troops came in sight of that village, which they approached in a leisurely manner, but, unfortunately, instead of taking immediate possession and forcing the enemy to fight on the plain, we commenced firing from a distance, and ultimately the enemy took possession of it, and being then under cover, inflicted heavy loss on us, till they were driven out.

We are promised a copy of the official despatches respecting the battle, but in the meantime we submit for the information of the distant reader, the subjoined narrative, written by an eye-witness, of the operations on the right flank of our force.

"The troops that went to meet the enemy on the 5th instant, marched out of the station about eleven a.m., and proceeding along the road in the direction of the village of Shahgunge, and which is about six miles from Agra, entered the large sandy plain that lies to the right of the road, where the line of battle was formed, and in that order advanced slowly to meet the enemy, who were then distinctly visible, hovering in large bodies immediately to the right of the village. The British line consisted of a horse field-battery on the extreme right and left, the infantry being in the middle, and the mounted militia somewhat in the rear.

"When about six hundred yards from the village, the insurgents opened fire on our right battery by a furious discharge of round shot, grape, and shells, which was immediately responded to with such excellent effect, that after two rounds from each gun, they were seen retreating in great numbers. Loud cheering, and repeated cries of 'Follow them up, follow them up,' were heard from all parts of the right battery, and there can be little doubt, had a dash been made, the enemy would have been driven from their position into the open field with the loss of their guns, and the action been brought to an end, with less sacrifice of life than eventually was the case. Our guns, however, limbered up, and the line again advanced, but the enemy now stood to their guns, and having got their range, directed their fire with admirable precision, as the havoc amongst our men and horses painfully attested; our attack was evidently being confined to a series of deliberate advances, for of such it consisted, until we were within two hundred yards of the village, which we then commenced to bombard, and, it is to be feared, with small loss on the other side. The most unpractised eye could see our shots were being thrown away on high mud walls, which siege guns alone could have touched, whereas had our right battery moved only fifty yards further to the right, every shot from it must have told on the enemy's two batteries, whence was issuing so destructive a fire upon us. The consequences of this were just what might have been expected, the enemy became emboldened, their cavalry in great numbers harassed our right, and the infantry spreading themselves over the field in skirmishing order, gave us great annoyance with their rifle firing, whilst we, from the want of cavalry, were powerless to repel them. A large number of their horse had the audacity to sweep round to our rear, and riding up the centre, endeavoured to reach their main body, which many succeeded in doing! It is true that our mounted militia charged through a body of those hanging to the right of the line, when after five of them getting cut to pieces, and others severely wounded, they made a precipitate retreat into the battery, and from the direction they took to reach it, intercepted a fire about being opened from a gun that had been got into position for the purpose, and which would have blown off the field every trooper at whom it was pointed.

"The firing against the village continued for fully one hour, during which time a shower from musketry was being poured on us from behind its walls and the tops of the houses, two companies of the European regiment then entered it in most gallant style, forcing their way through, and driving out the enemy to the opposite side, and this they would have done in a much earlier stage of the action had they been permitted. The left battery had ceased firing before the Europeans emerged from the village, though that on the right continued exchanging shot for shot with the enemy, and it was only very shortly before it had succeeded in silencing them, that the lamented Captain D'Oyley received his mortal wound. But a few rounds of ammunition remained in our waggons when that sad event occurred, nevertheless the wounded man sat on a tumbrel, and continued to give the word of command, until they were expended. Want of cavalry prevented our following up what we had so dearly gained, and nothing remained for us but to retrace our steps to cantonment, and this we proceeded to do in the most orderly possible manner. Immediately the rebels perceived the movement, they advanced with their guns, and nearly the whole way into Agra, fired round shot on us, after a fashion peculiarly humiliating to experience, whilst small bodies of their horse threatened us on either side with such activity as to prevent our getting a shot at them.

"The whole force succeeded in reaching the fort by half after six p.m., after being actively engaged for full three hours out of the time it was absent. The official list of killed and wounded will best enable the reader to estimate the severity of the engagement."

There is no doubt that our men were fearfully outnumbered, but despite that, they would have remained masters of the field instead of having to retire after having licked the enemy, had it not been that both men and guns had fired off the whole of the small supply of ammunition they had taken to the field. It is now supposed that the enemy were in the same predicament, and therefore had we not moved off, but had waited a short time longer, perhaps they might have gone first.

The civil lines infantry militia, having met the tired troops coming in, were formed across the road as rear-guard, a position they maintained until the whole force reached the fort.

But while still two miles from the fort, we had the mortification of seeing the enemy's cavalry galloping towards the defenceless station, and before we entered, several houses were already on fire. After sunset, we saw from the bastions, houses burning on every side, and again the next night—so that hardly a house has escaped destruction—and such houses and their contents as were not consumed by fire, have been completely gutted and destroyed by other means. In fact, if we were to leave the fort to-morrow, there are not four houses in the place with roofs remaining, under which we could obtain shelter—and as for household property and other things left outside, we suspect there is not a single article in existence in serviceable order! The very doors and windows are removed and every bit of wood torn out, so that nothing remains but the brick walls. Things are strewn about the roads and streets in every direction, and wherever you move you see broken chairs and tables, carriages broken in bits, crockery, books, and in fact every kind of property wantonly destroyed. This has not been done, we are satisfied, by the enemy, but by the budmashes of the city, and the prisoners who were all liberated from the gaol.

The enemy disappeared the day after the action, and proceeded to Bhurtpore, but nothing with certainty is known of their after movements. It is rumoured that we may expect a visit from the mutineers of the Gwalior contingent, but it is doubted by many whether they will venture to come; however, if they do come, we are ready to give them a warm welcome.

The fort is crowded, but not inconveniently so, and all are in good health and spirits. We are well provided with provisions and ammunition, and upon the whole we are pretty comfortable, and have become reconciled to the necessary imprisonment.

Only two or three Christians are known to have been massacred outside, namely, Major Jacob, formerly in the Scindiah's service, and Mr. Hubbard, of the Agra College; but every other Christian inhabitant is supposed to be safe within the fort. The maharajah of Gwalior is said to be exerting himself for our advantage, and we have no one else to fear.

Before concluding, it is right to mention that our retiring from the field may be considered an act of necessary prudence; for had the enemy succeeded in getting into our rear later in the day, they might have cut us off from the fort, and, by overpowering the small garrison, have murdered four or five thousand defenceless men, women, and children.

The following is a correct abstract of the casualties that occurred in the action on the 5th. It will be acknowledged that the fighting must have been severe, seeing that a full quarter of the men engaged were placed hors de combat.

The artillery had two officers wounded (Capt. D'Oyley since dead, and Lieut. Lamb), 3 men killed, and 14 wounded, including 6 native drivers.

The 3rd European regiment had 29 men killed, 3 officers (Major Thomas and Lieuts. Pond and Fellowes) and 64 men wounded, of whom 10 have since died.

The Civil Lines Cavalry Militia had 5 gentlemen killed (Messrs. O'Connor, C. Horn, P. Horn, J. Carleton, R. Smith, and Jourdan), 1 officer (Major Prendergast), and 8 gentlemen (Messrs. White, Ray, Blackburne, Bramley, C.S.; Freeze; Outram, C.S.; and Oldfield, C.S.) wounded.

The Civil Lines Infantry Militia had 1 gentleman (Mr. Deedes) killed, and 5 gentlemen (Messrs. Bagley, Mahyo, Steadman, Halligan, and Faville) wounded.

The unattached officers, &c., had six wounded; viz., Capt. W. Alexander, 10th L.C.; Lieuts. Cockburn, Williams, and Bramley, Dr. Watson, and Conductor Hunter.

The number killed, or since dead, is 49; and the number wounded 92; making a total of 141 killed and wounded out of a total force of about 500 men engaged.—Mofussilite, July 15.

LIST OF CIVIL SERVANTS WITHIN THE FORT OF AGRA, July 10, 1857.—Hon. J. R. Colvin, E. A. Reade, H. B. Harington, H. Unwin, W. E. Money, R. B. Morgan, J. Dumergue, C. Raikes, E. M. Wyly, H. Vansittart, W. Muir, A. H. Cocks, C. B. Thornhill, M. B. Thornhill, E. J. Boldero, W. J. Bramley, Hon. R. A. J. Drummond, J. Power, J. R. Best, A. L. M. Phillips, R. C. Oldfield, J. W. Power, A. O. Hume, H. W. Dashwood, W. H. Lowe, H. M. Chase, R. H. Clifford, C. J. Daniell, E. Colvin, F. B. Outram.—Mofussilite, July 15.

THE AGRA MILITIA was embodied last Friday and Saturday mornings, and was drilled yesterday for the first time, on the parade ground at Hurree Purbat. The cavalry portion of the force, which is under the immediate command of Captain Prendergast, musters about fifty sabres; while the infantry, under Captain Lamb, is divided into four companies, each numbering about forty file—this is independent of the infantry under Captain Rawlins, which parades near the Metcalfe Testimonial.

The men have taken to their work kindly; and although they may never become adepts at drill, yet they will nevertheless be sufficiently instructed in a few days to render them a very serviceable force, fully equal to encounter five times their number of armed men.

No. 4 company is to rendezvous every night on the premises of the Mofussilite Press, and remain on guard all night, marching the next morning to their parade-ground, when, after drill, the men will be dismissed for the day.—Mofussilite, June 30.

ALLYGHUR.—DESTRUCTION OF THE ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH.—It is stated that the destruction of the line of electric telegraph, for ten miles on each side of Allyghur, was most complete. The mutineers tore up the posts and destroyed them, or left them to be destroyed by the villagers; and the wire line was cut into small portions, so as effectually to prevent its speedy repair. Fortunately, however, there is in Agra ample wire to repair the damage done, and posts for temporary use will be easily and rapidly procurable. Measures have been adopted to restore the line. A sufficient quantity of wire has been already sent to Allyghur, with European artificers; and, if all kept quiet, telegraphic communication would soon be restored.

ALLAHABAD.—The Englishman says:—"We understand that two troops of volunteer cavalry are to be raised at Allahabad, from officers of the regiments which have been disbanded and mutinied. Government will supply chargers, and give thirty rupees a month horse allowance, besides paying the expense of the accoutrements. There can be little doubt that these gentlemen troopers will do good service, and for the present the officers with-out regiments could not be more profitably employed."

ASSEERGHUR.—A letter from the field force under Brig. Stuart, dated Asseerghur, 23rd July, mentions that there had been no more cholera in the force after crossing the Taptee at Boorhanpoor. A company of Scindia's contingent at Boorhanpoor had been disarmed, three of the sepoys shot by sentence of a court-martial, and a few others sentenced to transportation for life, for desertion. The force was to have reached the Nerbudda in four marches, be two days in crossing, and get to Mhow about the 30th.

Asseerghur is now garrisoned by two companies of the 19th N.I. in addition to a party of Bheels. The three companies of Scindia's contingent remain quiet and regular below the fort.—Poona Observer, July 15.

AHMEDNUGGUR.—The families from Booldana, Jaulna, and Aurungabad, have, we rejoice to learn, arrived at Ahmednuggur, where they have placed themselves under the protection of the gallant Brigadier Blood, under whose guns they are as safe as they could wish to be.—Poona Observer, July 18.

BENARES, JUNE 29.—General Havelock and staff arrived here yesterday morning. The general is looking very well, and starts either to-night or to-morrow for Allahabad. The Dalla, with 351 of her Majesty's 6th regiment, and 1st Madras fusiliers, passed Benares towards Allahabad the day before yesterday, and the last detachment of the 64th here left yesterday in the Koel. Thus the whole of the 1st Madras fusiliers, 84th regiment, and 64th regiment, except 100 men of the latter corps at Ghazepore and 100 at Gyah, have passed up-country. The first detachment of the Highlanders starts this afternoon by bullock-train. The detachment that went out the day before yesterday on a dour have not returned: the party consisted of 200 Highlanders and 100 Sikhs, also twenty horsemen. We heard from them on Saturday, that they had encountered none of the rebels, but had destroyed a large village belonging to them.

JULY 8.—A force, consisting of one hundred men of the 78th Highlanders, thirty men of H.M.'s 37th foot, thirty of the Loodiana (Sikh) regiment, the same number of irregular horse, and two guns, under the command of Major Haliburton, made a dour on the 6th on the Azimghur road, about seven miles from Benares, where they overtook about 2,000 of the insurgents, apparently natives of the country. On getting within range of the guns, fire was opened upon them, when the rebels at once ran away without making any resistance, leaving many of their dead upon the field. The affair was a most decisive one, and the force returned to cantonments without losing a man.—Poona Observer, July 18.

JULY 11.—We have had several brushes with the rebels. All is at present quiet.

BANGALORE.—It is stated that the Mahomedans at Bangalore are disaffected; but at present they have not mutinied; and it is supposed they are only waiting to see how the mutiny progresses in other parts.

BAREILLY.—It is reported that the prisoners released from the jail seized the judge, Mr. Robertson, and Mr. Raikes, the collector, held a court, tried them in form, produced witnesses, examined them, summed up, and condemned them both to be hanged by the neck till they were dead. The sentence was carried out forthwith, and the unfortunate gentlemen were hanged in front of the jail. If the retribution be not appalling, it will be long before Europeans will venture to live in distant stations, as they have hitherto done. Their only chance of security will be to coop themselves up in forts, as in the early days of our Indian empire. But not a single native fort should be permitted to remain.

BOLUNDSHUHUR is again in the hands of the insurgents. The treasury has been robbed. The robbers this time, in making their way to Delhi, were themselves robbed by the villagers, and now bemoan their hard fate in having lost their livelihood. A chief at Bolundshuhur, who was supposed to be friendly, has turned traitor; but being close pressed, it is hoped he will soon be caught—in which case, it is said, he has threatened to destroy himself, and so prevent the authorities from executing him.

CAWNPORE.—CATASTROPHE AT CAWNPORE.—The following account of the awful catastrophe at Cawnpore, corroborated as it is by the Government intelligence, may, we think, be depended upon:—

"On Sunday, the 28th June, the Nana Sahib sent to our beleaguered countrymen, and swore upon the Gunga, and all the oaths most binding on a Hindoo, that if the garrison would trust to him and surrender, the lives of all should be spared, and they should be put into boats and sent down to Allahabad. On these terms the garrison trusted him and surrendered. They were put into boats according to the wording of the treaty so far, but when they had got into the middle of the river, the fiend gave a preconcerted signal, and guns which had been laid for the purpose were opened upon them from the Cawnpore bank. When our poor wretched countrymen tried to escape by crossing to the Oudh side of the river, they found that arrangements had been made there too for their reception, and they were cut to pieces by cavalry sent across for the purpose."

From another source, we learn that the steamer, of which we made mention in our issue of the 6th instant, was about to start immediately for Cawnpore, in the hopes of picking up any stragglers that might have escaped.

The following intelligence is furnished by Government:—

"ALLAHABAD, JULY 5.—Col. Neill reports that he had received a note, dated the night of the 4th, from Major Renaud, of the Madras fusiliers, commanding the advance column sent towards Cawnpore, that he had sent men into that place, who reported, on their return, that in consequence of Sir Hugh Wheeler being shot through the leg, and afterwards mortally, the force had accepted the proffer of safety made by the Nana Sahib and the mutineers. The Nana allowed them to get into boats, with all they had, and three and a half lacs of rupees; that after getting them on boats, fire was opened on them from the bank, and all were destroyed. One boat got away ten miles down the river, was pursued, brought back, and all in her taken back into barracks and shot. One old lady was alive on the 3rd, at Futtehpore."

"Major Renaud is acting with energy, and punishing, with much discretion, some villagers in his neighbourhood; he is quite equal to anything. The Sikhs and irregular cavalry behaved splendidly, the latter in particular, under Lieut. Palliser, doing good service."

"A note was received from Major Renaud, of this date, in which he reports all well there; and at Agra, on the 21st ultimo: troops are moving up from Allahabad with all possible speed."

CASUALTIES AT CAWNPORE.—We alluded yesterday to a list of casualties at Cawnpore in our possession, which we thought it desirable to withhold. The paragraph was inserted many hours before the arrival of the news from Cawnpore supplied by Government, rumours of which had been talked of in Calcutta since Friday last. The list of names alluded to was received by us on Sunday. It was as follows:—

Killed at Cawnpore.—Jack, Williams, Prout, Parker, Quin, Lindesay, Halliday, Reynolds, Prole, Smith, Redman, Supple, Eckford, Dempster, and Bax.

Killed at Seetapore.—Colonel Birch, Mr. and Mrs. Christian, Captain and Mrs. Gowan, and Lieut. and Mrs. Snell.

The above were killed before the capitulation, the termination of which was so disastrous. The list which is to come must be of a far more serious extent. We shall possibly receive some more news from Government before going to press.—Bengal Hurkaru, July 8.

A letter from an officer with General Havelock's force informs us:—"Our advance came up with a force of the rebels, and took eleven guns and killed a great many of their men. Two days afterwards they came up again with the rebels, took two guns and killed a good many more; and on the 14th we came up to about 10,000 of them, took six more guns, and killed another batch of the sores. Now we are off for Cawnpore. I am sorry to say that all our people that were there are killed, except three officers who escaped for the time, and the women and children; but two out of the three officers were brought back to Cawnpore by the ruffians at the point of the bayonet, and then blown away from their guns. It is said that there were no fewer than 240 officers' and soldiers' wives and children. They were sold by public auction in the streets with their children. God help the poor creatures; it has at last come to something; but I will say stop. I hope we shall soon get a reinforcement, and then they shall see that Britons never shall be slaves, although they have sold our women and children as such, and for which they will rue the day that they ever were born. After we have taken Cawnpore and the place on the other side of the river, and relieved Lucknow, we will then go on to Delhi and kill all the miscreant niggers there."

Another letter from Cawnpore has the following:—

"The 78th Highlanders had a severe engagement on the 15th, and again on the 17th, on which day they marched into what once was the station of Cawnpore, but which they found a heap of blackened ruins, and not a single European of all poor Wheeler's force left to tell the dreadful tale. All are murdered! The insurgents decamped prior to the arrival of General Havelock's force; and it grieves me to imagine the scene of desolation and destruction which greeted them on their entry into that once fine station—one of the finest in all India. There is no parallel to be found in the history of the world to the deeds of frightful atrocity that were of daily occurrence there before our troops arrived, sad to relate, too late to afford the long-looked-for succour.

"In their last engagement with the rebels, the 78th Highlanders lost two men killed and fourteen wounded—one mortally, since dead. Poor Tulloch, the quartermaster-serjeant, was amongst the latter; and died, poor fellow, from the effect of his wounds, in a few hours, deeply regretted by the whole regiment. —Poona Observer Extra, July 27.

FROM BRIGADIER-GENERAL HAVELock TO THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL, from Futtehpore, by telegraph, dated Allahabad, 13th July, 11-35 A.M.

"I have to acquaint your lordship that I have this morning attacked, and totally defeated the insurgents, capturing eleven guns, and scattering their forces in utter confusion in the direction of Cawnpore. By two harassing marches, I joined Major Renaud's advanced column three hours before daylight, and encamped about eight o'clock, four miles from Futtehpore; where, pitching our tents, the enemy advanced out of Futtehpore, and opened fire upon a reconnoissance under Colonel Tytler.

"I had wished to defer the fight until to-morrow; but, thus assailed, was compelled to accept the challenge.

"I marched with eight guns in the centre under Captain Maude (R.A.), forming the whole of the infantry in quarter-distance column in support.

"Captain Maude's fire electrified the enemy, who abandoned gun after gun, and were then driven by our skirmishers and column through garden inclosures and the streets of Futtehpore, in complete confusion.

"My loss is merely nominal; not a single European touched. My column had marched twenty-four miles up to the ground I write from; Major Renaud's nineteen miles. The conduct of the troops in sustaining the fatigue of so long a march, and enduring the heat of a frightful sun, is beyond praise. The enemy's strength is said to have been two regiments of cavalry and three of infantry, and eleven guns."—Poona Observer, July 25.

"MOVABLE COLUMN.—Morning Order, 13th July, 1857.—Brigadier-General Havelock, C.B., thanks his soldiers for their arduous exertions of yesterday, which produced, in four hours, the strange result of a whole army driven from a strong position, eleven guns captured, and their whole force scattered to the winds, without the loss of a single British soldier!

"To what is this astonishing effect to be attributed? To the fire of the British artillery, exceeding in rapidity and precision all that the Brigadier-General has ever witnessed in his not short career; to the power of the Enfield rifle in British hands; to British pluck—that good quality which has survived the revolution of the hour; and to the blessing of Almighty God in a most righteous cause—the cause of justice, humanity, truth, and good government in India."

The following intelligence has been received by Government:—

"From Brigadier-General Havelock, Camp Kullerpore, dated 11th July, 1857.

"We have taken every gun from the rebels at Futtehpore, twelve in number; this has enabled me to equip and take into the field nine excellent guns instead of six lighter, and with the facility of also bringing in action two light six-pounders.

"From Brigadier-General Havelock, Camp Pandoo Nuddy, dated 15th July, 1857.

"My troops were twice engaged this morning, and captured four more guns, with trifling loss; a strong advanced guard under Col. Tytler drove the enemy out of all entrenched positions in front of the village of Osung, after a resistance of two hours and a half, during which the mutinous cavalry in considerable force made frequent attacks against my baggage, which compelled me to use every available detachment and gun against them; at noon we attacked their entrenchment at the bridge over the stream; the resistance here was short but spirited, and the two guns taken were of large calibre. The Madras fusiliers particularly distinguished themselves.

"From General Neill, Allahabad, dated July 16, 1857.

"I started 227 of the 84th regiment, partly in bullock vans. They are to march twenty-five miles a night, to reach in five days. I start this afternoon by dak, and shall overtake the 84th and move up with them. I will go on before them, if I can; I shall lose no time. The mutineers are out of caps, and have converted all the detonators into matchlocks. A cossid from Lucknow declares that the mutineers there are in want of shot, firing stones from the guns.

"News has been received, that Sir Henry Lawrence was wounded on his return from an attack on the rebels advancing on Lucknow, on the 2nd instant, and that he sank under the effects of his wounds on the 4th instant. It is reported from Lucknow (on the 10th July) that the attacks of the rebels are less frequent and more feeble than heretofore."

"From Brigadier General Havelock, dated Cawnpore Cantonment, July 17.

"By the blessing of God I recaptured this place yesterday, and totally defeated Nana Sahib in person, taking more than six guns, four of siege calibre. The enemy were strongly posted behind a succession of villages, and obstinately disputed for the hundred and forty minutes every inch of the ground; but I was enabled by a flank movement to my right to turn his left, and this gave us the victory. The conduct of the troops was admirable. Nana Sahib had barbarously murdered all the captive women and children before the engagement. He has retired to Bhitoor, and blew up this morning on his retreat the Cawnpore magazine. He is said to be strongly fortified. I have not been yet able to get in the return of killed and wounded, but estimate my loss at about seventy, chiefly from the fire of grape."

CALCUTTA.—The residents in Garden Reach are kindly converting their outhouses and sheds into residences for the unfortunate ladies and wives of Europeans, who pour into Calcutta by every up-country steamer, in a state of destitution and starvation. We understand, also, that the young ladies of Calcutta are very busy making up clothing for the sufferers. A subscription has commenced, with the benevolent purpose of ameliorating the sad condition of the refugees from the scenes of mutiny; and the list is being liberally subscribed to, and is fast filling. Similar subscriptions are being raised at the other presidencies. The Bengal subscription amounted to some Rs. 90,000 at the last date from Calcutta.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Hurkaru complains that the married families in Fort William are located in the lower arches of the barracks (not intended for any European to live in, on account of their excessive dampness), and where the authorities would not permit them to re-side, did not the exigencies of the service prevent them from being better accommodated.

In expectation of the arrival of a considerable number of H.M.'s troops, for whom no sufficient accommodation has been found available, it has become necessary to occupy temporarily such public buildings in Calcutta as can be made use of for the above purpose. Consequently, the gentlemen occupying the Pleaders' Chambers of the Sudder Court are authoritatively solicited "to make arrangements to vacate for a short period the rooms now in their occupation. As the matter is very urgent (writes Mr. A. W. Russell, the register), will you oblige me by doing what is required as soon as possible?"

Orders have been issued by Government to the civil authorities at all stations on the river, directing them to see that no steamers, whether belonging to Government or to private companies, are detained longer than is absolutely necessary to land or take the treasure or other cargo and passengers. The authorities have also been directed to recommend to the European officers of Government and the European residents generally, to provide for the safety of their wives, &c., by sending them to places of security, and to grant to such as may desire free passage on board the Government steamers and boats to any place in their downward course.

In order to check riot and disturbances in the suburbs of Calcutta, instructions have been issued to the magistrate of Allypore, by the Government of Bengal, to cause all grog-shops at Allypore and Kidderpore to be closed after 5 P.M.

ANTICIPATION OF FAMINE.—A correspondent of the Hurkaru calls Lord Canning's attention to another subject of an imminent nature:—"The general cry now is, what will become of us in a short time to come? Rice, which sold at one rupee the maund, is scarcely to be had at 2. 8. the maund, and is again daily rising; nor is it the case with this commodity only, but with every other grain of daily consumption. The merchants, without consideration and mercy for their poor neighbours, are now exporting rice and seeds by lacs and lacs every day, for the benefit of their purse; and if it continues at this appalling rate, we shall die of starvation, though this staff of life (rice) grows in abundance in our native land. Is it not, my lord, high time that the strong arm of the law should be stretched out for the protection of the immense number of lives placed under your stewardship? and will you, as the defender and protector of their lives and property, with solace to your conscience, remain neuter to their heartrending cries for help? God forbid it! And your lordship should therefore suspend for a time the exportation of rice and sundry articles of general consumption in the country."

THE DECCAN.—We learn from Hingolee, that a field force, under the command of Major W. A. Orr, consisting of the 1st and 4th cavalry, the 2nd and 3rd regt. of infantry, together with twelve guns, all of the Hyderabad contingent, will proceed immediately toward Edlabad, prepared to act as circumstances may require. Edlabad is one hundred and eighty miles distant from Hyderabad, and fifty miles from the Nagpore frontier. Consequent on the above arrangement, a part of the Bolarum force, consisting of six companies of the 6th infantry and a troop of the 2nd cavalry, proceed to Aurungabad so soon as relieved by the 1st infantry from Wurrungul. The twelve guns are to be furnished in equal numbers from Hingolee, Aurungabad, and Ellichpore. The following is the General Order issued by the Resident, directing these movements:—

"A field force, under the senior officer, will assemble in the vicinity of Edlabad, North Berar, near the Booranpore frontier, composed as follows:—

"From Ellichpore.—A wing of 5th infantry, Hyderabad contingent, under Lieut. Hare; four 6-pounder guns of the 2nd company artillery, H.C.; left wing 4th cavalry, H.C., under Lieut. H. Fraser, leaving a troop; cantonment to be commanded by Lieut. N. Campbell, 2nd company artillery Hyderabad contingent.

"From Hingolee.—Right wing 4th cavalry, leaving only a troop; four 6-pounder guns of the 1st company artillery, under Major Orr; wing of 3rd infantry, H.C., under Capt. Sinclair. The cantonment to be commanded by Capt. Mackinnon, 3rd infantry, H.C.

"From Aurungabad.—2nd infantry, H.C., leaving a company for the protection of the lines, under a European officer, who will command the station; four 6-pounder guns of the 4th company artillery, under Lieut. Sinclair; head-quarters 1st cavalry, H.C., under Capt. Abbott, leaving a troop; head-quarters of 4th cavalry under Capt. Murray.

"From Bolarum.—6th infantry, H.C., to occupy Aurungabad, leaving one company to protect the families; one troop of 2nd cavalry H.C. to Aurungabad; 1st infantry to Bolarum, leaving a company for the protection of families at Wurrungul."—Spectator, July 15.

DELHI.—OFFICIAL NEWS.—Mr. Wilson, of the civil service, is stated to have reached Allypore, but nothing certain has been learned in regard to the state of the country in that portion of the Doab.

It is said that the mutineers have expended their powder, and that their efforts to make up some have been seriously impeded by the rains and the swelling of the canals.

Major Lau then has left camp, and Lieut. Taylor holds the post of chief engineer until Col. Baird Smith joins. Other officers of superior grades, who had joined or were joining the army, are also mentioned as being on their way back.

The wing of the 61st Queen's had reached camp, and Major Coke's corps was expected next day.

Accounts have been received from General Van Cortlandt's force, of several interviews with the maharajah of Beekaneer, who was very cordial.

A letter states that the Delhi people continue to practise great atrocities against every unfortunate Sikh or Punjabee who falls into their hands. The brother of a sapper spy, a Sikh camel-man, was caught, and sent back with both hands hanging by a string, and his nose cut right down.—Lahore Chronicle Extra, July 2.

Lieuts. Yorke and Paske were wounded in the skirmish outside of Delhi June 24th.

On the 1st July the bridge of boats at Delhi was carried away by a rise in the river. The Bareilly mutineers were endeavouring to cross in boats.

Capt. Stewart, of the 9th N.I., and other officers, had reached the camp at Delhi from Agra.

During the skirmish of the 30th June at Delhi, it is stated that the mutineers would not venture out of the cover about the Subzee Mundee. Lieut. Yorke, who was wounded on that occasion, has since died of his wounds. Colonel McKenzie and Captain Fagan, of the artillery, were slightly wounded on that occasion, as also Lieut. Blair of the fusiliers.

ESCAPE OF MR. AND MRS. WAGENTRIER.—We were at the Flag-staff Tower with the other residents, and when the magazine exploded, and the sappers on duty with us displayed symptoms of disaffection, we thought it high time to leave here; we accordingly got into our own carriage, which was in waiting, and left for the Kurnaul road. About five miles along the Kurnaul road there is situated a garden-house, belonging to Newab Zia-ood-Deen Khan, and, as he had often invited us to come out there for change of air, we determined upon going there for safety. The durwan admitted us readily, and sheltered us until twelve at night, when he came up to the top of the house, where we were, and told us we must turn out. We remonstrated, but without avail; he said that the nabab himself, if with us, would not shelter us. Upon this we left, and as our coachmen and syces had left, my wife and myself harnessed the horses, and, she driving, we started towards Kurnaul. About one mile or so from the house we were attacked by some fifteen or twenty Goojurs, who attempted to stop us; we escaped them, however, by putting the horses to gull gallop. A mile or so further, we met another and larger party, who rushed upon our horses, flourishing swords, spears, &c. One seized the reins, and I shot him dead; the rest of the party contented themselves with howling after us. So on we went, until we had been attacked five times, and during the encounters I shot four men dead and wounded two, receiving in return a wound cut on the left arm, and a blow on the nape of the neck from an iron-bound lattee, my wife received a lattee-blow on her right arm and leg, from the effects of which she is still suffering.

A letter from Camp Delhi, June 25th, 1857, says:—"We had on the 23rd a long action with the mutineers. The attacking party were the reinforcements that had just come in from Jullundur and Philour. It commenced at seven o'clock, a.m., and was continued by the mutineers, behind walls, rocks, and in houses, till late in the afternoon. They were constantly reinforced, but at about four p.m. we had complete possession of the position from Subzee Mundee to a temple with a walled enclosure on the left; and the enemy, finding themselves beaten at all points, retreated into the city. Since that they have been quiet, not a mutineer appears to have moved out of the city. We have now an advanced battery of three 18-pounders which commands the road leading from the Lahore Gate, and will prevent their moving out with impunity. There were two wounded men of the 61st taken prisoners, who represented the enemy as being in want of ammunition. Every body of the mutineers, as they arrive, are obliged to make an attack upon our position. Some report that they are not allowed to enter the city until this is done.

"Our men continue tolerably healthy—comparatively very few deaths; and it is a blessing which all appreciate. Few could have contemplated the march of a large European force at the very hottest season of the year without forebodings of a large mortality. Our supplies are abundant, and a large convoy reached us the morning of the 23rd, while the action was going on."

A letter from Delhi, June 26, says:—"We have been pretty quiet yesterday and to-day, although the alarm sounded early this morning, and we expected another sortie. On the 23rd the fighting was most stubborn, commencing at about five a.m., and continuing until six p.m. The enemy thought the day, as the anniversary of Plassey, favourable, and declared that no Englishman should be allowed to live the day out. The 1st and 2nd fusiliers, with a portion of the rifles, Goorkhas, and Rothney's Sikhs, bore the brunt of the whole, and the casualties were great—the poor old "dirty shirts" losing again twelve killed and thirty wounded, the 2nd fusiliers lost poor Jackson, killed, and some twenty-eight killed and wounded. All, as usual, did their work well, and I am sorry that, during the scrimmage, that gallant old soldier Colonel Welchman, commanding the 1st, got a severe wound in the right arm; but he is doing well, and so are all the wounded officers in camp. Brigadier Chamberlain has arrived, much to the satisfaction of all, with his reinforcements; also of four companies 2nd fusiliers, one of the 75th, Rothney's Sikhs, and some artillery; to-morrow we get the 8th foot, with Coke's rifles, and in three or four days H.M.'s 61st, a wing only. When we attack, or what we have in store for us, is a profound secret; but I hope some real business will be thought of soon."

"Camp before Delhi, June 24, 1857.

"We were reinforced yesterday by four guns, 1st troop; two guns, 5th troop; 1st battalion horse artillery; two companies H.M.'s 75th, four companies 2nd European fusiliers; the 4th regiment Sikh infantry, and a regiment of irregular horse, the arrival of which is rejoicing to us.

"The 23rd instant was rumoured from the city of Delhi to have witnessed the overthrow of the British power in India, it being the anniversary, or great day, among the Moslems, which was deemed a good omen. We, however, awfully disappointed them to their hearts' content, although the rebels fought well, and gave our troops some severe work; it lasted from daybreak until dark. Their principal attempt was to turn our right flank, and obtain possession of one of our heavy batteries; they also brought a large force to bear upon our new battery. Our men were much annoyed by some 9-pounder guns of theirs, placed in such a position as to defy our heavy pieces to touch them. The entire day was nothing else but shot and shell from our mortars and siege batteries, and heavy guns, with an occasional discharge from our horse artillery, with rolls of musketry and rifle practice. From the city, however, came replies rather hot, but the distance was too great to have done any harm. The country on our right, for some distance, is nothing else but a series of large gardens, with high stone walls, which the rebels had 'loop-holed' with narrow roads intersecting them, by which they managed in some measure to pepper our men at first. M. J. Tombs, commanding 2nd troop, 1st brigade horse, who has always been foremost in any fight, has had several narrow escapes in passing these walls with his guns; of course, yesterday he was in the thickest of it, and had several horses wounded, but the men fortunately escaped. The enemy will not come out in open ground; it is, therefore, regular bush fighting. Our men, in consequence, are getting savage from not being able to get at them. Why some of these walls are not knocked down, I am unable to tell. It was intensely hot yesterday, and, as you may suppose, our men were much exhausted, and you may guess how much we wanted men, when the infantry which joined us in the morning, after marching twenty-two miles the previous night, had to be sent out. A little after sunset, the scoundrels fled rapidly into the city like pariah dogs with their tails between their legs—as the guns in our new battery, commanding the Cabul gate, played upon their flight, and committed great havoc among them. The affair terminated in our sappers having blown up a number of the houses which afforded protection to the rebels. Four men disabled by sun-stroke were the only casualties in the artillery.

"But about thirty of the rifles, and the same number in the fusiliers, were killed and wounded,—the guides also suffered much. The Sikh regiment dashed bravely into the fight, and bore themselves remarkably well,—so did the brave Goorkhas. The dead of the mutineers could be counted by hundreds; the villains attacked us in masses, and no sooner one lot was polished off by our brave soldiers than another fresh lot took their place throughout the day. But since last night up to this morning little firing has taken place; on our right, where our 18-pounders in the heights were placed, they did great execution, mowing down the enemy by scores in their flight into the citadel.

"We expect the 2nd Company, 1st battalion, from Umritsur by to-morrow—we want them much. Our heavy guns, H.M.'s 8th regiment, and the remaining guns of the 1st and 5th troop, 1st brigade, we expect in four or five days. The views of our commander are not known, of course—but it is believed we shall wait a few days. It is conjectured the Punjab column will come this way, but it is only a rumour; if it did, it would be a great help.

A letter from head-quarters at Delhi, dated June 30th, says:—"There was a sortie yesterday at 6 A.M. The enemy was repulsed with a loss of 500 killed. Our loss was small. Lieut. Blair of the 2nd Fusiliers was severely wounded. A wing of the 61st and 90 men of the 1st Europeans, came in this morning. Rockets were tried last night. The city wall is injured in several places from our fire. A detachment was sent out yesterday morning and burnt a village, and destroyed a battery the enemy were forming on the right.—Lahore Chronicle, July 4.

A letter from Delhi, dated the 4th July 1857, says:—

"The Rohilcund force arrived in Delhi some four days ago, and to-day they turned out and proceeding to Allipore at our rear, some sixteen miles, attacked two companies of the 2nd Punjab Cavalry who were there; they killed three or four of the Punjabees, and looted their camp of tattoos, &c. A portion of the Delhi force proceed to Allipore and attacked them; we lost three, and had six or seven wounded. They were repulsed with a loss of some 150, and we captured their ammunition and got back all that they had looted from the 2nd Punjabees; we got 700 camels."

The king is said to have issued an order for the massacre of every female in Delhi the moment we approach their walls. This, if true, implies a happy certainty in the royal mind as to the result of our assault.

Jotee Persaud has again been applied to by the insurgents, who want him to furnish supplies. Jotee handed the letter to the authorities.

A letter from Delhi, dated the 28th June, says:—

Pleasant weather in camp. The rains began yesterday; and it is now coming down in torrents, and we are nearly swamped. Yesterday we had some three or four hours' skirmishing. The rebels came out in force, and tried to take our advanced battery; but they got soundly beaten, and had to retire with great loss. The 1st Europeans and Bengal fusiliers bayoneted many. They got into a village, where the rascals had taken up a position, and got the first fair chance at them. Our casualties were few—two artillerymen killed and three wounded. The European infantry and Guides suffered a little. The officers say that the mutineers don't fight so well as they did. When they venture out, parties of their cavalry guard the gate, and will not let them return to the city so soon as they would otherwise do. The Rifles tell me they are short of small-arm ammunition; for on yesterday's fight the few men they had killed fell by slugs, which the rebels had made from the telegraph wire. Our force is on the increase. We were joined this morning by fifty men more of the 4th battalion, a wing of H.M.'s 8th and some irregular cavalry; they conveyed two siege howitzers and plenty of ammunition. The 61st and Coke's guides will be in camp in two or three days. The firing last night and to-day has been slack. This, I presume, has been caused by the rain. I was on the horse gun battery on our right yesterday, and had a fine view of the row. The shot fired from that position made complete lanes through the enemy as they retreated; they tried to shell us, but only one came over and burst immediately in our rear. That Cawnpore and Lucknow have been burnt, is but too true, yet in Oude I believe Sir H. Lawrence holds his own, that is retaining possession of the fort, &c. The Bareilly force is now close at Delhi, if not within the walls, but woe betide them if they venture out to try their strength with us. I apprehend there must have been more ordnance in Delhi than I first mentioned, for they are firing from twenty pieces, at least, at us. They try hard to hit our camp, and my tent gets all their favours. The shells fall about 300 yards distant, sufficiently near, however, to allow me to hear the whistle of the fragments. There is but little sickness in camp. We all rejoice at Sir P. Grant having been appointed Commander-in-Chief. The 3rd troop 3rd battalion is with us, but not the head-quarters. We hear that the 29th are standing firm, but nothing of the 8th irregulars. There are a few sepoy in camp, a company of the 5th, and a few of the 61st; but our men look upon them with suspicion; it's no quarter they would get if they proved vicious. No doubt exists but that Lieut. Willoughby is dead. We know nothing of the Oude mutineers of whom you make mention. Two of the enemy's horse guns got disabled yesterday. Since I last wrote, a few of the annoying stone walls have been floored. Our commander has some design in view; he takes the enemy's sallies very quietly, and will not allow our men to proceed beyond a certain distance on pursuit. The rebels lost about 700 men in killed and wounded in yesterday's row.

A letter from Delhi, dated the 10th July, says:—

"Yesterday morning, between 8 and 9 A.M., about 300 sowars of the mutineers managed to get past our out-lying pickets, and charged into camp. They first came across a picket of the carbineers. The men at first took them for our own sowars, the 9th irregular cavalry; and when charged, they ran up the hill near which they were posted. Their horses broke loose and rushed into camp, giving the alarm to the carbineers, who immediately turned out. The sowars charged into the camp, and when as far as the canal, halted and fired a volley into the tents. By this time the mounted guides and carbineers came round, and pursued the road by the Subzie Mundie: very few of the 300 got back to Delhi. Major Tombs, artillery, shot one, and cut down two with his own hand; one artillery officer was cut down at the battery, and about twelve natives, servants, and bullock-drivers.

"By the time this affair was over, the Pandies had turned out in force, about 6,000 strong, and attempted to force our pickets, but they were driven back with heavy loss; our men got a chance of bringing the bayonet into play, and in one house stuck 150, and in a walled garden about 100 more. We have suffered rather heavily. Of 8th, 40 killed and wounded; 2nd Bengal fusiliers, 18 wounded, 3 killed; 60th rifles, 14 killed and wounded. The Sikhs also suffered. The loss of the enemy cannot be less than 500, as our guns cut them up with grape in fine style, making regular lanes through them. We have advanced our pickets on the right to the mosque on the crest of the hill in front of the Lahore Gate, so that instead of their driving us back, we have established ourselves in a post from which they have been annoying us for days past. The rain up to half-past two P.M., when the last Pandi vanished, was very heavy."

Delhi, July 13.—Since the brush on the 9th the rebels have been quiet, I suppose they had enough of it then, for they have not even replied to our batteries.

DELHI, JULY 15.—The mutineers came out to-day in great force, but were repulsed with much slaughter. On our side seven officers were wounded.

DEFENCE OF THE DELHI MAGAZINE. — The following account of the defence of the Delhi magazine has been communicated to us by Lieut. G. Forrest, and is published with his permission. "On the morning of the 11th May, between 7 and 8 A.M., Sir T. Metcalfe came over and requested me to go with him to the magazine, for the purpose of having two guns placed on the bridge, in order to prevent the mutineers from passing over. On our arrival at the magazine, we found that Willoughby and Raynor, and the whole of the establishment, both European and native, were already there. Willoughby, Sir T. Metcalfe, and myself, went at once to a small bastion on the Jumna face, which commanded a full view of the bridge; and we could distinctly see the mutineers marching over in open column, headed by the cavalry. A body of the cavalry had previously taken possession of the Delhi side of the bridge. Sir T. Metcalfe, on seeing this, went off with Willoughby to see if the city gate was closed against the mutineers. This was, however, a useless precaution, as the mutineers were admitted at once into the palace, through which they passed cheering. On Willoughby's return, the gates of the magazine were closed and barricaded, and every arrangement made for a vigorous defence, of some hours at least.

"Inside the gate, leading to the park, we placed two 6-pounders, double charged with grape, one under Sub-Conductor Crow, the other under Sergeant Stewart, who stood by them with the lighted matches in their hands. Their orders were, that if any attempt was made to force that gate, both guns were to be fired at once, and they were to fall back on that part of the magazine where Willoughby and myself were posted. The principal gate of the magazine was similarly defended by two guns with chevaux de frise laid down on the outside. For the further defence of this gate and the magazine near it, two 6-pounders were so placed as either to command the gate or small bastion in its vicinity. Within 60 yards, in front of the office, and commanding two cross-roads, were three 6-pounders, and one 24-pounder (howitzer), which could be so managed as to act upon any part of the magazine in that neighbourhood. All these guns were loaded with double charges of grape. Arms were now placed in the hands of the native establishments; they took them reluctantly, and it soon appeared that they were not merely in a state of excitement, but also of insubordination, particularly the Mussulman portion, for they flatly refused to obey the orders issued by the Europeans. After the above arrangements had been made, a train was laid, communicating with the powder-magazine, and ready to be fired by a preconcerted signal, which was that of Conductor Buckley raising his hat from his head on the order being given by Willoughby.

"Hardly had the above arrangements been completed, when the guards from the palace came and demanded possession of the magazine in the name of the King of Delhi. To this no reply was made; immediately after the subahdar of the guard on duty came and informed Willoughby and myself, that the king had sent word to the mutineers, that he would without delay send them down scaling-ladders from the palace, for the purpose of scaling the walls; and shortly afterwards they arrived. On these being erected against the walls, the whole of our native establishment deserted us, by climbing up the slope sheds on the inside, and descending the ladders on the outside. The enemy now appeared in great numbers on the wall. We opened a fire of grape upon them, and kept it up as long as a single round remained. Every shot went crashing through them, and told well."

EXTRACT FROM OFFICIAL LETTER.—"I am in duty bound to bring to the notice of the Major-General the gallantry of conductors Buckley and Scully on this trying occasion. The former, assisted only by myself, loaded and fired in rapid succession the several guns above detailed, firing at least four rounds from each gun, and with the same steadiness as if standing on parade, although the enemy were then some hundreds in number, and kept up a continuous fire of musketry on us from within forty or fifty yards. After firing the last round, Conductor Buckley received a ball in his right arm, and I, at the same time, was struck in the left hand by two musket-balls, which disabled me for the time.

"It was at this critical moment that Lieut. Willoughby gave the signal for firing the magazine. Conductor Scully, who had from the first evinced his gallantry by volunteering for this dangerous duty, now coolly and calmly, and without hesitation, and yet without confusion, set fire to the several trains. In an instant, and with an explosion that shook the city, and was heard distinctly at Meerut, the magazine blew up. The wall was thrown flat upon the ground, and it is said that at least a thousand of the enemy were buried under the ruins, or blown into the air. Strange to say, half of that gallant band emerged alive from amidst the ruins, black, singed, and wounded, it is true; but that they escaped at all, cannot be more a matter of surprise to others than it is to themselves. Lieutenants Willoughby and Forrest reached the Cashmere gate together. The latter has reached Meerut in safety; the former is said to have been murdered in a village while on his way to Kurnaul. He was a gallant soldier, and did his duty well.

FYZABAD, JUNE 22.—We are now with a friendly Rajah at Gopalpore on the river, twenty-five miles from Goruckpore; he has promised to send us to Dinapore, which is distant 120 miles. I believe we are now quite safe, though we have been in danger, and suffered much discomfort and misery. Our party consists of Capt. and Mrs. Reid, and two children; Capt. and Mrs. Orr, and sister, and five children; Capt. and Mrs. Thurburn, and one child; Capt. and Mrs. Dawson, and four children; Mr. and Mrs. Bradford; Mr. and Mrs. Fitzgerald and child, and Mr. and Mrs. Hurst and child."—Englishman, July 1.

A LETTER from Captain Orr, dated Gopalpore, near Gograh, June 24, mentions that he and his family, with Miss Troup and the rest of his party, were escaped from Fyzabad, had reached Gopalpore in safety, and expected to be at Dinapore on the 29th. They were to proceed under the protection of the Rajah of Gopalpore, who has shown himself faithful to the British Government.

It is expected that most of the other Fyzabad people will yet turn up.

Mrs. Black, Mrs. Goldney, and Mrs. Strahan, have been brought in to Allahabad by that noble fellow Ajeet Singh, who saw Lieut. Grant and the party of thirty-seven Europeans who accompanied him from his camp near Fyzabad.

A letter from Mr. Wynyard, the judge of Goruckpore, reports all quiet at that station on the 24th instant.

GHAZEIPORE.—The following officers of the 2nd and 3rd regiments Oude irregular force from Secrora and Gonda arrived at Ghaizepore on the 26th of June, having escaped along the Nepal frontier viâ Bulrampore and Barsee. On arrival at Goruckpore they escorted the ladies mentioned below into Ghaizepore. They attribute their safety to the assistance rendered to them by the rajahs of Bulrampore and Barsee. Mr. Wingfield, c.s.; Lieut. Clarke, assistant commissioner; and Mr. Owen, remained at Barsee.

2nd Regt.—Capt. G. Boileau, Lieut. G. Hale, Dr. Kendall. 3rd Regt.—Capt. Miles, Lieut. R. D. Campbell, Dr. Bartrum, Quartermaster Sjt. P. Carr.

Ladies from Goruckpore.—Mrs. W. Wynyard and child, Mrs. Paterson and two children, Mrs. Steele and child, Mr. and Mrs. Berkeley and family.

Colonel, Mrs., and Miss Lennox, from Fyzabad, joined the above party a short distance from Ghaizepore.

Prior to the outbreak, the ladies of Secrora and Gonda had been sent into Lucknow, where, it has been reported, they had arrived in safety.—Englishman, July 2.

GUZERAT.—We learn that some six to ten men of the Guzerat irregular horse at Ahmedabad attempted to incite the corps to mutiny on the 9th instant, but that they were instantly seized and condemned to condign punishment. Our Deesa and Ahmedabad letters refer to this disturbance.

HISSAR.—Lieutenant Pearse has reached Hissar with 400 of the Bikhaneer troops, by a forced march, at the earnest request of the inhabitants, just in time to prevent an attack by Rangors on the town, which the Dogars have heretofore protected. All is now quiet there, and further reinforcements were being sent on to Lieut. Pearse, and General Van Cortlandt has himself moved on in that direction.—Lahore Chronicle, July 1.

HANSI.—By letter from General Van Cortlandt's force, we learn that all is quiet as far as Bhuwani, and arrangements are being made for the establishment of posts between that place and Hissar, which, owing to the importance of Bhuwani as a main emporium of trade, is a matter of great importance. The post on portions of the line between Ferozepore and Hansi is also being improved, horses being substituted for camels. Major Robertson reports that the revenue is being collected in the Sirsa district.

It has been ascertained that a Mrs. FitzGerald, widow of a sergeant who was killed at Hansi, is in safety with her children at a large village, called Sultanpore, where she is well treated. Further inquiries are in progress, and it is to be hoped that others who have hitherto been missing may yet be discovered.—Lahore Chronicle Extra, July 3.

GENERAL VAN CORTLANDT'S FIELD FORCE.—The following officers have accompanied General Van Cortlandt's field force, in addition to those already mentioned:—Lieut. Sadleir, H.M.'s 61st; Capt. Bloomfield and Lieut. Hunt, 45th N.I.; and Lieut. Walcott, 57th N.I.

HOOHINGABAD.—List of Europeans arrived at Hoochingabad from Ameer on July 15th, 1857:—Maj. Macpherson, Lieut. Ryall, and Dr. Sillipant, 3rd Gwalior inf.; Capt. Carter, Lieut. Macdougall, and Dr. Wilson, 5th Gwalior inf.; Lieut. Lemarchand, Bengal art.; Mrs. Lemarchand and four children; Mrs. Heyman and Miss Heyman; Mrs. Harrison (wife of Capt. Harrison, Gwalior cav.) and three children arrived two days before, with some telegraph signallers; Mrs. Burlton and child; two overseers, Watts and Wakefield; the wife and mother of Watts, and three children,—in all twenty-seven. Of the Ameer party, Dr. and Mrs. James and Lieut. O'Dowda were murdered.

JHELUM.—By telegraphic message received at Lahore, July 8, we learn that a detachment of Europeans, with guns, having been sent from Rawul Pindee to disarm the 14th N.I. at Jhelum, the latter had resisted, and after offering a protracted opposition, had been completely cut up. The few who succeeded in getting across the river, had been shot down by the police; and as far as has been yet ascertained, few or none have escaped. Those who have been captured were to be blown away from guns. Col. Ellice, H.M.'s 24th foot, Capt. Spring, of the same corps, and Ens. Scott, have been wounded.

The detachment of the same regiment, which had gone with treasure to Rawul Pinddee, and the 58th N.I., were likewise disarmed at that station on the 7th. About 30 men had attempted to escape, but the greater part of them were cut down or brought in.

JHANSI.—A correspondent in the Upper Provinces gives the following account of the Jhansi massacre from a written deposition of one present:—

"For some time since, the gentlemen were in the habit of passing the nights in the fort, and spending the days at their bungalows. Capt. Burgess and his establishment had their tents pitched within the fort, and everything was being put in readiness to retreat into it as soon as there should be occasion to do so, which occurred on the evening of the 4th of June. Some few effected their escape from the place altogether. One gentleman (name unknown) reached Burwa Saugor, when, meeting with a native surveyor of the canal establishment, Saheb Rai, he gave him his watch and horse, and procuring a Hindustani dress, escaped on foot. He was scarcely out of sight, when two Sowars, who were hotly pursuing him, arrived there, and recognizing the horse, took Saheb Rai and the thanadar prisoners back to Jhansi, where they were still when last heard of. Lieutenant Turnbull was not so fortunate; not having been able to gain the fort, he climbed a large tree; he had, however, been seen, and was shot on the tree. From the evening of the 4th until noon of the 8th, the gentlemen in the fort kept good their position, the ladies assisting them in cooking for them, sending them refreshments, casting bullets, &c. They were fifty-five in number altogether (Europeans), inclusive of the ladies and children, and they began to get very much straitened for want of provisions. Behind all the gates they had piled high heaps of stones, to strengthen them, and kept up so good a defence, that one of the cannon which had been brought too near the gates was abandoned and it was only by fixing ropes to it in the night that the mutineers were able to regain possession of it. Lieut. Powys was the first person killed in the fort. The way he met his death was this: two men, brothers, in Capt. Burgess's employ, one was his jamadar, declared that they would go out. They were told they would be shot down if they attempted it, but they said they might as well be shot as stay there to be starved, and accordingly commenced undoing the fastenings. One was shot immediately. The other turned on Lieut. Powys, who happened to be near him, and cut him down with his tulwar. This one was directly shot by Captain Burgess. The only other person killed inside the fort, was Captain Burgess himself, who received a bullet in his head, after having, I am told, killed no less than twenty-five with his own hand. All the natives spoke of his great skill as a marksman. The mutineers at last, having forced the Ranees to assist them with guns and elephants, succeeded in effecting an entrance at one of the gates, and they promised the gentlemen, that if they laid down their arms and gave themselves up quietly, their lives should be spared. The gentlemen unfortunately listened to their words, and came out. They were tied in a long line between some trees, and, after a short consultation, had their heads struck off. Such ladies as had children had to see them cut in halves before their own turn came. The Sowars, it appears, bore the principal part in all these atrocities. This took place on the afternoon of the 8th of June.

Of the other poor people of the 12th, Kirke is dead, also Mrs. Smalley; Lieut. Townshend killed, ball through his heart; Mrs. Lungdale, dead; Sergeant-Major Lucas, dead. Dr. and Mrs. Mawe fell off their horse, their fate uncertain; Lieut. Barber supposed to be dead."—Englishman, July 9.

LAHORE.—A detail of No. 2 Punjab light field-battery reached Lahore July 1, from Kohat, in the short space of ten days.

MEERUT.—A letter from Meerut, dated the 27th June, states that a cossid had arrived from Allyghur, bringing a few letters from a Lucknow, dated the 12th June. The writers give an account of the Sepatapore mutiny, and they talk of having arrived safely at Lucknow; so we may infer that all was quiet there at that time. Most of the ladies and officers of the 41st N.I. have managed to escape. Colonel Birch and Capt. and Mrs. Gowan are mentioned as killed, and great fears are entertained for the safety of the civilians. The news from Allyghur is that all is quiet there, the troop of officer volunteers being at some village close by. The road from thence to Agra is reported open.

MHOW.—The following is a message from Capt. Hungerford, dated Mhow, 15th July, to the Bombay Government,—"I send lists of escaped and killed. Escaped.—Col. and Mrs. Durand, Capt. and Mrs. Shakespear, Dr. and Mrs. Knapp, Lieut. and Mrs.

Cobbe, Mrs. Robertson and two children, Capt. Ludlow, Col. Travers, Capt. and Mrs. Mallengot, Col. Stockley, Mrs. Dutton, Serjt. and Mrs. Murphy, Messrs. H. Hammond and Williams, Mr. Shields; Messrs. Martin, Collins, O'Brien, Galloway, Norris, Tinley, Farrell, Moran, Beauvais, and Crawley; Lieut. Waterman, and Dr. Thompson. Thirty-four bodies of men, women, and children, were buried, four or five of which were recognized;—Mrs. Beauvais, Mrs. Crawley, a young child, Mr. and Mrs. Novis, Mr. Murray, Mr. and Mrs. Macbeth, and five children, Mr. McMahon; two Parsees, relatives of Merwanjee; Mr. Payne, Mr. Alphonso, Mr. and Mrs. Butler and son, Mr. Brook, Mr. Avery and wife, and Mr. Bone and wife. The remaining bodies could not be recognized."—Bombay Times, July 17.

It gives us much pleasure to state that yesterday morning a message was received at Bombay direct from Mhow, reporting the re-opening of the telegraph, and that the country was tranquil; also that Holkar was exerting himself favourably.—Poona Observer, July 15.

MHOW, 16th JULY, 1857.—As so many contradictory accounts seem to have reached you regarding the recent occurrences at this place and Indore, perhaps the following narrative may prove acceptable.

On the morning of 1st July, about 8 a.m., heavy firing was heard here, coming from the direction of Indore. Shortly afterwards Colonel Platt, commanding at Mhow, got a pencil note from Colonel Durand at Indore, containing these words: "Please send the European battery over sharp, Holkar has attacked us at the residency." The battery started accordingly, but after reaching half way, a note from Indore informed the officer commanding the artillery, that the resident had been obliged to fly from Indore, so the battery had better return, which it did accordingly. At 10 a.m. the same morning, two guns of Holkar's nine-pounders, with an ammunition limber, had passed through the centre of Mhow cantonment, down the Bombay road.

Colonel Platt, on hearing of this, supposed that the guns had gone to take possession of the passes in rear of Mhow, and ordered out the flank companies of the 23rd native infantry under Capt. Trower and Lieut. Westmacott, and a troop of light cavalry under Capt. Brooks, with orders to overtake the guns and bring them back into Mhow cantonments, at all risks. This service was duly performed—Captain Brooks having galloped ahead about three miles, and taken possession of the guns until the infantry came up, when the gunners were disarmed, and the whole returned to cantonments about 3 p.m.

Meanwhile, as an attack upon Mhow by Holkar's troops was anticipated by Col. Platt, who was under the impression conveyed to him by Col. Durand that Holkar was against us, precautionary measures were taken for defence. The European battery went into the arsenal or fortified square, the ladies and children being also sent to the same place,—a picket of light cavalry was thrown out about five miles on the Indore road under two lieutenants, and another of fifty sepoy under Lieut. Simpson, to the north of cantonments near the nullah. All officers were ordered to proceed to the lines of their men, and to remain there all night, ready to turn out at a moment's notice, and the men were kept accoutred. The arsenal guard was increased by thirty men, and everything was ready to resist the attack if made.

About a quarter past ten, P.M., whilst Lieut. Martin was engaged in conversation with one of his men, the villain took advantage of his officer's back being turned for a moment, and raised his carbine and fired at him. The shot providentially missed; but the alarm being given, the fire was taken up by other troopers, and all the cavalry officers then in the lines, in a tent, had to run for their lives, the troopers chasing them for some distance and firing at them. All however happily escaped, as well as the riding master, though they reached the fort in a state of dreadful exhaustion. The officers of the 23rd N.I. had been eating their mess dinner in the quarters of the Sergeant Major of the regiment, on the right of their lines, and were sitting outside smoking and talking opposite the pile of arms of the grenadier company, when the shots were heard from the cavalry. In less than a minute the firing commenced from the huts of the grenadier company, evidently aimed at the officers sitting in front, but happily without effect. The fusillade was taken up the whole length of the infantry lines, and the officers (who most of them had their horses at hand saddled and bridled) immediately sprang up. Several of them, thinking an attack was made by Holkar's troops, rushed to the quarter guard and to their own companies, to turn their men out to repel it, but the true state of the case soon became evident. The men were not only deaf to their officers' orders, but fired at them as they were standing in front of the lines, and soon the whole parade ground was whistling with bullets fired from every direction. Nothing could now be done, and the officers made their escape to the arsenal, fired on as they went by the men.

None of them were however touched. On reaching the arsenal, Col. Platt was found there. He had not been to the lines, and would scarcely believe the fact of the mutiny, so infatuated was he with the idea of the loyalty of his men and their personal attachment to himself, notwithstanding all the warnings given him. However, he ordered the artillery in the fort to get ready and proceed to the lines, after all the sepoy guard inside the fort had been disarmed and turned out by Capt. Hungerford. As soon as the horses could be put to, four guns under Captain Hungerford started for the infantry lines, but Col. Platt, without waiting for them, and calling upon his Adjutant Capt. Fagan to accompany him, rode down to the lines without any other attendance. They were never seen alive again. As yet the exact manner of their death is uncertain, but they were found the next morning lying in front of No. 7 company, riddled with balls, and the colonel cut with a tulwar across the mouth, and his head cut nearly in two by a blow from behind. It is said, by some ten drummers who made their escape, that the colonel went up to a body of sepoys and commenced haranguing them; and they hearing the guns coming, and thinking he was trying to keep them engaged till they could be opened upon them, let fly a volley at him and the adjutant. Another account says that some cavalry troopers galloped up, saying they had murdered their commanding officer, Major Harris, what were the infantry going to do? When just at the time Col. Platt appeared, a whisper ran amongst them, and before a moment elapsed he was shot down. The guns coming up shortly after, two wounded horses were seen standing in front, which were shot down, when the guns opened on the lines with grape.

At the first discharge the cowardly rascals all rushed from the lines, and bolted across the race-course towards Indore, the cavalry having preceded them; and there is no doubt that the guns, going out as they did, though a great risk in the dark against a courageous foe, saved the bazaars from being plundered, and a number of houses from being burnt. As the sepoys ran clean out of cantonments, leaving everything in the way of property behind them, though they managed to walk off with all the money in the treasure-chest, and the new regimental colours. After the battery returned to the arsenal, some of them must have come out of their hiding-places, as they set fire to the mess-house 23rd N.I., and the Sikhs drank as much brandy as they could, smashing the rest. Three other houses were also burnt in the infantry, and two in the cavalry lines; but the greatest losses occurred from the officers' own servants, who took advantage of their masters having gone for refuge to the fort, and plundered the property left in the houses to a great extent, and then went off to Indore with the mutineers. The confusion in the arsenal for the first twenty-four hours was "worse confounded." Guns, limbers, horses, carriages, beds, chairs, ladies, children, &c., besides magazine stores, all mixed up in a mess together. However matters got pretty straight in this respect next day. Capt. Hungerford, as being the only officer here with any men under his orders, took command of the fort and the officers of the two regiments besides. The non-military portion of the community were formed into two divisions of volunteers under the command of the two senior captains (Trower, 23rd N.I. and Brooks, 1st L.C.), and took night duties on the walls, as well as accompanying the guns as a covering party on all occasions of their leaving the fort. Poor Major Harris, 1st L.C., was murdered by a party of his troopers who lay in wait for him; and his dead body and that of his horse were found lying on the road near the cavalry mess-house, much gashed. He was met by one of the infantry officers who was escaping to the fort, and was told of what had occurred, but he would not take warning, and persisted in going up to the cavalry lines, where he met his fate, though the manner of it is not exactly known.

Lieut. Dent had a narrow escape: a pistol was fired at him, close to his face, by one of his men on picket, but it happily missed, and Lieut. Dent clapped spurs to his horse and rode for his life, escaping in safety. Lieut. Simpson, the infantry officer on picket duty, could not keep his men at their posts when the firing in the lines commenced, so he went up with them, riding in the middle of them. On hearing the guns, the sepoys rushed in one direction and he went in the other, two men accompanying and taking care of him. He slept in the suddur bazaar all night in a Parsee's shop, the sepoys watching over him, and next morning they brought him into the fort. Though told they should be made havildars for their conduct, they took the first opportunity of slipping away and joining their comrades.

The night of the 1st was a night of anxiety, both on account of the unprotected state of the arsenal, the numbers of ladies inside it, and the uncertainty of the fate of the absentee officers, regarding whom at that time nothing was known.

On the morning of the 2d, Capt. Hungerford sent out four guns to bring in the bodies of the murdered officers (whose fate was soon learnt), and to clear the cantonments of any rascals that might be about.

The bodies of Col. Platt and Capt. Fagan, of the 23rd, and of Capt. Harris, 1st L.C., were brought in and buried in a corner of one of the bastions, all three in one grave.

Dr. Thornton, of the 1st L.C., whose house was the most distant from cantonments, was happily rescued alive, he having hid in a drain all night when his house was visited by the troopers, and having come out on seeing the guns approach.

On the 3rd instant the guns went out again, and burnt some villages near cantonments where the mutineers were harbouring, and from which they had been driven. A corporal of the artillery chased and cut down a trooper of the 1st L.C. in a most gallant manner. Martial law has been proclaimed; and one nautique of gun lascars, and two sepoys of the 23rd N.I., sent in by Holkar from Indore, have been hanged. Most of the artillery drivers and gun lascars, who were no doubt partakers with the others in their evil designs, have bolted to join the other mutineers, thereby seriously crippling the batteries.

After the mutineers reached Indore they were joined by some of Holkar's troops; and between them they plundered the Government treasury; but they could not carry away more than nine or ten lakhs.

The balance belonging to Government, about four or five lakhs, has been collected and sent into Mhow Fort; and Holkar's conduct has been very good. He was unable to control his mutinous troops, who attacked the residency; but he himself has been a friend to the British; and Col. Durand laboured under a complete delusion when he believed Holkar had attacked him. He is wise by this time probably. Holkar has too much to lose not to stand fast by the British Government; and he has given, since Col. Durand's flight, sufficient proofs of his friendship. Sergeant Murphy, of the artillery, and Capt. Magniac, of the Bhopal contingent, did their duty like men, the former having given the rascals a round from one gun, which staggered them; and the latter, having charged the mutineers' guns, cut down one man, and wounded (on dit) their leader, Sautd Khan, in the face; but his rascally Sikh sows would not back him; they pulled up, and left him to do it alone. He ought to be rewarded. Even his single charge checked the enemy for a time. The rise at Indore and Mhow had evidently been concerted beforehand; when a party went in from Mhow, on the 29th ult., to obtain pay for the troops, and came back, you may be sure, with full instructions.

The men of both regiments here had been treated with the utmost kindness and consideration by their officers, and their conduct was inexcusable, as yet they had no cartridge plea to offer.

We are all right here as yet. The fort is in a state of defence, and we are ready for any one; at the same time we should not be sorry to see the Bombay column arrive, to enable us to return to our houses, as at present it is not safe to do so.

The mutineers, joined by the 5th inf. Gwalior contingent, from Augur, have gone up the Agra road; we shall hear more of them by-and-by probably.

Col. Durand, who fled with his party of ladies to Schore, has been obliged to leave that place, as we hear the Bhopal contingent and the Ranees' troops have mutinied, and Col. Durand has gone to Hoosungabad, where he arrived on the 6th instant.

The above account, though a long one, may probably prove satisfactory to many anxious friends of people here.

MUSSOOREE.—The following letter from Mussooree, dated June 18, has been forwarded to us, via Lahore:—

"Well, here we all still retain our heads, though how long we shall keep them, no one knows. Things are about as bad as they well can be. Women and children most cruelly murdered, often after the most atrocious and diabolical cruelty has been practised, and yet the evil has arisen from our own acts. The cant and humbug which prevails among you all at home has done its work here at last: and what with our injudicious system of education, civilization, legislation, and that eternal caterwauling of missionaries, of all sorts and sizes, the people have at length been roused to make a stand for their own religion. We have one and all sworn to give no quarter; and the European soldiers are furious at the slaughter and diabolical treatment of our women and children,—they will assuredly spare no one! More power to their elbows, say I.

"We are shelling Delhi, and have set the city on fire in several places; the mutinous regiments fight well, but they evidently miss their officers, and have been well licked in every engagement; some entire regiments have been annihilated. Still the mutiny spreads, and will extend far and wide, entailing rape, murder, and the most atrocious cruelties on every party of Europeans at outposts, &c. England should send us 100,000 men, and proclaim martial law throughout the Indian empire, for if she does not the country will be lost, as our imbecile rulers here are talking of lenient measures to us, while our hair is on end at the frightful fate of friends and relatives. Children thrown into the air and caught as they descend upon the point of bayonets; women violated and then ripped up, children actually dismembered, as if hell had sent forth its imps to practise the most refined cruelties upon every soul—no matter whether black or white—who bears the name of Christian. We burn with the desire of vengeance, and vengeance we will take, in spite of the maudlin twaddle of our rulers. Small news you must not expect, as we are all absorbed in the one great fact that we are fighting for our lives. Here we are safe as yet and wide awake. We can muster about 500 Europeans, of all grades and professions, and are ready to give a good account of three times our number. We do not anticipate anything, however, as nothing but broken heads would be had up here. We are all well, thank God, though pinched for ways and means, as treasures and banks have all been plundered, and we have no money. We have had no communication with the Provinces below Agra, for some time, and suppose there is a row down the country also. You need have no fears for us up here."

MUNDLAISIR has escaped; neither person nor property injured. The ladies are going to reside at Asseerhur.

NAGPORE.—All quiet at present; all the Christian population, with the treasure and artillery guns, were secure within the fort, which is provisioned for six months. We deeply regret to learn, that the taint of disaffection has so far shown itself among the native troops at Seetabuldee, as to necessitate the disarming of the irregular horse there belonging to the Nagpore contingent. We are not in possession of particulars as to the origin of the apprehension which led to this result, but it must have been founded on grave causes. A parade, it seems, was ordered, at which the cavalry were so placed as to be commanded by the rest of the force present. They were directed to disarm, and on their hesitating to do so, the horse artillery came to the front, but action on their part was not requisite, as the troopers dismounted and gave up their arms and horses. It is added that the rissaldar and two other native officers were seized, tried by a native court-martial, condemned, and hanged on the spot. A summary administration of justice that cannot be too much in fashion just now, when mutiny occurs.—Madras Spectator, July 10.

NAGODE.—All is well.

OOTACAMUND.—The subjoined extracts from a letter dated Ootacamund, July 3, show how little is known in one part of India of what is being done in another part:—

"The leading fact of the past fortnight is the news of the storming of Delhi on the 12th June. The bare fact is all we know as yet; no details have reached us further than that, 30,000 are reported to have been killed,—that the remains of the mutineers took refuge in the palace which has been since taken, 7,000 killed, and the king of Delhi hanged. The king of Oude has been placed under arrest in Fort William, and will probably meet with the same fate. The Bengal army is rotten to the core; it seems doubtful whether a single regiment can be relied on; for the one day the men profess the greatest loyalty, and the next, if opportunity offers, murder their officers, and any other Europeans, women or children, who come in their way."

"Ours and the Bombay army are all staunch. There may be discontented individuals, and no doubt there are,—but so there always are. Our regiment would only be too happy to go against the mutineers, for there is no sympathy between the two armies. The Bengal regiment at Dacca treated our men as Pariahs. There is consequently no love for their brethren in arms. You will most likely obtain later accounts than we have here, as the daks are now so irregular in the north-west, as well as the telegraph communication being cut off in a great measure, that the news come all the way round by Bombay. However, when we get more European troops out, the mutiny will not last long; but then will come the difficulty of newly organising the army, and clearing the country of the disbanded sepoys, who of course will become robbers and plunderers."

PATNA.—We regret to learn that Dr. Robert Lyell, who has been acting as opium agent at Patna, since the death of Mr. Garrett, was killed on the 3rd instant, when assisting to put down a disturbance in the city. He was shot from an upper-roomed house, while riding through a narrow part of the city.

A letter from Patna, dated 4th July, seven a.m., gives the following intelligence:—

"At about half past nine o'clock last night, Bankipore was alarmed by a report that the city had risen in arms, and that Dr. Lyell had been killed. A party of Sikhs and some Sowars were instantly despatched to quell the disturbance, which, from a report made by a Sowar, seemed to be something bordering on a dacoity.

REWAH.—By a private letter from Rewah, dated the 8th July, we learn that Mr. Moore, Joint Magistrate at Mizapore, was killed a few days previous, at a place called Gopeegunge. Major Scott, Mr. Mavor and child, and Lieutenants Francke and Remington, all fugitives from Nowgong, were safe at Banda on the 26th June, protected by the Nawab. Captain Osborne, Lieutenant Jackson, and Mr. Kirke, were at Rewah, in charge of the Rajah there.

ROORKEE.—A party started for Hurdwar, to cover the escape from Nujeebabad of Mr. sub-conductor Stephens, his wife, and Corporal Bruce, who are now, it is believed, among the last Europeans left in Rohilkund. It is hoped they may be brought in to-morrow.

Some uneasy rumours about Goojur gatherings having been in circulation, a strong mounted patrol was sent under Captain H. E. Read, on Sunday morning, through a series of Goojur villages. The results were to show perfect quiet, and no collections of men were seen or heard of. The people were found following their usual work in the fields, and everything going on as in quiet times.

The revenue collections continued to come in in fair average amounts.

Intimation having been received yesterday, on good authority, of a threatened attack upon the town of Munglour, six miles south of Roorkee, by a large band of Goojurs, said to be assembled at that time in the neighbourhood of the town, a party of twenty-eight sappers and four canal sowars, under Captain Robertson, H.M.'s 8th Foot, and Lieutenant Pemberton, engineers, started at once for Munglour; and a detachment of the European garrison, with a party of gunners, were warned to be in readiness, in case of a call for their service. On approaching Munglour, Captain Robertson's party learned that the Goojurs, in number about 200, were assembled around the canal bungalow at which the detachment was to take up its quarters. The sappers were formed up, and the party advanced rapidly; but the dacoits, having intelligence of their approach, began to move off with all speed, and to cross the canal by the Munglour bridge. Captain Robertson and Lieutenant Pemberton, with the four sowars, galloped in pursuit, and, overtaking them, cut down three and took eight prisoners, the rest dispersing in all directions. Their number was estimated at about 150. The men who had been killed were immediately hung upon trees, and the prisoners sent in to Roorkee. Captain Robertson's party was to proceed to Muhmoodpoor, six miles further south, and to return to Roorkee this evening.

The commanding officer, with Lieut. Drummond, superintendent Northern Division Ganges Canal, proceeded yesterday afternoon up the canal to Hurdwar, to inspect the canal works, and to meet the patrolling party from Dehra, expected to arrive at Hurdwar this morning. They are expected to return to Roorkee this evening or to-morrow morning.—Roorkee Garrison Gazette, June 23.

Lieut. Col. Baird Smith left Roorkee this morning to join the head-quarters camp, and assume command of the engineer department of the force before Delhi.

Capt. A. C. Robertson, H.M.'s 8th, and Capt. F. Spring, H.M.'s 24th regt., also left Roorkee this morning to join their respective corps.

The six men condemned by sentence of the court-martial on the 25th instant, were executed yesterday morning, four at Munglour, and two at Roorkee. The other two, for whose trial the court re-assembled yesterday, were similarly sentenced, and were executed at Roorkee this morning.

All continues quiet here, and in the district around.—Roorkee Garrison Gazette, June 27.

SIRSA.—Mr. Donald and Dr. Minas arrived at Sirsa on the 30th from Umballah via Puttiala. The former proceeds at once to Fazilka, in place of Mr. Oliver, who is to take charge of the Sirsa district during Capt. Robertson's absence with the field force.

SAHARUNPORE.—The following is from Saharanpore, June 27th:—On the 26th June, a detachment, under the command of Lieut. Boisragon, Nusseeree battalion, consisting of 130 Goorkhas, a few sowars of irregulars, and also of the Puttiala Sikh cavalry, attacked a very strong position taken up by "Goojurs" and "Rangurs," on the banks of the Jumna, in the three villages of Munpore, Shahpore, and Oomunpore. Their number was upwards of 2,500, with forty or fifty horse; but the little force went at them with a will, punished them most severely, driving them out of their position, with a loss of upwards of 220 killed. Four villages were burnt, several horses captured, as well as upwards of 200 muskets, tulwars, and other arms, some large "tumbooches" amongst them. Mr. Robertson, C.S.; Mr. College, C.S.; Sergeants Willcock and Hyde, Canal department, with Sergeant-major O'Connell, Nusseeree battalion, accompanied the party.

SAUGOR.—SAUGOR FORT, JULY 15, 1857.—About the 13th or 14th of June, two companies, one from each of the two native infantry regiments here, viz. the 31st and 42nd regiments of native infantry, and seventy-five of the 3rd irregulars, were sent to escort two guns to Lullupore, the deputy commissioner of Chundeyru having sent an application for two guns which were required to strengthen the force stationed at Lullupore, consisting of 300 men of the 6th infantry, Gwalior contingent.

These guns never reached Lullupore, as the three companies of the 6th regiment Gwalior contingent broke out into open mutiny on the evening of the 12th of June. The European officers, Capt. Sale, commanding; Irwin, second in command, wife, and two children; Dr. O'Brien, and Lieut. Gordon, dep. comm. of Chundeyru, threw themselves on the protection of the Banpore rajah, who, on pretence of being a friend, had surrounded Lullupore with thousands of armed followers, and had been for days exciting the sipahees to mutiny.

The sipahees took the treasure, which amounted to from twenty to thirty thousand rupees,—a small sum, but still large enough to be longed for by the Banpore rajah and his hungry followers, the proud but poverty-stricken thakoor of the Chundeyru district, who attacked the 300 men of the Gwalior contingent without success, as they succeeded in carrying off the treasure. The Banpore rajah sent the European officers to the fort of Tehree, where they remained for some weeks. They are now, it is said, prisoners at Sahagpur. The Banpore rajah having proved himself our enemy, having established thannahdars at all our thannahs, and having taken possession of the entire district, a reinforcement was sent, of 200 or 300 men of the 31st, 100 of the 42nd, and fifty sowars, to strengthen the detachment under Maj. Gausson at Malthone, on or about the 19th of June; and shortly after their arrival the entire force attacked and took the fort of Balabet, in which they captured some fourteen or sixteen prisoners. The gateway was blown up, and I regret to add Ens. Spens, of the 31st, was accidentally killed, and Lieut. Willoughby, of the artillery, was wounded.

The force then returned to Malthone, where Lieut. Spens was buried in the dak bungalow compound. A few days afterwards, some sipahees of the light company of the 31st demanded the release of the prisoners, whom they had induced to surrender on promising to spare their lives. The prisoners were, under compulsion, released; but the men having given an order, instead of obeying the command of their officer, were naturally supposed to have mutinied; and this, coupled with the conduct of some of the 42nd, four of whom had been imprisoned for having sent to recall the company of the 42nd (who had been first sent out under Maj. Gausson's command), stating that "a European regiment was close to Saugor, return and you will hear all about it," caused us to take refuge in the fort. All the European residents were here assembled together in the fort, where, in a body, we can hold out against thousands, as supplies have been laid in for six months, if not for a longer period. The guns, and all the officers and European residents, came into the fort on the morning of the 30th of June. After a few days, the 3rd irregular cavalry, "Tait's," became disaffected, and out of about 200 present at head-quarters, about 145 mutinied.

The men of the 42nd present at head-quarters also mutinied, and forty of the 31st native infantry took possession of the Sudder bazaar, and levied fines at pleasure on the inhabitants. This lasted for a few days, when the 31st, getting impatient, commenced a fight at a considerable distance, in the Hindustani style; and, aided by about forty-five of the faithful sowars, succeeded in taking a 12-pounder gun from the 42nd, and drove them and the mutinous sowars out of their lines; but the mutineers accelerated their departure in consequence of a report that two guns were to be brought against them from the fort. I feel certain we got into the fort before the mutineers had completed their designs;—had we not done so, the public would ere long have heard of a massacre at Saugor. There are about fifty of the 42nd, all of the 31st except the forty who mutinied, and from 120 to 140 of the irregulars, still faithful; and it is to be hoped they may remain so. We have hanged a suspended deputy post-master named Nubbee Bux, for having stopped our daks and read our letters. Five sowars, one sipahce, and several other rebels, seventeen in all, have met the same fate. Three hundred of the 31st, and about ninety sowars, left last night to bring in treasure from Dumoh, which 100 men of the 42nd are guarding in the gaol there.—Bombay Times, July 25.

SEALKOTE.—The 9th light cavalry, and the 46th N.I. mutinied at Sealkote on the 9th July, but were met by Brigadier Nicholson's force, and driven back across the Ravee.

The following is a brief account of the fight with the Sealkote mutineers:—

JULY 12, 1857.—"About 9 A.M. this morning, information was received that the Sealkote mutineers were crossing at Trimmoo by a ford. In about ten minutes the column was in motion, and reached within a mile of Trimmoo by twelve o'clock; the column here deployed, the nine guns covered by the infantry. All this time we could distinctly see the 46th formed in line, in front of us, with the 9th cavalry on either flank. They had also vedettes far out watching, who fell back as we advanced. When within 800 yards of the enemy, our guns were unmasked. Thus we advanced within 300 yards, when the order was given to unlimber the guns, but not to fire, as Nicholson wished to commence with the Enfield rifles of the 52nd, who were placed between the guns. I really am not sure whether the first shot was fired by us or by them. I rather think the latter; but there was a very smart interchange between their muskets and our rifles for two or three minutes, when our guns opened first with round shot, then with grape. Scarcely had our guns opened, when the cavalry charged, not from the front, but from the right flank, into the guns on that side, and caused no little confusion, but were cut or shot down.

"Then we had a charge of cavalry on our flank and rear. There was a good deal of scrimmaging and pistolling; no sooner was this got over, than the Pandys charged manfully at our guns, and came, I suppose, within thirty or thirty-five yards. The Europeans could not stand this, but with a cheer they went at them with the bayonet. Two or three Pandys had bayonets through them in no time, and the rest turned and fled. The 6th Punjab infantry then advanced and drove them across the Ravee, leaving their camp and all their loot on the river-bank on this side. They had a gun on the other side, from which they began pounding us with round shot, and though not one told, yet the gun was, considering the distance, mighty well served; nor can we imagine whom they had to serve it. Two or three of our guns were brought to the river-side, and plied them with round shot and shell; some of the latter evidently bursting among the enemy and taking effect. While this game at long bowls was going on, Nicholson went to have a look at their camp, at which the Sikhs flew like vultures. There were three or four gharees of sorts; I took shelter in one for half an hour, and bathed my head with eau-de-Cologne, a bottle of which I found, and qualified the Ravee water with essence of ginger, which I also found. Competent judges say that we killed and wounded from 200 to 300 of the enemy. I should not have put their loss at so high a figure as the smaller. Our own is said to be under ten killed and twenty-five wounded, but I do not know certainly.

"Nicholson felt sadly the want of cavalry, and the enemy made the most of this deficiency on our part. Their tactics were admirable. They attacked us on both flanks and in rear, which they could not have done had we had 100 reliable horse. Their crossing the Ravee at Trimmoo is unintelligible, unless it be that their information about the movable column was defective.

"They have retired to the other side again, and still have the gun, which does not seem to have been brought over. I am inclined to think that the whole of their baggage had not come over—they are watched of course. Boswell with the Sikhs has been left at the serae at Trimmoo, which the scoundrels have damaged very much."

On the 15th, the mutineers were again attacked by the brigadier and totally discomfited. Their one gun was taken from them and themselves scattered in confusion throughout the neighbouring district, where they would receive little mercy from the Sikh zemindars.

LICENSING THE PRESS.

The day following the issue of the Government order for "Licensing the Press," the Englishman contained only one editorial remark, which was to the effect that the report of the Chamber of Commerce had "come out" in a red cover, and that the phenomenon might be attributed to "these warlike times."

The Hurkaru immediately resorted to a political motto, after the style of the London Examiner, on hearing that restrictions were placed upon its opinions:—"He who, speculating on the British Constitution, should omit from his enumeration the mighty power of Public Opinion, embodied in a Free Press, which pervades, and checks, and, perhaps, in the last resort, nearly governs the whole, would give but an imperfect view of the Government of England."—Mr. Canning's Speech at Liverpool.

Below the motto, which is printed in bold capitals, is the leading article for the day, which commences in a rather eccentric style:—

"To-day is the last of our liberty, until the Home Government come to our rescue. Monday will be 'The first dark day of nothingness,' as far as our independence is concerned, and

'The last of danger and distress' to our acutely sensitive rulers. We have been taking into careful consideration the course which it would be most expedient to adopt under the restrictions to which we are to be subjected. Should we abjure politics altogether, or confine ourselves to easy articles in words of two syllables, adapted for little statesmen, and warranted to mean nothing? Should we address ourselves to scientific subjects, such as the moon's rotation, or to questions of a literary character, and institute an enquiry into the authorship of Junius? Should we manufacture "enormous gooseberries," "showers of frogs," and count up the united ages of families, like the London papers when Parliament is not sitting? After duly weighing these and other equally sage suggestions, we came to the natural conclusion not to adopt any of them, but to pursue the course which we were pursuing before the passing of the obnoxious act—minus of course the praise of Government measures, which, as we are forbidden to blame, cannot be expected from us, and would, even if accorded, have not the smallest influence or consideration."

THE GOVERNMENT has sanctioned the construction of new barracks for the police battalion, and repair of the old ones at Sooree. The collector of Beerbhoom has been directed by government to commence the work immediately.

THE MAHARAJAH OF BURDWAN has entertained about 30 European sailors to guard his palace and the treasury.

INCREASE OF DACOTIES IN CHOPRAH.—In consequence of the frequent occurrence of Dacoities and thefts in the district of Choprah, the Government contemplates to depute an officer to suppress the Dacoits and other marauders in that district.

THE FAMILY OF THE EX-RAJAH OF UNGOOL some time back applied to Government to be permitted to remove from Hazareebaugh to Cuttack. The Hon. the Lieut.-Governor of Bengal complied with their application, and authorized the principal assistant at Hazareebaugh to grant to the family an advance of their stipends to enable them to proceed to Cuttack.

THE ASSISTANT HARBOUR MASTER, Mr. Monroe, has been suspended for a month, for "carelessness" in the performance of his duties, by which a vessel, the A. B. Coultz, sustained damage. The circumstance happened some weeks ago. The poor fellow appears to have been severely dealt with; for had a Court of Inquiry been held at the time the vessel met with the accident, or previous to her quitting the port, the assistant was in a position to prove that the occurrence was purely accidental; but instead of this the affair was kept in abeyance for about a month, till the vessel had left the port, when he was informed by letter that he was suspended for a month, with loss of full pay.

SALE OF GOVERNMENT SALT.—A body of merchants has addressed the Board of Revenue on this subject. Their petition states that, "having learnt from the mahajuns, with whom you held a consultation, that you have resolved to confine the sale of Government salt to those parties only styling themselves salt mahajuns, and to shut out the rest of the community from entering into speculation in that article, the petitioners beg most respectfully to observe that this resolution will expose a large section of the public to inevitable loss, who, without being secured any benefit by the sub-monopoly of the mahajuns, will be compelled to forsake their own actual business in that field altogether."

INVALID OFFICERS.—The new orders promulgated in the Gazette of the 23rd June, regarding the invalid establishment, place in the hands of Government very considerable and necessary powers. By the sixth paragraph of the order the commander-in-chief can direct to appear before the standing medical committee any officer whose health, in his belief, is so thoroughly lost as to preclude all hope of his being able to perform active service. By the seventh, all officers below the rank of lieutenant-colonel may be compulsorily removed to the invalid pension list, when they may become wholly unfit for further service.—Hurkaru.

MR. HODGSON, LATE SUPERINTENDENT of the locomotive department of the railway, has fallen a victim to cholera while in the fort of Allahabad. Mrs. Hodgson shared the same fate with her husband on the following day in the fort also.

THE COURT OF DIRECTORS, some time back, directed that the salary of assistants, on first appointment to the Punjab, should hereafter be Rs. 400 (as in the older Provinces) instead of Rs. 500, and the Governor-General has now ordered the arrangement to be carried into effect.

INDIGO PLANTERS' ASSOCIATION, June 11, Mr. J. P. McKilligin in the Chair.—The acting secretary, in opening the meeting, stated, that the chief business was to take into consideration an order, lately passed by Government, to the collectors of revenue, not to take bank notes in payment of the revenue in a greater portion than one-third of the amount,—that is, to take one-third notes and two-thirds cash. Mr. Goodenough then read a letter from Mr. J. F. Hedger, of Tartipore, complaining of this order, and stated that he had much pleasure in informing the meeting that the Government had cancelled the order in question. The members present then requested the acting secretary to place on record their appreciation of Mr. Hedger's energy in addressing the Government direct on the subject, and of the courtesy and readiness shown by Mr. Harrison, the Bengal Government accountant, in promoting and carrying out the cancelling of the order. A discussion then took place as to the Act No. XIII., of 1857, now passing through Council, relative to the cultivation of opium, and especially as to the several clauses fixing penalties for the non-cultivation of land for which advances have been received; and for embezzlement of opium by ryots; as to adjustment of ryots' account, and recovery of balance by distress. The acting secretary was directed to address Government on the subject, and apply for a similar law in respect of the cultivation of indigo. It was, however, subsequently resolved that the Government should not be troubled with this matter in the present disturbed state of the country.

THE VERNACULAR SCHOLARSHIPS for the encouragement of popular education, we observe, have been commenced in the following districts:—Bancoorah, Beerbhoom, Moorsshedabad, Rajshyhe, Bhagulpore, Monghyr, Behar, Burrisaul, Shahabad, Sarun, Patna, Mymensing, Sylhet, Furreedpore, and Pubna.

MR. HEDGER, an attorney of Calcutta, left, among other bequests, a legacy of Rs. 2,000 to the Medical College. The Lieut. Governor of Bengal, we hear, has authorized the authorities to appropriate the above sum to the improvement of the museum and the out-door dispensary attached to that institution. His honour further desires that a tablet is to be erected to the memory of the testator in the museum rooms of the college.

ENSIGN DAUNT.—In the Calcutta police court, June 22nd, before Mr. Wauchope, proceedings were taken against Ensign Daunt for wounding by a pistol-shot one J. Baker, at Serampore, on June 17th. The commissioner did not think it necessary to close the evidence until after the appearance of Baker, who was suffering from his wound, but would, in all probability, be well enough to give his testimony in a few days. The prisoner was admitted to bail in two sureties to the amount of Rs. 1,000 each, and his own recognizances to the same amount.

THE INHABITANTS OF HOWRAH, through the joint magistrate of that place, proposed to the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal to raise a volunteer corps for the protection of that town, but his honour thought there was no necessity at present for such a measure. The Government, we have been given to understand, has sanctioned the disbursement of Rs. 8,741 for the purchase of the land (and the houses thereon) required for the extension and improvement of the Bandah Ghaut at Howrah.

CAPTAIN BIVAR has been authorized by Government to make advances with the view to assist the Burkhamtse emigrants to settle in the British territories.

THE BARQUE "JANE PRATT" of Liverpool, laden with salt, had her bulwarks stove in, and the whole of her boats carried away in a recent storm which visited the harbour. The ship's foretop and mizen-masts were sprung in a dangerous manner. Great praise is due to the pilot, Mr. A. W. C. Say, for his intrepidity and perseverance in the management of the vessel during the violent storm she encountered.

SUPERSTITIOUS PRACTICES.—We (Hurkaru) learn from a correspondent, who writes on the authority of the Bhashkur, that the rich natives have commenced to make shosleons (a kind of poorja) to propitiate the anger of the gods, and thus avert the mischief that may likely come on them from the insurrection of the sepoys. Moreover, to hasten the success of the British arms, they are daily sending poorjas to all their renowned places of holiness, both in Calcutta and its suburbs.

MAJOR-GENERAL HEWITT, commanding the Meerut Division of the Bengal Army, has been removed from divisional command, and Major-General N. Penny, C.B. has been appointed to succeed him. Until the arrival of Major-General Penny, Brigadier A. Wilson, Commandant of Artillery, is to command the Meerut Division, with the rank of brigadier-general.

THE EX-AMEERS OF SCINDE, Meer Shahdad Khan and Meer Hussan Allie, have expressed their regret to the Supreme Government in hearing that the Sepoys have mutinied, and have offered to serve the Government at the expense of their lives against them.

A SIX PER CENT. LOAN.—A Government loan at six per cent. has been opened, to which subscriptions in sums of even hundreds of rupees, will be received by every officer in charge of a Treasury in the Punjab. The receipts of the local authorities will be given for all sums paid in, and the period of the loan will be for one year only, at the end of which the principal will be repaid.—Lahore Chronicle, July 9.

THE steamer Simoom has arrived at Calcutta, bringing 700 men of the 5th fusiliers, from Mauritius, which was a part of the force destined for China. The commander of the Simoom had received orders at Singapore to hasten to Calcutta, so that we may expect soon to hear of other troops following, and thus securing speedy vengeance on the mutineers in Bengal and the North-West Provinces.

THE DEATH OF COL. DIXON of the Artillery, Superintendent of Ajmere, is announced. He had been for some time an invalid, and having held that office for upwards of twenty years, with great distinction, his loss will be severely felt.—Lahore Chron. July 9.

THE CHOLERA IS RAGING, we hear, all over the hills, from Almorah to Cashmere, along the Ganges, the Jumna, the Tonse, the Eabar, the Sutlej, &c.; whole villages have been deserted in the interior, people preferring to die in the jungles. Even into the valley of Kanawur the cholera has penetrated. At Rampur, the capital of Busahir, a small place, and nearly deserted in summer, when the rajah leaves for his summer residence, Suzahan, 180 persons have died: the same number in the small Kolgurh district. The rana of Kombarseen fell a victim to it, and in his raj it is raging still to a fearful extent. It is a most remarkable fact that villages as high as 6,000 and 7,000 feet above the level of the sea, and about 3,000 and upwards over the Sutlej, are attacked; whilst some villages, though only 4,000 or 5,000 feet above the sea, have been spared entirely. The cholera was unknown in the hills before at least, to such a degree it never prevailed. Few villages only in the lower hills, and along the banks of large rivers, now and then, were attacked after an interval of several years, and only few died; but this year this scourge has been spreading over the whole range of hills, devastating the thinly populated mountain villages to a distressing extent.—Lahore Chronicle, July 8.

MILITARY ORPHAN SOCIETY.—The General Management of the Military Orphan Society, we observe, on May last, submitted to the Government of India for consideration and orders, that assistant-surgeons who have given up promotion shall be hereafter required to subscribe as surgeons, and that any assistant-surgeon who may in future adopt the same course, shall contribute the monthly rate of a surgeon's subscription from the date on which he would otherwise have been promoted. The Supreme Government concurring in opinion with the General Management, that it is not equitable that officers thus voluntarily relinquishing promotion should enjoy equal benefits with the great body of the subscribers, at a lower rate of subscription than their brother officers of the same standing, approved and sanctioned the recommendation.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDER.

THE 1ST LANCERS.

The Right Honourable the Governor in Council has the highest satisfaction in publishing, for the information of the army, the annexed report of the conduct of the 1st light cavalry (lancers), made by Capt. Hardy, on the occasion of a mutiny of the Bengal troops at the station of Nusseerabad, on the 28th May last.

This report has only recently been laid before Government by his excellency the Commander-in-Chief, the original despatch having miscarried upon the road.

By a later report, the Governor in Council has learnt with regret that eleven men of the lancers basely deserted their comrades and their standards, and joined the mutineers; but the Governor in Council will not suffer the disgrace of these unworthy members of the corps to sully the display of loyalty, discipline, and gallantry which the conduct of this fine regiment has eminently exhibited.

To mark the approbation with which he has received this report, the Right Honourable the Governor in Council will direct the immediate promotion to higher grades of rank, of such of the native officers and men as his excellency the Commander-in-Chief may be pleased to name, as having most distinguished themselves on this occasion and thereby earned this special reward; and the Government will take care that liberal compensation is awarded for the loss of property abandoned in the cantonment, and subsequently destroyed, when the lancers, in obedience to orders, marched out to protect the families of their European officers, leaving their own unguarded in cantonments.

To the Officiating Major of Brigade, Rajpootana Field Force.

SIR,—I have the honour to report, for the information of the Brigadier commanding Rajpootana field force, the part taken by the 1st Lancers in the late sad proceedings at Nusseerabad. At about half-past 3 P.M., on the 28th instant, the alarm was given that the 15th Regiment Bengal N. I. was in open mutiny, and had seized the guns. In common with the other officers, I was almost immediately down in my troop lines, and in a few minutes the whole regiment was under arms, mounted, and formed up in open column of troops. The column was put into a gallop and proceeded to the lines of the Artillery, when the guns immediately opened upon us. The order was given at once to charge and take the guns, troops charging in succession. Being "left" in "front," the 6th troop under Captain Spottiswoode led, and that officer fell at the head of his troop, after getting into the battery. A succession of charges followed, the officers of course leading the way. Not succeeding as hoped for in retaking the guns, Colonel Penny ordered the attack to cease; and the regiment was marched back, and formed in rear of our men's lines, to protect them and be ready to act on the mutineers if they came out of their lines into the plain. While there, about five o'clock, the whole of the 15th officers joined us, having been fired at by their men. The 30th regt. would not obey their officers, and it was decided to move out of camp, with the ladies and children, while light remained. Col. Penny being taken ill it devolved on me to execute the order for immediate retreat on Ajmere. Subsequently, the direction was changed for this place (Beawur), where we arrived yesterday morning. Half way, the regiment halted till daylight for rest, and to let stragglers come up; and here Col. Penny was brought in a corpse, having died on the road. A volunteer party of three men and a havildar was sent back to reconnoitre, and bring an account of the further proceedings of the mutineers in cantonments; and a party under a native officer was left on the halting-ground, with orders how to act in case of emergency, and to stay till rejoined by the party reconnoitring.

This rear detachment reached the regiment at eight o'clock yesterday evening. The result of the reconnoissance, which duty was performed in the most creditable manner, has been already laid before the brigadier in person. In addition to Colonel Penny, deceased, apparently from over-exertion, and Capt. Spottiswoode shot, as before stated, under the guns, Cornet Newberry, a promising young officer, was also shot in the act of charging, and Lieut. and Adjutant F. Loch and myself are wounded but doing well; at present I only know for certain of one of our men badly wounded, and three horses shot. Cornet Jenkins had his charger shot under him, and Lieut. Stephens's charger is badly wounded. The loss of the mutineers I have been unable to ascertain at present. I make out to be missing sixty-six men, inclusive of the guards and sick left behind, but I hope the greater part of this number will be speedily accounted for. In concluding this report, I would beg the brigadier's kind officers in recommending the regiment under my command to the generous consideration of Government. Cantonment with two mutinous regiments, the regiment has, as the brigadier knows, been nightly on duty for a fortnight past, and entirely responsible for the safety of the cantonment. They have been constantly tempted and assailed with abuse, with no other result than telling their officers. They turned out in the promptest way to attack the mutineers, and they marched out of camp when ordered, as they stood, leaving their families and everything they had in the world, behind them. They are now without tents, in a hot plain, and without any possibility of being comfortable; but up to this time all has been most cheerfully borne, and all duty correctly performed. I am fearful as to the propriety of mentioning the losses of the European officers, but I cannot refrain from bringing to the notice of my superiors the grateful sense I have of the efficient and kind aid that the officers have afforded me at this trying time. Their active services during the mutiny have already been recognized by the brigadier's approbation.

I have the honour to be, &c.,

Commanding 1st Lancers.

Camp near Beawur, May 30, 1857.

PARDONING MUTINEERS.

Fort William, July 9.—The Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council is pleased to direct, and hereby notifies, that it shall not be competent to any authority whatever, save only to the said Governor-General of India in Council, to exercise the power of pardoning any mutineer, or any rebel who has opposed the troops of the British Government by force, or who, in the course of recent events, has committed any heinous outrage; or any public officer, or State stipendiary, or native chief, who has joined, or in any way whatever assisted, mutineers or rebels; or any person belonging to the family of any such public officer, State stipendiary, or native chief.

COURT-MARTIAL.

LIEUT. SAMUEL RICHARD JOHN OWEN.

Head-Quarters, Calcutta, July 6, 1857.—At a European general court-martial, assembled at Fort William, on June 30, 1857, Lieut. S. R. J. Owen, of the late 19th N.I., was arraigned on the following charge:—

Charge.—For neglect of duty, when in command of the main-guard, Fort William, on or about June 14, 1857, in not having taken proper precautions to insure the safe custody of a native State prisoner placed under his charge; the said prisoner having escaped from the main-guard on the morning of June 15, 1857.

Finding.—Not guilty of the charge, and acquitted.

Remarks by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.—Confirmed.—The State prisoner, it appears, escaped both from the neglect of the sentry over him, and from the irons with which he was fastened being too large; and for this latter neglect Lieut. Owen was, I consider, answerable. In all other respects the evidence proves that Lieut. Owen vigilantly discharged his duty.

(Signed) PAT. GRANT, Lieut.-General,
Commander-in-Chief.

Calcutta, July 4, 1857.

Lieut. Owen is to be released from arrest and directed to return to his duty.

MADRAS.

LOSS OF THE STEAMER "ERIN."—We regret to record the total wreck of this beautiful vessel between Galle and Colombo, Captain Bayley, commander, on the night of Saturday the 6th inst. She was conveying the Bombay mails to China, and soon after midnight ran ashore; she was going at the time under maintop-sail at the rate of twelve miles an hour; the vessel soon broke to pieces. The passengers and crew all saved; amongst the passengers were General Havelock and Son; Captain Hunt, 78th Highlanders; Captain Johnson, Oude cavalry; and Mr. Ormistein. They have just arrived here by the Fire Queen. The specie was all saved, but the cargo of opium of the value of £150,000 has been lost. The mails have been saved. The engines will be saved.—Spectator, June 12.

MURRAIN AMONGST THE CATTLE.—To save possible inconvenience to travellers, it is notified that the cattle throughout the Mysore territory have been visited by a murrain of a most virulent description; and that, even on the most frequented roads, difficulty has been found in providing Tappal bullocks. Travellers are therefore warned, that if they propose to travel in bullock coaches on roads where the cattle are not supplied by the different transit companies, they are likely to meet with considerable detention.

THE DEATH OF LIEUT.-COL. W. H. TOTTENHAM, of H.M.'s 12th lancers, has been announced in the Bangalore Herald. Col. Tottenham served with the 12th lancers in the Kaffir war of 1851-53 (medal), and received the brevet rank of lieutenant-colonel for his services.

MADRAS TROOPS FOR BENGALE.—We understand, says the Madras Spectator, that the despatch of a native infantry regiment from this presidency to Bengal is in contemplation, and the 36th N.I. have been spoken of as destined for that service. A troop of horse artillery is likewise to be sent.

DEATH OF LIEUT. DRUMMOND.—It concerns us to announce the death of Lieutenant Henry Atherton Drummond, of the 15th N.I., which casualty took place through the upsetting of a boat in the Irrawaddy, on the 29th of May, when the unfortunate officer was drowned. His decease promotes Ensign Horace Ramsay, of the season of 1852.

WRECK OF THE "JULIA."—The ship Julia, having on board a portion of the 4th troop Horse Artillery, left Bombay about the middle of July. After crossing the bar, the sea being very rough, the steamer separated from the ship, which at the same moment lost her rudder, and becoming unmanageable, was drifted by the current against the rocks at the entrance of the harbour, with which she came in collision. The whole of the passengers and crew were landed, with the exception of four soldiers, who, we understand, jumped overboard with the view of swimming to the shore. The horses were thrown overboard, and some of them managed to reach the land. The port officer, Lieut. Giles, who was on board the Julia, did good service, by the arrangements made by him after the ship got on the rocks. Major-general Scott and staff, Mr. Freare, and others belonging to the naval establishments, were at Keamaree, making such arrangements as lay in their power for the comfort of those who were landed. The vessel was on shore, with little prospect of getting off till after the monsoon.

WRECK OF THE "BANK OF ENGLAND."—ALIBAUGH, July 6, 1857. The ship Bank of England, W. Maxton commander, which got aground some time ago on this coast, is now lying off the shore at Alibaug, but has not yet gone to pieces. When the vessel first struck, on the 25th June, she was several miles from her present position, but the force of the tide drove her to the spot where she now lies, a little to the north of the island known as Angria's Colaba. The Bank of England is 776 tons register, and 1,000 tons burthen. The greater part of the crew, and Mr. Fitzroy, of H.M.'s 81st regiment, the only passenger on board, left the vessel immediately after she got aground, in the life-boat and a raft, and succeeded in getting safely ashore. Most of those who had come ashore proceeded on to Bombay, where they arrived in a miserable plight.

CAPT. G. G. WELLESLEY, C.B., appointed by the Court of Directors to be superintendent and Commander-in-Chief of the Indian Navy, arrived at Bombay, July 7, and assumed charge of his office.

LIEUT.-GEN. SIR JAMES OUTRAM, K.C.B., left Bombay for Calcutta on Thursday evening by the Peninsula and Oriental Co.'s steamer Madras. A salute of seventeen guns was fired from the saluting battery, announcing his departure.—Bombay Times Summary, July 15.

THE BANK OF BOMBAY has declared a dividend for the half-year ending 30th June of Rs. 35 per share, being at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, on the capital stock of the Bank, which will be paid to proprietors on and after the 8th July.

CAPT. J. A. TODD, of H.M.'s 14th light dragoons, has been nominated brigade-major to the field force forming in Poona for service in the Deccan, under the command of Col. C. Stewart, of the same corps. Capt. Todd served with the 4th light dragoons throughout the campaign in Afghanistan in 1838-9, including the siege and capture of Ghuznee (medal). He also served with the 14th light dragoons throughout the Punjab campaign of 1848-49, including the action of Ramnuggur, passage of the Chenab, and battles of Chillianwallah and Goojerat (medal and clasp).

DEATH OF MAJOR F. W. FOLLETT.—The Poona Observer, in an extra issued on Saturday last, announces the death of Maj. F. W. Follett, commanding the 25th regt., N.I., which occurred on the 20th instant, at Antoorlee, one march south of Boorham-poor. Maj. Follett served against the Koles in the Mahee Kanta in 1830, and at the attack and capture of the village of Kurraul; also with the field force in Scinde and Afghanistan from 1840 to 1842. He was present at the battle of Kotra, and at the second skirmish at Hykulzye; commanded a detachment employed in burning the shikargahs during the battle of Meeanee; present at the battle of Hyderabad, and surrender of Omerkote in 1843 (medal).

This casualty will promote Capt. H. W. Preedy, collector of Kurrachee, to the rank of major; Lieut. A. B. Little, adjutant of the 25th N. I., to that of captain; and Ensign J. F. Forbes to lieutenant. Capt. Preedy will vacate the collectorship of Kurrachee, on promotion; and the adjutancy of the 25th will likewise become vacant, by Lieut. Little attaining the grade of captain.

CAPTAIN J. A. TODD, of H.M.'s 14th Light Dragoons, has been nominated Brigade Major to the field force forming in Poona for service in the Deccan, under the command of Colonel C. Stewart, of the same corps. Captain Todd served with the 4th Light Dragoons throughout the campaign in Afghanistan in 1838-39, including the siege and capture of Ghuznee (medal.) He also served with the Light Dragoons throughout the Punjab campaign of 1848-49, including the action of Ramnuggur, passage of the Chenab, and battles of Chillianwallah and Goojerat (medal and clasps).

MILITARY.—The 4th troop horse artillery, which has arrived from Bushire, via Kurrachee, is to be stationed at Sholapore; and the 6-pounder battery at that place has been ordered to Kolapore.—We hear that a wing of the 2nd European regiment L.I. is expected to arrive in Bombay from Kurrachee in a few days, and will relieve that of H.M.'s 86th regiment at Colaba.—The Bombay moveable column, under command of Colonel Stuart, reached Asseerghur on the 22nd instant, and was to start for Mhow on the 24th. At this latter station all was quiet on the 22nd, the date of our latest advices.—We understand, says the Poona Observer, that Government have it in contemplation immediately to increase the number of light field-batteries (horsed) by four, and that gunners for the European artillery are to be enlisted from the seamen in Bombay.

Promotions of native commissioned and non-commissioned officers will be made accordingly, dating from the 15th July.

The total strength of regiments of infantry is not to exceed 1,000 privates, or of cavalry 500 troopers, notwithstanding this augmentation.

FIELD FORCE FOR AURUNGABAD.

By his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.—Head-quarters, Poona, July 15th, 1857.—1. With the concurrence of Government, a field-force, composed of the troops mentioned in the margin,* will be formed for service in the neighbourhood of Aurungabad, under instructions, which will be communicated to the commanding officer by the Quartermaster-general of the Army. Col. C. Stewart, H.M.'s 14th Light Dragoons, will command the force, and a major of brigade will be nominated hereafter.

THE FIVE PER CENT. LOAN.

Bombay Castle, July 27, 1857.—The following notice by the Government of India, dated the 20th instant, is published for general information:—

SINGAPORE.

LOSS OF THE "TRANSIT" STEAMER.—H.N.M.'s screw steamer Montrado, Captain Andries, arrived here on the 13th July, bringing tidings of the loss of H.M.'s steamer Transit, Captain Chambers. It appears that the Transit, after leaving Corunna, where she got her rigging in order, had a remarkably quick run to the Cape, and from thence she prosecuted her voyage without disaster until the 10th ult. when about 9 A.M. she struck on a coral reef in Banka Strait, and in about an hour and a half afterwards went down. From what we hear, there is no chance of her being raised. Her stern is in eleven fathoms water, and her bows appearing above the surface. The troops (part of the 90th regt.) and crew were safely landed on the island of Banka, but little or nothing was saved. Lieut. Downes, R.N., went to Minto for assistance, and the Dutch Resident there promptly despatched the Montrado to Singapore with the above-named officer. The senior naval officer here lost no time in making the necessary arrangements for bringing the shipwrecked seamen and soldiers to Singapore, and on the morning of the 14th, H.M.S. Actaon, her steam tender Dove, and the American ship Beaver, which was taken up for the service, left this for Banka.—Singapore Free Press.

THE STEAM TRANSPORT "HIMALAYA" grounded on a shoal in passing through Banka Strait, but got off without damage.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

MONDAY, August 31, 1857.

THE LATE COLONEL J. FINNIS.

It is with great satisfaction we announce that the Chairman of the East-India Company has, unsolicited, forwarded to the Lord Mayor, in the name of the Court of Directors, a cadetship for his nephew, John Finnis, son of the late Col. Finnis, who was murdered at Meerut at the commencement of the present outbreak in India.

BENGAL MILITARY ORPHAN SOCIETY.

INTIMATION has just been received from the General Management of this institution in India, that, in consequence of the disturbed state of that country, all female wards will be permitted to remain in England after attaining the age of eighteen, in the enjoyment of pension, until the 31st December, 1858. This liberal and well-timed relaxation of the ordinary rules will relieve the minds of many who have considered themselves doomed to go out to India in a few months, and participate in the terrors and real dangers of the Anglo-Indian population. The liberality of the Management cannot be too highly commended at a time when such extraordinary calls are being made upon the funds of the institution.

THE LATE SIR HENRY LAWRENCE, K.C.B.

HENRY MONTGOMERY LAWRENCE was born in the island of Ceylon, on the 28th of June, 1806. His father was Lieut.-Col. Lawrence, of the Madras army, who greatly distinguished himself in the wars with Tippoo Sahib, and, in acknowledgment of his services, was subsequently appointed governor of Upnor Castle. This gallant officer left a family of ten children, of whom five were daughters. Only one of his sons, the present Sir John Lawrence, chief commissioner in the Punjab, embraced a civil career;—the three others having adopted the noble profession of arms. Henry was the third son; his eldest brother being a colonel in the Madras army, and the second, Col. George St. Patrick Lawrence, the Governor-General's agent at Neemuch. The fourth son is Sir John, and the fifth, Captain Richard Lawrence, of the Bengal army. The subject of this brief and unworthy notice was educated at the diocesan school at Londonderry, and at an early age entered the Hon. E. I. Co.'s Military College at Addiscombe. Here the boy so far gave promise of the future man, that he passed the examination for the artillery, and on the 21st of February, 1823, reported himself at Dum Dum as a second lieutenant in that arm of the service; he was posted to the fourth troop, third brigade H. A. It was not long before he evinced such aptitude for public affairs, as to lead to his employment in the revenue department, under the present Sir George Clerk. In this capacity, he acquired that knowledge of the Punjab, which eventually proved so advantageous to the Government, and so honourable to himself. In the year 1837, he married the youngest daughter of the Rev. George Marshall, of Carndonagh, in whose society he enjoyed all the happiness peculiar to matrimonial life, until her death in 1854. Never had any man a more zealous or a more judicious almoner.

On the advance of the army of retribution under Sir George Pollock, he sought and obtained permission to accompany it, as his brother George was one of Akhbar Khan's prisoners. On that occasion he was able to render good service; for on the 15th of March, 1842, General Pollock stated that "Captain Lawrence, with the zeal which has so frequently induced him to undergo many hardships and annoyances, when he thinks he can be of service, has volunteered to ride over to Attock, a day or two before the arrival of Brigadier White's force, and see that every assistance is given in crossing the troops over the river." Again, in announcing the successful advance of his forces through the Khyber Pass, the general reported:—"I cannot conclude this dispatch without requesting that you will particularly bring to the notice of the Governor-General in Council the very great assistance I have received from Captain Lawrence." For his eminent services in this glorious campaign, he obtained the brevet rank of major. In the latter part of the same year he succeeded B. Hodgson, Esq., C. S., the well-known naturalist, as resident at the court of Katmandoo, but he was not destined long to enjoy a peaceful though honourable retirement in the hills.

Throughout the first Sikh war, Major Lawrence evinced the high soldierly qualities that characterized his entire career. So eminently indeed did he distinguish himself, especially at the battle of Sohraon, that he was made a military companion of the Bath, and appointed a member of the Lahore Regency, with the rank of lieutenant-colonel. On the 3rd of January, 1846, he was gazetted as Governor-General's agent for the North-West Provinces, and, on the 8th of the same month in the following year, resident at Lahore.

Ill health soon afterwards compelled him to proceed to Europe; but he had not long enjoyed the invigorating influences of a milder climate, before news arrived of disaffection in the Punjab. Neither the warnings of his physician, nor the remonstrances of his friends, had now any weight with him. The post of duty and of danger was at Lahore, and thither he determined to return without a moment's unnecessary delay. Notwithstanding the shattered state of his health, he travelled part of the way from Bombay on camel-back, a most fatiguing and inconvenient mode of progression. He arrived, however, only in time for the fall of Mooltan, and the general reduction of the Punjab. On the annexation of that province in 1849, he was appointed President of the Board of Administration, and eventually was made a civil K.C.B. Of the great ability he displayed in this new post, the best proof is the pacification of the Punjab, and its rapid and steady progress in the arts of civilization. His liberal principles, however, clashed with Lord Dalhousie's all-absorbent policy. He was ever desirous to temper justice with mercy; and, while exhibiting a Roman firmness when the occasion required severity, he never forgot that he was an English gentleman and a Christian. Though quite disposed to render the British power paramount in India, he was almost equally anxious to conciliate the native gentry, and to make them friends as well as subjects. But this did not altogether suit Lord Dalhousie's system of "Fiats." Sir John Laird Muir Lawrence was therefore appointed Chief Commissioner of the Punjab, the Board of Administration was remodelled, and Sir Henry nominated Governor-General's agent at Ajmere, but with the same allowances he drew in his former capacity. This happened in the spring of 1853. In the following year his merits pointed him out as the right man for the responsible office of Chief Commissioner of the newly annexed province of Oude. Not his the fault that the province has not remained tranquil. What man could do to maintain peace and prosperity was done, and heartily done, by Sir Henry Lawrence. It was not the will of Heaven that he should command success, but he himself did more—he deserved it. In the discharge of his duty as a military commander he received his mortal wound. He died nobly as a soldier should die, and an entire nation bewails his death with respectful sorrow.

This short sketch, altogether imperfect and inconsequent as it is, would be still more deplorably defective were no mention made of Sir Henry Lawrence's munificent, though unostentatious benevolence. Numerous are the families, very many the individuals, who are indebted to him for active and practical sympathy in the hour of sadness and suffering. The voice of the fatherless, too, will join in his funeral dirge. The asylum at Kussowlie for the orphan children of European soldiers, was founded and mainly supported by his unfailing liberality; and owing to his simple, self-denying habits, no man was ever in a position to render more efficient aid to those who deserved and required assistance.

Sir Henry's literary attainments were, likewise, of no mean calibre. His articles on public affairs at Lahore, previous to the second Sikh campaign, commanded general attention as they appeared in the Calcutta Review. But the most generally known of his writings were certain chapters published in the Delhi Gazette, under the title of "The Adventurer in the Punjab," and afterwards reproduced by Mr. Colburn, as "The Adventures of an Officer in the Service of Runjeet Sing." The good he has done, however, will long survive that which he has only imagined and written.

COMPENSATION TO SUFFERERS.

THE European residents in Bengal and the North-West Provinces will be surprised to learn that the question of rendering them compensation for the loss of their property, during the present insurrection, is considered of too wide a nature to be taken into contemplation. Blindly confiding in the protection of the British Government, men of capital and enterprise have devoted their lives and property to the development of the natural resources of the country. Some have directed their energies to the production of indigo or of sugar. Others have established banks or printing-presses. Others, again, have embarked in the various pursuits of commerce or agriculture which best suited their habits or means. But all have contributed to the welfare and prosperity of the people and country, in the justifiable belief and expectation that their persons and goods were secured from danger and detriment by the power and good faith of the Government. It now appears that they were cruelly mistaken. Unless they were actually in the service of the Government, they were not to be considered of any note or importance. Their bungalows might be burned, their factories destroyed, their warehouses plundered, and themselves and their families reduced to unmerited poverty, without a paternal Government stirring hand or foot to afford them the slightest redress—because that would be opening up too wide a question. The public, we think, will hardly be satisfied with such a reason for withholding justice from their fellow-countrymen in a distant land. Assuredly very few persons will hereafter be tempted to try their fortunes in India, if a distinction is to be drawn between them and the professed servants of the Government. Besides, there is no occasion to burden the ordinary revenue with any part of the amount required to compensate these sufferers. The obvious course is to make an extraordinary assessment, by way of a fine, to cover all the expenses of the revolt. There is no punishment more keenly felt by a native than that which is directed against his purse and pocket. Under the present circumstances, the whole of the North-West Provinces—with the exception of the Punjab—and the greater portion of Bengal proper, are worthy of a severe chastisement. It will not suffice to hang the mutinous sepoys,—the villagers must also be taught to dread the consequences of plunder and assassination. We hope, therefore, that the Court of Directors will not shrink from doing a mere act of justice, and that without any unnecessary delay, from a simple dislike to open up a wide question.

Private charity is fortunately not restrained by the same narrow considerations as public policy. The heart of the British nation throbs with sympathy and compassion for the helpless women and children so suddenly reduced to utter destitution, and that in a climate where luxuries are the actual necessities of life. In the Punjab, the Chief Commissioner has promptly taken measures to relieve the most necessitous cases; and in Calcutta public subscriptions—headed by 1,000*l.* from the Governor-General and 200*l.* from Lady Canning—have been opened for the purpose of affording shelter, raiment, and food to the hundreds of terrified fugitives who are constantly flocking to that capital. It is impossible that a warm response should not be made in this country to the silent appeal for help that comes from that land of horrors. Such, evidently, is the opinion of the chief magistrate of the city of London. In the well-grounded assurance that an initiative alone was needed, his lordship convened a public meeting at the Egyptian Hall, on Tuesday last, in order to inaugurate the movement on behalf of our distressed fellow-countrymen. Among the principal speakers on this interesting occasion were Col. Henderson,—who stated that thirty widows had been already thrown upon the Bengal Military Fund,—Sir Stephen Lushington, Judge Haliburton, Capt. Lynch, Mr. Wm. Dent, Mr. Canon Champneys, the Rev. Mr. Liefchild, Mr. Theobald, of Calcutta, and other gentlemen of character and influence. Very nearly 1,000*l.* were subscribed before the meeting broke up, and it was urgently requested that similar meetings might be commenced in every town and burgh throughout the empire. Judge Haliburton, indeed, promised the active co-operation of our North-American colonies; but instant and immediate aid is imperatively demanded. Never was there need of greater despatch. Many weeks must, in either case, elapse before the unfortunate sufferers can benefit by the subscriptions already collected. Let there be no delay with a view to increase the amount of a donation. Those who cannot give a large sum at once may add hereafter to their present mite. The promptness of a gift at all times enhances its value; but, in this instance, the value of the offering almost entirely depends upon its promptness. This is no party question. There can be no difference as to political or religious creeds. There are English men, women, and children, in unmerited poverty, sickness, and hourly apprehension, far from their homes and native land. Be it ours, then, to bestow largely, freely, and ungrudgingly, and to show our common brotherhood by the earnestness of our sympathy. But no words are necessary to enforce an appeal that speaks to every true heart. It only needs to point out the proper channel, to receive an overflowing stream of genuine benevolence.

Subscriptions sent to the office of this Journal will be duly forwarded to Col. Henderson, Secretary to the Relief Fund Committee. It is gratifying to be able to add that the sum of 2,000*l.* was forwarded by the Marseilles mail to Calcutta, for the immediate relief of the most destitute. Nor may we fail to mention that, in order to complete this considerable amount, the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor advanced 400*l.*, in addition to his own contribution.

THE LATE GOLĀB SINGH, MAHARAJAH OF CASHMEER.

THE intensity of the interest now, for the first time, felt in this country with respect to what is passing in India, is so completely concentrated on the European community, that the death of the beau idéal of an Oriental adventurer has been passed over without notice. And yet, in many respects, Golāb Singh was a remarkable and extraordinary man. From a very humble origin he rose to be the ruler of a considerable principality, and at one time held in his hand the destinies of the Sikh dominions, if not of our own supremacy in Hindostan. It was in the year 1820 that Golāb first entered the arena of public life. In that year he accepted service under Runjeet Singh as a running footman. He was the eldest of three Rajpoot brothers who lived at Jummoo, and claimed to be descended from the great Runjeet Deo. His second brother, Dhiān, joined him shortly after he had been received on the domestic establishment of the Lion of the Punjab, and, owing to his graceful manners, was appointed to the office of chamberlain. Golāb, on his part, obtained a military command, which furnished him with an opportunity of distinguishing himself by seizing the person of the restless Mohammedan chief of Raoree. In acknowledgment of these and other services, the district and town of Jummoo were conferred in fief upon the family, and ere long the three brothers—for Soochēt Singh, also, had repaired to Lahore—were dignified by the title of rajas.

The smooth and crafty Golāb usually resided in the hills, astutely employing the Sikhs to extend his own influence over the neighbouring Rajpoots. Dhiān, meanwhile, remained at court, and by his fawning obsequiousness soon became all-powerful. Soochēt, the youngest—according to Capt. J. D. Cunningham—was content with being simply “a gay courtier and a gallant soldier.” A little later, Dhiān’s son, Heera Singh, was also created a raja, and the fortunes of the family appeared immovable. About the year 1838, Runjeet Singh made a personal visit to Jummoo, and was magnificently entertained by Golāb, who, bowing his head to the ground, presented to his suzerain lordly gifts, estimated at 40,000*l.* sterling. The Maharajah, however, afterwards sarcastically remarked that Jummoo could now show gold where formerly nothing but stones were visible.

At the time of Runjeet’s death, in 1839, nearly the whole of the executive power had passed into the hands of the Jummoo brothers. His death itself was concealed by Dhiān until a favourable opportunity presented itself for declaring Kurruk Singh his successor, with himself as wuzeer. The new prince was indolent and imbecile, and little better than a puppet in the hands of one Cheit Singh. His son, Nao Nihal Singh, had hastened from Peshawur so soon as he heard of his grandfather’s death, with the intention of crushing the Jummoo rajas. But when he discovered that they had already been supplanted by an unworthy favourite, he coalesced with them for the destruction of their common rival. Accordingly, one morning, at early dawn, the young prince, accompanied by Dhiān and Golāb, rushed into the Maharajah’s palace, and slew his minion at his very feet. To Golāb was ascribed the doubtful honour of this bold, relentless act. The murder of Cheit Singh, however, rather increased than diminished the jealousy entertained by Nao Nihal towards the aspiring brothers, who now held Ladak, and all the hill principalities between the Ravee and the Jhelum, in fief, besides other districts in the Punjab. Under pretext, therefore, of exacting the over-due tribute from Kangra, he marched a considerable force, under General Ventura, to the north-east of Jummoo; but more important matters occurred to draw his attention to another quarter. This was in 1840; and in the autumn of the same year, Kurruk Singh was gathered to his fathers. After performing the funeral ceremony with all due rites, Nao Nihal was riding under an arched gateway, in company with Golāb’s eldest son, when some of the masonry fell in, killing the latter on the spot, and so seriously injuring the prince that he died in the course of the same night. Popular belief unanimously accused the Jummoo brothers of having compassed the death of their avowed enemy, by means that endangered and destroyed the life of a son and a nephew.

Nao Nihal was succeeded by Sher Singh, a reputed son of Runjeet. This “goodnatured voluptuary”—as he is styled by Capt. Cunningham—was the mere creature of the Jummoo rajas, whose arrogant pretensions had rendered them insufferably odious to the Sikh chieftains. The consequence was a cabal, which invested Kurruk’s widow, Chund Kour, with the nominal power of regent, until it should be known whether Nao Nihal had left any posthumous offspring. This momentary check directed Dhiān’s attention to the boy Dhuleep, whom Runjeet’s concubine, Ranee Jindan, had borne to him in his old age—though the true paternity of the child was scarcely ambiguous. The astute Golāb was at first rather in favour of the old Maharanee, in the expectation that a female rule would afford an abundant harvest of intrigue, in which he was professedly an adept. However, Dhiân succeeded in gaining over the soldiery, who deposed Kuruk's widow and restored Sher Singh, with Dhiân as wuzeer. Their pay was, therefore, increased one rupee a month, and they learned to estimate their power as king-makers.

In the spring of 1841, Golâb Singh was despatched into Cashmeer to avenge the murder of the late governor. He not only acquitted himself of his appointed duty, but virtually reduced that beautiful valley to subjection to himself. Had it not been for the positive prohibition of the British Government, he would also have been appointed governor of Peshawur. When a Sikh force was demanded to co-operate with General Pollock, the command of it was bestowed on Golâb Singh, whose heart, however, was not in an enterprise from which no advantage could accrue to himself or family.

In the autumn of 1843, Sher Singh was assassinated by Ajeet Singh, one of the Sindhanwala chieftains, at the instigation of Dhiân; while Sher's youthful son, Pertab, was cruelly murdered by Lehna Singh. The red-handed conspirators then joined Dhiân; but shot him dead as he was accompanying them to the citadel to proclaim a new maharajah. Dhiân was fully and speedily avenged by his son Heera, who roused the soldiery, and stormed the citadel. Lehna fell fighting, and Ajeet was killed in leaping down from the wall. Dhuleep was then recognized as Maharajah, with Heera Singh for his minister, and the soldiers' pay was further augmented $2\frac{1}{2}$ rupees per menssem. Although there were many rivalries and local disturbances about this time, yet, on the whole, Heera held the reins with a vigorous grasp, and made himself feared and respected. His uncle Golâb, having attempted to appropriate the entire estates of the deceased Sookhât Singh, was compelled to give up one moiety, and even induced to send his son Rundheer, alias Sohun, Singh, to Lahore. Heera's chief adviser, the Pundit Julla, soon afterwards contrived to offend the Rancee Jindan and her brother Jowahir, who won over the soldiers, and Heera, the Pundit, and Rundheer Singh, were all miserably slaughtered. The first result was an augmentation of pay to the amount of half a rupee a month; and the second was the march of an army against Jummoo. Conscious of his inability to cope with the Khalsa in arms, Golâb had recourse to wiles and corruption. He was, therefore, allowed to retain the family fief on payment of a fine of 350,000*l.* But as the treasure was about to be removed, a violent dispute broke out between his own and the Khalsa soldiery, and the sack of Jummoo was hardly averted by his undertaking to pay a fine of 680,000*l.* Golâb himself accompanied the triumphant army to Lahore, and won their hearts by his ostentatious humility. Jowahir falling into contempt, was soon afterwards put to death by the soldiers, after being subjected to the mockery of a trial. This event happened on the 21st of September, 1845, and left the Rancee in nominal possession of the supreme power. The only real power, however, was exercised by the army and their deputies,—Lal Singh being appointed wuzeer, and Tej Singh commander-in-chief. It is matter of history how these traitors, in the hope of consolidating their own position, sacrificed their gallant soldiers in battle with the English. All this time Golâb remained in the hills patiently abiding his time. Nor had he long to wait, for after the skirmish of Buddiwal he was unanimously hailed leader and minister. But it was too late. The star of the Sikhs had already faded away, and the defeat of Sobraon left them at the mercy of the conqueror. Golâb had begun to negotiate for his own interests immediately after the action at Aleewal had dissipated the vain hopes excited by the partial success at Buddiwal. He now consummated his intrigue, and, with a view to weaken still further the power of the Sikhs, was permitted to possess himself of Cashmeer, on payment to the British Government of the sum of 750,000*l.* On the 15th of March, 1846, he was formally invested with the title of Maharajah, at Umritsur, and standing up, with joined hands, he avowed himself the zur-khureed, or gold-purchased slave of the English nation. The treaty was signed on the following day, when the British Government made over, "for ever, in independent possession, to Maharajah Golâb Singh, and the heirs male of his body," such and such territories. By way of homage, the Maharajah undertook to present, annually, to his suzerain one horse, twelve shawl-goats of the purest breed—six male and six female—and three pairs of Cashmeer shawls. From his antecedents, it could scarcely be expected that he would prove a beneficent ruler, and certainly any such anticipations have been signally disappointed. Golâb's besetting sin was avarice, for the gratification of which he never scrupled at any amount of meanness, injustice, and cruelty. However, he has gone to stand his trial before an infallible tribunal, where his hoarded treasures will avail nothing. Our business is with his successor. The rightful heir to the throne is his son Runbeer, alias Pheena, Singh; but a powerful party are understood to favour his nephew Jowahir Singh, the son of Dhiân. A civil war will probably be the consequence, unless British troops can be spared to enforce the claims of the lawful heir. How this is to be accomplished at present is not very apparent, and here is another thorn in our side at the most inconvenient season.

THE WAHABEES OF DELHI.

"THE British residents of the north-west of India, from Patna to Peshawur, as well as the respectable portion of the Hindoo population of the large towns, have lately been startled by the rumours of a wide-spread conspiracy among the self-styled true Mohammedans, having for its object the re-establishment of the supremacy of their faith. It appears that Jahad has been preached, and not unsuccessfully, as far as mere promises of support and contributions in money are concerned, far and wide throughout the Punjab and along the valley of the Ganges; and that some preparations were being made to enable the devoted Ghazees again to erect the standard of Islam, and carry it victorious through the ranks of the scattered infidels, or to obtain, in the immediate possession of Paradise, the rewards of martyrdom. In consequence of information received by the authorities, extensive seizure of correspondence, and some arrests of persons, have been made at Lahore, Meerut, Delhi, and other places; every ramification of the dangerous mine has been completely discovered, and the Kafirs may now consider themselves safe from the Ghazee swords."

The above lines, gentle reader, were written and published, five years ago, by the late lamented Mr. Cargill, the learned Principal of the Delhi College. It is true he was alluding to certain events that had happened twenty years previous to that time; but he did not fail to point the moral of his tale. The story was briefly this. About the middle of the eighteenth century there lived and died at Delhi a celebrated Moulvee, named Valee-Ullah. His sons, however, were more famous, if not more pious, than himself. They were three in number. The eldest, Abd-ul-Azeez, was a prodigy of learning, and refuted the most subtle arguments of the infidels and heretics. He died at a green old age, in all the odour of sanctity; but his place, as a teacher of Mohammedan puritanism, had for some time been filled by his second brother, Ruffee-ul-deen. The youngest of this fraternity of saints was named Abd-ul-Kadir, who also taught a school at the Akberabadee Musjid, in Duriungunge. While these brothers were thus maintaining the purity of Islam, there arrived at Delhi Syud Ahmed Shah, of Bareilly. At first this remarkable enthusiast became a humble pupil of Abd-ul-Kadir, but eventually sat at the feet of the great Abd-ul-Azeez. Having acquired all that his Delhi masters could impart to him, the syud set out on his travels into distant lands, in order to converse on religious subjects with the wisest and best of men. In the course of these journeyings he entered the military service of the Nawab of Tonk, and distinguished himself as much as a warrior as he had hitherto done as a saint. On the disbandment of Ameer Khan's forces in 1818, the syud returned to Delhi; but the Akberabadee mosque was then in the hands of Moulvee Mohammed Ismael, the nephew of the three great brothers. The Moulvee was the most learned of mankind. He knew by intuition what others scarcely conjectured after long and severe study. There was nothing that had ever been written with which he was not familiarly acquainted. He was also a renowned controversialist, and as an author he published the standard work of the Wahabee creed. He likewise wrote a book on the proper mode of holding the hands in prayer. But with all this knowledge, he was only worldly wise. Of spiritual religion he was altogether ignorant. The scales had not yet fallen from his eyes; his heart was still untouched. Intercourse with the syud made him a new man. The fountain of true religion bubbled up within him, and he became the pole-star of the faithful. His exhortations were now vehement and earnest, instead of being simply ingenious and scholastic. All Delhi was moved by his words, and immense crowds gathered together to hear him. After a time the syud told him that it was the will of God they should make a pilgrimage to Mekka. The Moulvee obeyed the summons as a little child. The two set out together, and proceeded to Calcutta, preaching as they travelled along. It is said that no fewer than a thousand Mussulmans accompanied them to Arabia, to worship at the Kaaba. On their return they went about inculcating the duty of the faithful to rise and exterminate the infidel; but of their many listeners few became real followers. They then proceeded into the country of the Eusofzaees, beyond Peshawur, and extended their influence throughout the hill districts and Cashmeer. The syud's former military experience now served him in good stead. Yar Mohammed fell in battle, fighting against him and his devoted Eusofzaees. Sultan Mohammed was defeated, and Peshawur captured. Even General Allard and the Sikhs were barely able to repulse these fierce fanatics. But the Houries of Paradise grew impatient to receive the syud to their ever chaste embraces. Too good for earth, he was soon to be transplanted to the ever-flowering gardens of the true believers. He contrived to offend the Eusofzaees, and thus, notwithstanding the devoted courage of his handful of Ghazees, he was overpowered by numbers, and his head, after being severed from the body, was carried to Lahore, and exposed to the public gaze. The Moulvee Ismael, likewise, obtained the reward of martyrdom, bequeathing his name as a watchword to all sincere votaries of Islam. The Ghazees, however, were not left without hope. Their revered leader had promised, shortly before his death, that he would speedily return to them. In 1852 they were looking for the fulfilment of his promise. Mysterious voices had been heard announcing his early advent. Mysterious turbans had been dimly seen by ecstatic Ghazees, who thus knew that the hour and the man were at hand. "All this we may look upon," observes Mr. Cargill, "as not only ridiculous, but the acme of insanity; but even insane soldiers are not to be despised as enemies, and the Government ought not to overlook the slightest movements resulting from such pernicious principles so widely diffused." The warning voice was raised in vain. Overweening self-confidence, as usual, became the parent of humiliation. The work of a century has thus been wasted, and the conquest of India has to be achieved a second time.

THE NATIVE PRESS IN THE NORTH-WEST PROVINCES.

In the year 1852 there were thirty-four native newspapers published within the jurisdiction of the Agra Government. Their combined circulation, however, did not exceed 1,900 copies, and their joint annual receipts barely amounted to as many pounds. Of this number, nine belonged to Agra itself. For some years the most distinguished of these was the Zoobdootool-Ukhbar, or Epitome of News; but in 1852 even that had dwindled down to seventy copies. Written in remarkably pure Persian, it appeared every Friday, and was priced at one rupee a month. Its news was chiefly derived from the English papers, and the editorial comments were moderate and sensible. From the Agra College Press was issued the Ukhbarool-Huquayug, or Genuine News, under the superintendence of a supernumerary teacher at the college. It came out twice a week, with a subscription-list of fifty names, its terms being Rs. 14 a year, paid in advance. Besides the current news of the day, it gave copious extracts from English journals and scientific books. Next in order is the Mutbaool-Ukhbar, or News Press, with a circulation of forty-six copies, at a monthly subscription of eighteen pence. It was written in Oordoo, and possessed no other merit than that of supplying the petty news of the place. The Asudool-Ukhbar, or Very Fortunate News, was little better than a weekly compilation of Mohammedan traditions and biography. Its price was one shilling a month, and its subscribers were fifty-eight in number. From the same press was issued a bi-monthly magazine, called the Miar-oos-Shoura, or Touchstone of Poets, which was confined to poetical effusions by ancient and modern rhymers. It had eight or nine subscribers, of whom only two or three thought it necessary to pay.

The Qootub-ool-Ukhbar, or Polestar of News, was a weekly paper, in Oordoo, priced eighteen pence a month, with forty-five subscribers. Its contents were indicated by its title, when given at full length; namely, Qootub-ool-Ukhbar-o-Tuzkirut-ool-Ushaar-o-Ehkam-i-Sirkar-o-Tawareekh-ool-Ukhbar. In plain English, it professed to give the news of the day, poetical pieces, the Government Acts and Orders, and a biographical notice of the Prophet and the Mahomedan martyrs. Another weekly Oordoo paper, price fifteen pence a month, delighted also in a long appellation; this was the Ukhbar-oon-Nuwah-o-Nuzhat-ool-Urwah, or The News of the Vicinity and the Delight of Souls. About forty copies were sold, though it imparted not only news from Gwalior, Burmah, Bokhara, and Calcutta, but also extracted largely from English journals and magazines. The paper with the largest circulation in this district was undoubtedly the Noor-ool-Absar, or Light of the Eyes. This weekly Oordoo journal sold 230 copies, of which 200 were taken by Government for the use of the village schools. It contained articles on natural history, geography, and history, translated from the English, together with extracts from Abercrombie's "Intellectual Powers." A Hindee translation of the above was also published, under the title of Budhi Prakash, with a Government circulation of 200 copies.

At Bareilly only one paper was published, the Oomdut-ool-Ukhbar, or Most Trustworthy News, which appeared weekly, the annual subscription being eight rupees in advance, or one rupee per mensem. It was conducted by a native teacher in the college, and therefore dabbled in scientific subjects; but being written in simple Oordoo, it was never very popular with the natives. Forty-two copies were struck off weekly.

Benares could boast of possessing seven papers, two of which belonged to the notorious Baboo Gobind Rugonath. These were the Benares Ukhbar, in Hindee, and the Benares Gazette, in Oordoo; the weekly circulation of the former being thirty-one, and of the latter twenty-one copies. These papers have always been noted for their virulence against the Christian missionaries, and their insolent remarks on the character and conduct of the European magistrates. In commenting on a judgment passed by Mr. St. George Tucker, the Ukhbar observed:—"But to advance reason to a Tazeh Villaitee (i.e. a green-horn) is as foolish an attempt as giving a looking-glass to a blind man, or gold to a buffalo." The dulness of the sarcasm would prove its best antidote in any European country; but whatever tends to lower the prestige of their foreign rulers in the eyes of the sensitive Hindoos should at once be suppressed. The Baboo was known to be in the pay of the Nepaul government, and was believed "to drive the nefarious trade of selling his silence" in the case of individuals. Of a very different stamp was the Soodhakur, or Stream of Nectar; but, being written in difficult and high-flown Hindee, its circulation was limited to about fifty subscribers, paying one rupee per mensem. In addition to the usual news, literary and scientific articles were frequently inserted. The Bagh-o-Bahar, or The Garden and Spring, was a weekly Oordoo paper, badly executed, for one rupee per mensem, and commanding only twenty-three subscribers. Another weekly Oordoo journal was the Aftab-i-Hind, or The Indian Sun, with a circulation of 110 copies, principally taken up with extracts from the English papers. From the same press was issued the Kashee-barta-Praka-shika, or Indicator of Benares Events, in Bengalee; the circulation of which rose in the course of the year from 92 to 130 copies. There was likewise a third weekly Oordoo paper, the Benares Hurkaru, or Messenger, having a circulation of twenty-five copies, at the rate of one rupee a month.

At Bhurtapore, the Muzhur-ool-Suroor, or Theatre of Pleasure, was started ostensibly under the Maharajah's patronage, but his highness does not appear to have fulfilled his promises,—only fourteen copies being distributed each week.

The large station of Cawnpore supported two presses, but not a single newspaper. On the other hand, Delhi could plume itself on possessing seven. The place of honour must, of course, be assigned to the Sooraj-ool-Ukhbar, or Lamp of News, which was, indeed, no other than the "Court Circular." It was written in the most inflated Persian, and frequently published to the admiring courtiers the last poetical productions of the royal bard. His Majesty's choice of expression was universally extolled—the only deficiency observable was the want of ideas. There was no lack of fine words, had there only been a corresponding amount of common sense. The circulation of the paper was confined to the king's servants, who were mulcted one rupee a month, that they might know every Sunday at what hours the "Great Mogul" ate or drank, slept or walked, during the previous week. If obsequious flattery found oil for the Lamp of News, it was charity that supported the Oordoo Ukhbar,—at least, its proprietor, Syud Hoossein, professed to give to the poor whatever surplus remained, after payment of all expenses. His charity, however, did not prevent him from attacking Moulvee Jafir Alee, of the Delhi College, in the most scurrilous and virulent manner. In other respects the Ukhbar was a well-informed journal, chiefly deriving its statements from the Delhi Gazette. Of subscribers it had only forty-seven. The Muzhur-ool-Huqq, or Theatre of Truth, pirated for the benefit of its five subscribers, the contents of the preceding paper and of the Agra Zoobdut-ool-Ukhbar. Not much better was the Sadiq-ool-Ukhbar, or Certifier of News, which entertained its thirty subscribers with "long articles in praise of the king and Sir Theophilus Metcalfe, in whose agency office the editor was a moonshee." In far other terms must we speak of the Fuwayud-oon-Nazireen, or Benefits for Beholders, edited by Ram Chunder, teacher of European sciences in the Delhi College. It was, in fact, a bi-monthly magazine of European literature, and was distributed to sixty-two subscribers. Of a similar character was the Qiran-ool-Sadyn, or Conjunction of the Two Fortunate Planets, though its circulation did not exceed thirty-one copies, of which fourteen were supplied gratuitously. In addition to these was an Oordoo paper bearing the singular title of Duqueq-ool-Ukhbar, or Abstruse News. Apparently it was too abstruse for its public, as it circulated among only eighteen subscribers.

The Malwa Ukhbar, under the patronage of the Maharajah and the British Resident, circulated ninety-one copies, of which eighty were sent to paying subscribers. One half-sheet was in excellent Hindee, and the other half in indifferent Oordoo. It consisted chiefly of news from the neighbouring states. There was likewise a paper, called the Gwalior Ukhbar, published in Scindiah's dominions, but we have been unable to obtain any further information respecting it.

Lahore possessed two papers; but only one, the Koh-i-Noor, or Mountain of Light, survived at the end of the year. That Oordoo journal appeared twice a week, at the rate of three shillings per mensem, and circulated 205 copies. It enjoyed the patronage of Government, and was justly considered the best written and best conducted native paper in the Upper Provinces. Its rival, the Durya-i-Noor, or Sea of Light, after a brilliant start, was soon compelled to succumb. A like fate awaited the Noor-ala-Noor, or A Light upon Light, at Loodiana, and the Bagh-i-Noor, or Garden of Light, at Umritsur. The Mooltan Riaz-i-Noor nearly encountered a similar destiny, owing to the imprisonment of its editor for a libellous article on the tehseeldar. At Meerut, also, a paper perished, though styling itself the Miftah-ool-Ukhbar, or Key of News. However, there still remained an Oordoo journal, the Jam-i-Jahan-Nooma, or World-displaying Cup, the contents of which, it is to be hoped, were more calculated to cheer than to inebriate its forty-three subscribers.

The nominal circulation of these various native papers must not be regarded, however, as a just estimate of their influence. It is no uncommon sight to witness groups of men seated in circles round a fluent reader, and a single copy would thus suffice an entire regiment. But it is curious to observe how rapidly they must have changed their tone since the period which we have been considering. At the close of 1852, Mr. C. P. C. Smyth, the Officiating Assistant-Secretary, was justified in remarking their abstention from discussing political matters, or canvassing the acts of the local Government. And he particularly alludes to what he calls their absurd caution in abstaining from allusions to such delicate topics. How is it, then, that liberty has so soon degenerated into license, criticism into vituperation, and fair discussion into abuse and denunciation?

CENSUS OF DELHI IN 1845-46.

As at the present moment every species of information regarding the imperial city is anxiously sought after, no apology may be necessary for troubling our readers with details of so dry a nature as the following. On taking the census of 1846, it was ascertained that Delhi contained 25,611 houses, 9,945 shops, mostly one-storied, 261 mosques, 188 temples, 1 church, 678 wells, and 196 schools. The total population consisted of 137,977 souls, of whom 69,738 were males, and 68,239 females. Of these, 90 families, or 327 persons, were Christians; 14,768 families, or 66,120 persons, were Mohammedans; and 19,257 families, or 71,530 persons, were Hindoos. In the year 1846, there were born 1,994 males and 1,910 females; the marriages were 953 in number; and 4,850 deaths occurred. Of the last, 1,320 took place before the age of 12 months, 493 between 12 months and 2 years, 843 between 2 and 12 years, and 2,194 above that age. The census of the 13 villages forming the suburbs of Delhi comes down to 1847. They then contained 22,302 inhabitants; namely, of Hindoos, 709 cultivators, 14,906 non-cultivators; and of Mohammedans, 495 cultivators, and 6,192 non-cultivators. In this return there are two points worthy of notice. The first is, that, notwithstanding the practice of polygamy, there is a very trifling difference between the number of males and that of females. The only inference to be drawn from this fact is, that a large proportion of the males must be unmarried, and that, consequently, dissolute habits are the rule. The other point to be remarked is the equal division of the population into Hindoos and Mohammedans. Throughout Bengal generally the former is to the latter as three to one. This exceptional fact is, of course, attributable to the circumstance that Delhi has always been regarded as the head-quarters and capital of the Mohammedan population of India.

CORRESPONDENCE. THE MUTINY IN INDIA—ITS CAUSES.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—I warmly concur in the remarks contained in your last issue, relative to the causes which have been at work in producing the recent Indian tragedy.

You say rightly, that Indian "statesmen" were consistently opposed to a course which all who possessed any insight into the real condition of British India knew and felt to be a course fraught with boundless danger to the existence of our empire in the East. Grasping annexation—disregard of the faith of treaties—the late legislation on matters of social custom bearing on inheritance—and last, but not least, undue interference with the religion of the natives,—these we may look upon as the original causes of the calamity which has fallen upon us,—which has shaken our supremacy in India to its very foundations, and carried woe and wailing through the length and breadth of England.

The news flies—alas! too fast. Our sons and our daughters are slain, with every accompaniment that can add horror to bereavement: the mourning mother weeps by the desolate hearth; and we cry, in our just indignation, for vengeance on the authors of it all.

But who are the authors? Is it the Hindoo, the dupe and tool of the wily Mahomedan? Or is it even that Mahomedan, who rushes on destruction, believing himself a martyr to the religion he upholds? Would the men who have fought and bled for us in a hundred fights have turned upon us thus, causelessly—abandoning hopes, prospects, privileges, all—to embark in a bloody conflict which their experience of our prowess would tell them could but end in ruin? Is theirs pure unredeemed villany, having for its origin the mere brute thirst of blood? Surely, No! We must search deep to find a cause. It is the man who strikes the tinder and lights the match who is responsible for the conflagration. Seek deeper than the fanatic and the slave.

Have we been just? have we been true? have we kept faith? or have we been grasping, rapacious—careless of adherence to sacred treaties and solemn promises? Have we said one thing and acted another? Have men in high places stood forth in missionary guise—identifying Government with enterprises which Government has solemnly disowned?

If so, I am much mistaken if the most prejudiced among us does not see too plainly a pile of smouldering embers sufficient to set alight all India.

And statesmen protested; and statesmen forewarned. They have gone to their rest—taken from the evil to come. They saw the danger in the dim distance, though they knew they would not live to see it realized. But they felt it would come, and they raised their voices to arrest it. Listen to what one of that honoured band has said,—a true statesman? His warning voice can no more sound in our ears, but his written protests remain—a standing memorial of the wisdom which once adorned our councils and influenced our decrees. Listen to what he said. Do not his words sound prophetic?

"We have, in the most formal manner, and by the most authentic acts, guaranteed to the natives of India under our rule the free exercise of their religion. We have done this, not merely in the spirit of toleration, but as the Protecting Power, which not only engages to abstain from all interference with the religious rites and ceremonies of its subjects, but which undertakes to defend them against all such interference on the part of others. This is the compact existing between the British Government and its Hindoo and Mahomedan subjects, upon which their allegiance and our dominion depend; and any infringement of it cannot fail to be attended with the most disastrous consequences. Our rule and supremacy have been hitherto maintained by our native soldiery; and any spirit of disaffection which might pervade that body, originating in a religious feeling, would shake the very foundation of our empire. The country cannot be held in subjection by a European force; and if the Hindoos and Mahomedans, united by one prevailing sentiment, should make common cause for the defence of their religion, they would not stop at mere defensive measures. Once aroused, they would proceed to extremity; and not only would the lives and fortunes of every European in the country be placed in the utmost peril, but the very existence of our Government would be endangered.*

Again. . . . "although they [the people] may submit in silence, a secret discontent may be fostered; and if any impression unfavourable to the Government should afterwards arise, from whatever source, or if any disastrous event should unhappily occur, the religious spark which lay concealed will then show itself, and may produce a flame which it will be difficult, if not impossible, to extinguish."†

Then, touching annexation:—

"Those who are eager for the extension of our territory, flatter themselves that we are extending our power as a necessary consequence; but the annexation of a principality to our gigantic empire may, in my opinion, become the source of weakness, by impairing our moral influence over our native subjects. I remonstrated against the annexation (I am disposed to call it confiscation) of Colaba, the ancient seat of the Angria family; and far from having seen reason to recall or to modify the opinion recorded by me on that proceeding, I have availed myself of every suitable occasion to enforce my conviction that a more mischievous policy could not be pursued, than that which would engross the whole territory of India, and annihilate the small remnant of the native aristocracy.

. . . "We are told, indeed, that our Government has become the 'paramount power' in India, and, as such, may deal with its vassals and dependents according to the dictates of an enlightened policy. True, we wield the power of the sword, and our political supremacy is everywhere acknowledged; but we do not possess, and never can possess, the power to violate treaties—the power to do wrong and to commit injustice—the power to dominate over those who cannot resist us, while we hesitate to enforce it in our relations with those States who enjoy, with a larger territory, a greater degree of independence. To apply to the weak a rule which it would be unsafe to extend to the strong, would ill become the British character; and I must contend that, in giving effect to the obligations of a treaty, we consult alike the dictates of justice and of sound policy.

"Annexation of territory is justified upon political and financial considerations; for it is contended that the claims and pretensions of the individual must give place to considerations for the good of the many. If this dictum were unreservedly admitted, it would go to the subversion of all property. It might be useful to the State to confiscate the wide domain of the Duke of Sutherland, or the noble patrimony of the house of Russell; but would such a proposition be seriously entertained for a moment in this country?

. . . "It is further contended that the native princes are not in general well qualified for the successful administration of their territories, and that a great benefit will accrue to the people from the introduction of our principles, and the substitution of our superior agency. That our principles and views are excellent, must be freely and fully admitted; and that our agency, in particular instances, has been eminently successful, may also be acknowledged with pride; but that our mode of administration is generally satisfactory to our native subjects, or would be generally preferred to their own, may well be doubted. Our manifold forms and operose proceedings they do not always understand; our judicial and revenue processes are apt to embarrass them; the delays in administering justice are often very injurious; and parties are, I fear, just as liable to be maltreated by our native officials, as by the functionaries employed by their own rulers. I do not go so far as to affirm that our native subjects would give a preference to their own princes; but I certainly think that the most unscrupulous of their rulers would scarcely have acted as we have done of late years, in our eagerness to engross territorial possessions, and in the wholesale and indiscriminate resumption of rent-free tenures, under circumstances calculated to produce alienation and disaffection. May the time never arrive when this feeling shall find vent in some fatal explosion!" . . .

"I never can satisfy myself that true policy can comport with injustice and oppression. The native princes and chiefs of India will see, in the fate of Colaba, their own future destiny; their fidelity and attachment cannot be relied upon while they have such cause for distrust and alarm; and although they may be overawed and kept down by an irresistible military power, the occasion may arise when their hostility might become dangerous. The feelings of our Indian subjects are not to be trifled with; and it is not wise, nor safe, to depart from that conciliatory conduct, and to efface from their minds those impressions of our justice, wisdom, and good faith, which have hitherto constituted our bond of union with the people, and the true basis of our power in India."

On the question of the liberty of the press, he thus writes:—

"If it be asked what are the dangers which I apprehend, I reply that the people of India are advancing in opulence, and knowledge, and civilization—that the number of Europeans is increasing—that the mixed race, or Creoles, are already very numerous, and are rapidly increasing—and that our Government has lately (most unwisely, as I think), bestowed upon this varied population the 'liberty of the press'; a boon which could not fail to excite new feelings among them. This powerful instrument has already been put in operation; and it will be made use of to connect together the different parts of the population, whenever they are led to propose to themselves one common object."

Finally—

"I have more than once placed on record the expression of my deep conviction that our empire in India is only to be maintained, for any beneficial purpose, by a strict adherence to the obligations of justice—by a faithful adherence to our treaties and other engagements—by respecting the rights of the native princes and chiefs—and by refraining cautiously and habitually from every act calculated to outrage or to offend the religious feelings and prejudices of the people, from among whom our native army is raised and recruited. . . .

"I consider the grandeur and power of this empire to depend in so great a degree upon the possession of India, that I cannot too strongly urge the necessity of guarding against the most remote contingencies which can affect the security of our Eastern dominion. The separation of India would leave this country dismembered; the finest branch would be violently severed, and the trunk itself would not escape without injury from the shock."

The dangers predicted in the above extracts have been realized: our Indian empire has been in jeopardy. God grant that the crisis be past! But let not the warning be lost. "It is not wise, it is not safe, to trifle with the feelings of our native subjects." We see it; we know it now. Let not the warning be given in vain. If India is to remain ours, it must be ours in virtue, not only of our prowess, but of our justice, our tolerance, and our good faith. No more contempt of treaties, crushing the weak because they cannot resist us; no more unjust annexations; no more ill-usage of faithful allies; no more official proselytizing;—truth, integrity, and a straightforward policy, must govern our dealings with India's people! Shall we be untrue to the conquered race, while we pride ourselves, among all other nations of the globe, upon our national rectitude? Oh! shame upon us, if such be the course a Christian people take!

And now—at a moment when our blood is up, and our passions rise high, and our just indignation boileth—one word on that terrible cry "extermination." If we believe that we are not exempt from blame, we may listen with less impatience when we are told that justice consists not in confounding the innocent with the guilty. "Hard to discriminate," you will say. Aye! but we must try. "Extermination" is not the word which a true English heart will ever indorse.

* Vide "Memorials of Indian Government," by Henry St. George Tucker, Esq., pp. 354-5. Written in 1839. Bentley.

† Ibid., pp. 358-9.

It is heart-rending to think of many a gallant veteran, whose blood has freely flowed beneath the British banner—maddened by an alarm for the religion which he holds dearer than life itself—hurried in a moment of fanaticism from his allegiance—and doomed to meet destruction at the hands of those for whom he has many a time faced death!

The people of India are not all traitors and assassins. Righteous feeling dwells amongst them too. There are fiends in human shape, alas! who have run riot in the land, and on whose guilty heads God's judgments and man's will alike descend. Let swift vengeance overtake them; too swift it cannot be! But we sin when we forget, in our blind fury, that to the forbearance of the native we are indebted for the preservation of many a precious life, which—but for him—would too surely have fallen the sacrifice.

Those men who looked on while the youthful officer bent over his dying commander, and, regardless of personal danger, ministered to his wants; those men, mutinous and armed—who raised not a hand against that gallant youth, but let him depart in peace—those men had some spark of generous feeling left!

The simple villagers, who have in so many instances given shelter to the fugitives, and, like good Samaritans, bound up their wounds, shall they suffer for the murderer's sins?

And the noble-hearted zemindar—whom our unrighteous annexation of Oude had brought to the verge of ruin, but who shielded our wandering people in their hour of need—what shall we say of him?

Let all such men be recompensed with lavish hand; let their names be held in honour; let them not be swept away in the hot tide of deep-welling wrath, which righteously rolls over the murderers of our countrymen.

Your faithful Servant,

E. C.

THE BENGAL ARMY.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—The anxious inquiry forces itself on all, "What can be done to replace the Bengal army, the growth of a century, and to give security for the maintenance of the British possessions, and the safety of the British subjects in the East hereafter?"

As this is a question that has not yet been answered by the authorities, even if it be already solved by them, I am induced to crave a little space in your columns, for the purpose of making a suggestion that I consider worthy of the consideration of those who may have to decide on the measures to be adopted.

The idea of reviving the Bengal army in a form, or on a footing resembling the constitution of the late force, does not, I should suppose, enter the mind of any reasonable man. That army must, of course, be reconstructed of very different materials, and the question to be decided now is, how the services of such a force may be best made available, not only as a defence against foreign aggression, but as a guard alike against popular insurrection and military mutiny.

In this view, I would submit that it were well if we copied the policy of Austria in circumstances somewhat analogous—a state whose skill in ruling disaffected subjects, and in availing herself of the services of mutinous troops, is worthy of a better cause.

Her plan may be said in a few words to be, to remove her soldiers far away from their homes, and to place them over those with whom they have no interests in common. Her garrisons in her outlying and conquered provinces are almost entirely composed of foreign troops. For example, in Bohemia you find nearly exclusively Italian and Hungarian soldiers; in Italy and Hungary, Bohemian and Austrian regiments maintain order, while the Polish provinces are kept in subjection by Croats, Italians, and Germans.

By this allotment, not only are many restless spirits removed from the discontented provinces of Hungary, Italy, Bohemia, and Poland, whose fidelity on their own soil would be a most problematical, but all danger of fraternization—effectually guarded against, between the people of these provinces and the soldiery—two classes, among whom there is neither sympathy of feeling, language, nor religion.

Such a system will not only be viewed by some as indicating the shifts to which tyranny is put in maintaining misgovernment, and will be considered as unworthy of an enlightened executive, professing to govern by "opinion" more than by the sword.

The day, however, for parading this well-known cant (quoad India) is passed, and I fear much that the sword, and the sword only, will for many a day have to vindicate our authority in the East, as well as to avenge our murdered countrymen.

Fas est et ab hoste doceri, and though Austria is not, politically speaking, our enemy, her institutions and her system of government are sufficiently in antagonism to ours, to justify the use of the quotation. Following the example of her system, one well tested by experience, and to the well-working of which the submission, if not the contentment, of the multifarious nations under her sway is mainly to be traced, let us guard our Indian possessions on a principle somewhat analogous. Let the Madras and Bombay armies be distributed over Bengal and the upper provinces to replace the force which is cast to the winds; and let the Bengal army, when remodelled, garrison the sister presidencies. Let the Sikhs, Scindians, Punjabees, Rajpoots, Ghoorkas, and Mahrattas keep each other in check, and guard each other's territories—a dissimilarity of caste, religion, and habits between the populace and the soldiery, being, as in Austria, accepted as at once the best security against civil sedition and the surest guarantee for military fidelity.

The want of such a system is but too forcibly shown in the recent rising in Oude, where everything in that newly-acquired and disaffected territory was left in the hands and at the mercy of native and local corps, whose sympathies were all with the fallen dynasty, and where, to the disgrace of the authorities in India, but one solitary European regiment was retained at Lucknow as a counterpoise.

The above suggestion presupposes that in the reconstruction of the Bengal army, such castes only shall be recruited as, like those composing the armies of Madras and Bombay, would be willing to go where they are ordered. The armies of the latter presidencies appear so far to be faithful. Disaffection on their part would be best met by an amalgamation of the three native armies—a measure that would at once materially facilitate the arrangement which I propose. Let us hope it may prove unnecessary. At all events, I should hope that the authorities have had enough of the high-caste Indian gentleman, who formed so important an element in the late Bengal army, and whose religious scruples forbade his enlisting for general service; religious scruples, to which, it would appear, we are indebted for the merciless ferocity with which our hearths and homes have been devastated by the wholesale massacre of our nearest and dearest relations.—I remain, sir, your obedient servant,

THE SUFFERERS FROM THE INDIAN MUTINY.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—Allow me, through the medium of your columns, to inquire in what way and to what extent compensation is to be awarded to the sufferers from the terrible mutiny in the Bengal army? This cannot be otherwise than a very anxious thought to many a father and mother whose child (if not butchered by the inhuman savages) is probably at this moment (through plunder) in want of some of the necessities of life. Having two brothers, a sister, a brother-in-law, and other relations who have been at the mercy of the mutineers, I may naturally be excused for giving vent to my feelings. God be praised! they have hitherto been preserved; but my brother, a lieutenant of the 22nd regt. N.I., had to fly for his life for nine days, was twice taken prisoner, and at last escaped with only a pair of trowsers and a shirt, having been without food for nearly seven days. He left England in October last, having been at home for two years on sick leave; of course, he returned to India with a fresh outfit, every article of which he has lost, and, as every one is aware, the pay of a lieutenant is not so remunerative that he can afford to sustain such a loss. As there are so many others in a similar position, I feel I cannot but echo the sentiments of those at home and abroad, when I say that the compensation to the British soldier should be sure and speedy, for we cannot tell how great his sufferings may be;—great, indeed, they must be in any event, but more particularly so if he has a wife and family to look to him for support.

Whatever course may be adopted in future, it is manifestly clear that our rulers in India can never again place confidence in native armies, unless they desire themselves to lose the confidence of the British nation. Such being the case, we cannot in reason expect that our English gentry will in future allow their sons to take commissions in Sepoy regiments. The East-India Company will therefore do well to take care of the British officers they now have, and ward them adequate compensation for the sufferings they have undeservedly had to endure, and will doubtless for a long time continue to experience. In so doing, they cannot but feel that they will take care, not of the soldier only, but in many instances they will have the additional satisfaction of knowing that they have poured consolation into the hearts of the fatherless and the widow, and thus have remembered them in their affliction.

I am, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

THOMAS LLOYD FOWLE.

THE EUPHRATES VALLEY RAILWAY.

Mr. Estcourt strongly urged the Government to promise their support to this scheme. The Turkish Government had undertaken, at their own expense, to construct a harbour at the mouth of the Orontes. From that point the line would pass through a level country to Antioch, and this section could be completed in twelve months. Between Antioch and the valley of Mesopotamia it would surmount, or traverse, one of the lowest spurs of Lebanon at a height of 1,100 feet above the level of the sea. With this single exception, there were no engineering difficulties to be expected. It was not proposed, for the present, to carry the line further than Joppa Castle, on the Euphrates, about 150 miles from the Mediterranean. Iron steamers would convey the passengers and goods down the river to Korna, on the Persian Gulf, a sea navigable at all seasons of the year. A steam flotilla would quickly connect that station with Kurrachee, and from that port to the deep waters of the Indus a railway was actually being laid down. A direct communication would thus be opened with Mooltan, and continued to Lahore, Agra, and Calcutta. The entire outlay on the line from the Mediterranean to the Euphrates would not exceed 1,400,000*l.*, on which the Turkish Government had promised to guarantee an interest of six per cent. Commercial men, however, required a more tangible security in the event of a rupture of friendly relations with the Porte. For this reason the Company asked Government to make good any deficiency in the amount of interest on money advanced, that might arise during the three years that would elapse before the railway could be completed—an amount that, even for five years, would not exceed 100,000*l.* In conclusion, the hon. member dwelt at some length on the political and commercial advantages of the proposed line.

Mr. Gladstone looked upon undertakings of this kind as purely commercial enterprises, and considered that the best judges of their merits were the individuals who were invited to invest their capital in them. He protested against their being converted into political questions, which might hereafter involve the Government in serious disputes and difficulties with foreign powers.

Lord Palmerston admitted the importance of a direct and rapid communication with India; but was inclined to give the preference to a railway to Constantinople, and thence from the other side of the Bosphorus to the Persian Gulf. But in any case, the proper position of Government was that of deliberate spectators. With reference to the contemplated line, he could not give the slightest encouragement in any tangible form; but if a telegraphic line of communication were laid down by the Euphrates Valley, or by the Red Sea, to India, her Majesty's Government would pay for the use thereof.

THE KING OF OUDE.

Sir F. Kelly having inquired, on behalf of the Queen-Mother, if the King of Oude would be permitted to correspond with his family in this country, Mr. V. Smith replied in the negative, but added that he had forwarded to the Queen of Oude a communication which had been brought to him from the King of Oude to his relatives in this country. The king had been arrested on a charge of complicity in the revolt of the Bengal army, under Regulation 3 of the province of Bengal, which set forth:—

"Whereas reasons of state, embracing the due maintenance of the alliances formed by the British Government with foreign powers, the preservation of tranquillity in the territories of native princes entitled to its protection, and the security of the British dominions from foreign hostility and from internal commotion, occasionally render it necessary to place under personal restraint individuals against whom there may not be sufficient ground to institute any judicial proceeding, or when such proceeding may not be adapted to the nature of the case, or may, for other reasons, be inadvisable or improper."

The right hon. gentleman then read the letter addressed by the Governor-General to the king upon the occasion of his arrest:—

Fort William, June 15.

"Sir,—It is with pain that I find myself compelled to require that your Majesty's person should for a season be removed to within the precincts of Fort William. The name of your Majesty and the authority of your Court are used by persons who seek to excite resistance to the British Government, and it is necessary that this should cease. Your Majesty knows that from the day when it pleased you to fix your residence near Calcutta to the present time, yourself and those about your Majesty have been entirely free and uncontrolled. Your Majesty may be assured, then, that it is not the desire of the Governor-General in Council to interfere needlessly with your movements and actions. Your Majesty may be equally certain that the respect due to your Majesty's high position will never be forgotten by the Government or its officers, and that every possible provision will be made for your Majesty's convenience and comfort."

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Wednesday, August 19.

THE INDIAN ARMY.

Lord Shaftesbury moved for the production of a circular order of Sir Henry Somerset, then General Commander-in-Chief at Bombay, dated January 14, 1857, in which he prescribes certain rules for enlistment, and declares it to be, in his opinion, indispensable that no low caste men should be admitted into the ranks of the native army. He (Lord Shaftesbury) was of opinion that nothing tended so much to foster a spirit of mutiny in the Bengal army as the homage paid to the Brahmin caste. It was inconsistent with our political position, and with our position as a Christian country. He wished to know from some member of her Majesty's Government whether the principle of selection was to be recognized in future.

Lord Granville had no objection to produce the paper in question. As regarded the mode in which the Bengal army was to be levied in future, it would be presumptuous on his part to give, at this juncture, any distinct pledge as to the manner in which the Indian armies should be organized.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THE PERSIAN EXPEDITION.

Col. Sykes asked the President of the Board of Control whether it was the intention of Government to confer upon the officers of the Persian expedition testimonials of approval of successful military operations in brevets, honours, and a medal, prefacing his question by some remarks upon the success of the expedition and the ability displayed by the commanding officer.

Mr. V. Smith bore testimony to the gallantry, courage, and skill exhibited in the expedition, but observed that the question of honours must be decided by the Indian Government.

THE BENGAL MUTINY.

On the order of the day for the third reading of the Militia Bill, a desultory discussion took place with respect to the Indian crisis. According to Sir F. Smith, the crying want of India was 1,000 sappers and miners. He believed that General Barnard had not a single soldier able to do the work of a sapper and miner. (By the last accounts there were 12 officers and 221 men of that corps with the army). Sir De Lacy Evans had great confidence in General Jacob: thought that small war-steamers ought to be sent out to operate on the rivers, and that men-of-war ought to be employed as transports: the Victoria Cross ought to be conferred by Sir C. Campbell on the Indian officers who had so greatly distinguished themselves: Holkar, Scindiah, and other native princes ought to be rewarded by an increase of territory, and the artillery reinforcements ought to be augmented. Sir W. F. Williams hoped that more fortified places would be constructed in India, and that the Delhi arsenal would never again be left unprotected. Sir H. Verney wished to see well-armed steamers sent up the small as well as the large rivers. Admiral Walcott suggested that all the gunboats at Hong Kong should be ordered round to India. Lord Palmerston reminded the House, that if both the navy and army were despatched to the East, the British islands would be left unprotected. A small force might, possibly be sent through Egypt, if there were steamers ready to receive the troops at Suez. (The mortality in Egypt and on the Red Sea would be frightful at this season of the year.) The Indian rivers are too shallow and difficult for any war vessels that could be despatched from this country. General Jacob is detained at Bushire in consequence of the non-evacuation of Herat. Nothing would be left undone by Government to insure ultimate and complete success. Mr. Disraeli regretted that 5,000 men were not sent out through Egypt; considered Cawnpore more important than Delhi, and hoped it might be able to hold out; trusted that peremptory orders had been given to Sir George Grey to despatch a certain number of regiments to India; should be glad to hear that the 45th were going from the Cape to besiege Delhi, or relieve Cawnpore; the Government were to blame for leaving Delhi without European troops. Mr. V. Smith observed, that every Government for the last twenty years was equally responsible for the last oversight, if it were one: but Sir C. Napier had recommended that the arsenal should be confided to twelve native regiments. The station, besides, was too unhealthy for European troops. The Government had positively ordered two regiments from the Cape. The loyalty of the native princes of India had not been displayed in such a manner as to call for any very ardent demonstrations of gratitude. The House might rely on the determination of the Government to suppress the mutiny with a strong hand.

TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION WITH INDIA.

In reply to Mr. Briscoe, Lord Palmerston said the proposed telegraphic communication with India by way of the Euphrates had been undertaken by a private company, with certain contingent arrangements with Her Majesty's Government; but the Turkish Government had not given its permission for carrying out the scheme. With respect to the line by Suez down the Red Sea and to Kurrachee, a private company was contemplating such a plan, and as far as the Government could aid them, without applying to Parliament, it would be glad to do so.

THE SUFFERERS IN INDIA.

In answer to an inquiry by Sir De Lacy Evans, Mr. Mangles said the Government of India had been instructed to render the most ample assistance, not only to the families of their civil and military servants, but to all destitute persons.

THE LATE SIR HUGH WHEELER, K.C.B.

(From the Times.)

Major-General Sir Hugh Massy Wheeler, K.C.B., whose melancholy death at Cawnpore has followed so closely upon the losses we have sustained in the persons of Sir H. M. Lawrence and General Barnard, was one of the most distinguished officers in the Indian service, as he proved in the Sikh war. He was the son of the late Capt. Hugh Wheeler, of the Indian army, and grandson of Mr. Frank Wheeler, of Ballywire, county of Limerick, by Margaret, eldest daughter of the Right Hon. Hugh, first Lord Massy, in the Irish peerage. He was himself born at Ballywire, in 1789; so that at the time of his death he had reached his 68th year. He received his early education at Richmond, Surrey, and at the Grammar School, Bath. He entered the military service of the East-India Company in 1803, when he received his first commission in the Bengal infantry. In the next year he marched with his regiment, under Lord Lake, against Delhi. Having risen steadily through the intermediate ranks, he became colonel of the 48th Bengal N.I. in 1846, and in the same year was appointed first-class brigadier, in command of field forces; in 1854 he attained the rank of major-general. In December, 1845, previous to the hard-fought battles of Moodkee and Ferozeshah, the gallant General (then Brigadier) Wheeler, with a force of 4,500 men and 21 guns, covered the village of Bussean, where the large depôt of stores had been collected for the army under Sir Henry Hardinge, Lord Gough, and Sir Harry Smith, and thus rendered important services which contributed in their measure to the gaining of those victories. He received the order of the Dorian Empire in 1848, and was honoured a few years since for his distinguished merits by being appointed one of the aides-de-camp to her Majesty. Having been repeatedly thanked by the Governor-General and Commander-in-Chief for his valuable services in the Sikh campaigns and in the conquest of the Punjab, he was created a Knight Commander of the Bath in 1850, and since that time has held command of the district of Cawnpore.

The Indian despatches, during the war in the Punjab, show that these honours were by no means cheaply earned by General Wheeler. In October, 1848, he effected the reduction of the strong fortress of Rungur Nuggul with the loss of only a single man, and by his conduct on this occasion earned the warmest approval of Lord Gough, then Commander-in-Chief, who formally congratulated the brigadier on the result, which, in his opinion, was "entirely to be ascribed to the soldier-like and judicious arrangements of that gallant officer." In the following month of November, in a despatch addressed to the Governor-General, Lord Gough states that he has "directed the Adjutant-General to convey to Brigadier-General Wheeler his hearty congratulations and thanks for the important services which he and the brave troops under his command have rendered in the reduction of the fortress of Kullalwalha;" again with the loss of only one man killed and five wounded. Again, in a despatch from the Adjutant-General to the Governor-General, dated "Camp before Chilianwallah, January 30, 1849," it is stated that Brigadier Wheeler, in command of the Punjab Division and of the Jullundur field force, supported by Major Butler and Lieutenant Hodson, assaulted and captured the heights of Dulla in the course of his operations against the rebel Ram Singh, in spite of the difficulties presented by rivers almost unfordable, and mountains deemed impregnable. And, finally, in the general order issued by him on the receipt of the despatch of Sir W. Gilbert, K.C.B., announcing the termination of hostilities in the Punjab, the Governor-General thus expresses himself:—"Brigadier-General Wheeler, C.B., has executed the several duties which have been committed to him with great skill and success, and the Governor-General has been happy in being able to convey to him his thanks thus publicly."

It only remains to be added that, unlike Sir Henry Lawrence, Sir James Outram, and most other distinguished Indian officers, the services and reputation of General Wheeler were almost wholly of a military character, and that he does not appear to have been employed in political or diplomatic situations. But even if this be so, the military reputation which he has left behind him is of the highest order.

RAILWAYS IN INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

SIR,—The disturbed state of affairs in India has very naturally produced great depression in the value of Indian railway shares, as shown in the prices given on the Stock Exchange. It would be well, however, if parties holding those shares would exercise a little caution before they hastily sacrifice their property under the influence of the present panic. That it is a panic is clearly shown by the fact that shares in the Madras Railway, a thousand miles and more away from the scene of mutiny, have been more affected than those of the East Indian line, which passes through the very heart of the disturbed districts; a result clearly the effect of jobbery, not based on reason, the guarantee being the same in both cases.

The directors of the Madras Railway, in their last report, estimated that the receipts for the quarter would be 80,000 rupees, whereas they have amounted to 87,000 rupees, and the weekly receipts, as given in the Madras papers received by last mail, would give for this quarter a total of 120,000 rupees.

As Indian shares are held to a large extent by ladies and others easily frightened, it is very desirable that they should not become the victims of speculators anxious for personal gain to depreciate temporarily the value of Indian railway property.

Your obedient servant,

INDIA REVENUES AND FINANCES.

However much in mere point of form and for the sake of convenience in keeping accounts, and determining from what sources certain liabilities are to be met, it is necessary to maintain a clear distinction between Imperial and Indian finances, yet it is impossible not to admit that when the affairs of our Eastern possessions assume the gravity and urgency which they do at this time we must be prepared to sink all minor and divisional questions, and to feel that all our resources must be disposable, so far as may be required, in order to save so important a portion of the empire. But while we are prepared to make any sacrifices which so great an object deserves, it is necessary that we should avoid all vague panic and apprehension, which, especially in a financial point of view, could only aggravate the difficulty, and look to our relations with India, its resources and liabilities, in a calm and temperate manner. In many quarters there has for some time past been a disposition to disparage the financial position of India, and to exaggerate the temporary difficulties to which it has been exposed; and the influences produced upon the public mind by the vague impressions thus circulated have recently produced a powerful effect upon our market for public securities in connection with the calamity which has suddenly fallen upon India. It is, nevertheless, a fact which may teach us an important lesson at the present crisis, that, throughout all the difficulties to which from time to time the Government of India has been exposed in gaining and maintaining the vast territories under its rule, it has never been a burden directly upon the finances of England. At the same time, and especially since the passing of the Act of 1834, it may fairly be admitted that the view taken by Sir Robert Peel in his budget speech of 1842, in considering the finances of India as closely associated with those of England, and, in the case of great urgency, as even identical, cannot be entirely ignored. The real question, however, which in the interests both of England and India we have now carefully to consider, and upon which we are called upon to arrive at a fair and dispassionate judgment, is the means which India possesses, independent of this country, to support the great efforts which undoubtedly must be made in order to restore tranquillity. This question, in order to be satisfactorily determined, must be considered in all its bearings, and in relation to the entire sources of the income of India and its liabilities.

In the first place, then, we would consider, from the most recent and authentic documents, what are the ordinary sources of Indian revenue. According to the accounts made up for the year 1855-56, the gross revenue collected in India, exclusive of repayments and drawbacks, amounted to 28,812,097*l.*, and was derived from the following sources :—

Land revenue	£17,817,299
Customs	1,934,906
Salt	2,485,389
Opium	4,871,227
Post-office	219,045
Stamps	504,329
Other receipts	979,902

Total revenue .. £28,812,097

Upon this sum of 28,812,097*l.* the cost of collection, including, however, allowances and assignments payable chiefly out of the land revenues, in accordance with treaties and other engagements, amounting to 1,244,498*l.*, was no less than 6,664,750*l.*, under the following heads :—

COST OF COLLECTION.

Land revenue	£4,515,151
Customs	116,609
Salt	574,282
Cost and charges—opium	1,156,874
Post-office	241,115
Stamps	30,958
Other charges	29,753

Total £6,664,750

The gross and net income of the Indian Government for the year 1855-56 may therefore be thus stated :—

Gross income	£28,812,097
Cost of collection	6,664,750

Net income £22,147,347

Against this net income of 22,147,347*l.* we find the following charges :—

1.—CHARGES IN INDIA.

Civil and political establishments ..	£2,276,262
Judicial and police	2,510,799
Public works	1,881,606
Military charges	10,417,369
Naval charges	598,070
Charges of Prince of Wales Island, Singapore, &c.	64,612
Mint charge	62,573
Interest on debt	2,044,318
	19,855,509

2.—CHARGES IN ENGLAND.

Dividends to proprietors	632,680
Interest on home bond debt	152,017
General charges, home establishments, pensions, &c.	493,834
Stores to India	526,663
Other sundry payments	1,459,435
	3,264,629

Total charges 23,120,138

Thus, against a net income of 22,147,347*l.*, the total charges of the year amounted to 23,120,138*l.*, showing a deficiency of 972,791*l.* added to the debt of the Indian Government in that year. If, however, we make allowance for the amount expended on public works, which must be regarded more in the light of an investment, the consequence of which will be to improve the chief source of income (the land revenue), rather than as an expenditure on the part of the Government—then, in place of a deficiency, there would be a surplus of nearly a million of income over expenditure.

But with regard to so large an income it is important to consider the sources from which it is derived. Out of the receipts of 22,147,347*l.*, no less than 13,302,140*l.* is derived from the rents of land, 1,818,297*l.* from Customs' duties, collected almost exclusively at the capitals of the three presidencies, 1,911,107*l.* from the salt monopoly, 3,714,353*l.* from the sale of opium, and 473,371*l.* from stamps, making from these five sources no less than 21,219,268*l.* So far as any insecurity in the ordinary revenues of India, in consequence of the mutiny of the Bengal army, is concerned, it may be said to be strictly confined to some portions of the North-West Provinces, and it is therefore important to examine what proportion of the whole is collected in those districts. In the year 1855-56 the collections in those provinces, not including the Punjab, were as follows :—

REVENUE OF NORTH-WEST PROVINCES.

	Gross.	Net.
Land revenue ..	£5,005,188	£4,074,402
Customs ..	67,968	57,615
Salt ..	514,907	441,678
Post-office ..	81,339	39,604
Stamps ..	152,133	142,033
Other sources ..	30,309	30,309
Total ..	5,851,844	4,786,541

There are two most important considerations which present themselves at first sight in relation to these accounts, and which appear essentially to affect the security of the finances of India. 1. That so large a portion of the whole is derived from a source so secure, so permanent, and so well defined as the rents of land; and 2. That of all the other sources of income, so large a proportion is collected in those parts of India where British rule is most secure. In the North-West Provinces, where alone up to this time the mutiny exists, it will be observed that of a net revenue of 4,786,541*l.*, no less than 4,074,402*l.* consists of the rent of land; and it is a most important fact in relation to this, that of late years the whole of these revenues have been resettled upon terms at once advantageous and satisfactory to the cultivator of the soil. Whatever, therefore, may be the interruption, and it is not likely to be considerable in the collection of this revenue at the ordinary period when due, there is every certainty that at no remote time the arrears will be collected, and that no permanent loss is therefore likely to be incurred from this source. It is an undoubted source of strength to the finances of India that the revenue is derived from so few, but such well-ascertained and simple sources, and that the main portion is obtained not in the form of taxes, strictly speaking, but in the shape of payment for the beneficial occupation of land.

But the next point that we have to consider is what are the permanent charges for which the revenues of India are liable. First, there is the capital stock of the old East-India Company, which originally stood at 6,000,000*l.*, but which is redeemable under the Act of 1834 only by a payment of 12,000,000*l.* For this stock the revenues of India are chargeable with the sum of 632,000*l.* a year. Next, there is the home-bond debt, amounting to 3,894,400*l.*, bearing interest of 4 per cent., and chargeable upon the Indian revenues under the same Act. And last, there is the debt in India, which in every shape amounts to 50,483,360*l.* upon which interest is payable to the amount of 2,140,577*l.* It is, however, necessary to remark with regard to the first of these liabilities, viz. the stock of the old East-India Company, that the Act of 1834 provided for the deposit from the assets of the mercantile branch of the Company, then about to be abolished, with the Commissioners of the National Debt of a sum of 2,000,000*l.*, to accumulate at compound interest until it reached 12,000,000*l.* by way of guarantee to the proprietors of East-India Stock. According to an account which has been laid before Parliament, this deposit money has already accumulated in the hands of the Commissioners of the National Debt to a sum of 4,282,594*l.*, which, of course, must be regarded as an asset in diminution of the liabilities of the East-India Company, as at present constituted, in respect to the original capital stock. With this explanation the entire capital debt for which the revenues of India are liable may be thus stated:—

CAPITAL DEBT.

1. The capital stock of the company 6,000,000 l. , redeemable by the payment of ..	£12,000,000
2. The home bond debt ..	3,894,400
3. The Indian debt ..	50,483,369
Total debt ..	66,377,769
Deduct guarantee fund ..	4,282,594
Net total debt ..	£62,095,175

Upon these liabilities the annual charge is as follows, the entire amount of interest being payable on the capital stock, while that upon the guarantee fund is allowed to accumulate until it reaches 12,000,000*l.*:—

ANNUAL CHARGE.

1. Capital stock, 10 per cent ..	£632,000
2. Interest of bonds, 4 per cent ..	152,000
3. Indian debt ..	2,140,577
Total annual charge ..	£2,924,577

The net Indian revenues, amounting to 22,147,000*l.* a-year, are thus burdened with a debt of 62,095,175*l.*, bearing an annual net charge of 2,924,577*l.* If we compare this condition of the income of India with that of the chief European states, and particularly with our own, the comparison must be considered as extremely favourable to India. The annual revenues of the United Kingdom may be said to be in round figures 60,000,000*l.* a-year; our debt amounts to about 780,000,000*l.*, and the annual charge to 28,000,000*l.* Our debt, therefore, represents a sum of about 12 times greater than our annual revenue, while the annual charge is equal to a sum nearly one-half of our income. In India, on the contrary, the whole debt amounts to a sum less than three times the amount of the revenue, and the annual charge is less than one-seventh of the income. Looking, then, to the actual resources of the Indian Government in relation to its liabilities, there is not, we believe, a single European government with so small a portion of its actual income engaged for the security of its obligations.—Economist.

THE TELEGRAPH TO INDIA BY THE RED SEA ROUTE.

Several letters containing matter of much interest on this important subject have recently been addressed to the chairman of the East India Company by Mr. Marshman, the chairman of the association formed for the construction of a telegraphic line by way of the Red Sea to India. These letters state the views of the association in connection with their great undertaking, and the advantages and difficulties of the Red Sea line of route with much clearness and impartiality. Reference is made to some previous communication to the Court of Directors, about two years ago, from an association formed to construct a telegraph from the Dardanelles to Alexandria, with a view to its extension to India, and the proposal was then favourably received by the India House. Circumstances at that period induced the parties to leave their project in abeyance, pending negotiations with the Egyptian and Turkish Governments for firmans to lay the cable down in the Red Sea. These firmans having recently been obtained, the promoters of the undertaking consider themselves in a position to resume it with all necessary powers. Referring to a proposed line of telegraphic communication to India through Mesopotamia and down the Persian Gulf, the promoters of the Red Sea line repudiate any wish to interfere with any arrangements that have been made, though they express a strong opinion that any proposal which should secure to India telegraphic communication within a certain period ought not to be delayed without the gravest reason, even though the result should eventually be a double line. Having exclusive possession of a firman from the Pasha of Egypt and the Sublime Porte for the Red Sea route, no necessity exists for the exertion of any political influence in negotiations, nor for any further delay. The association therefore proposes to establish telegraphic communication from Alexandria to Suez by land, and from Suez to Aden, and thence to Kurrachee by a submarine cable. The distance from Alexandria to Suez is 240 miles; from Suez to Aden and from Aden to Kurrachee, the length of the cable required will be no less than 4,163 miles, divided into sections, none of which are to exceed 500 miles in length. The expenses of the whole undertaking from Alexandria to Kurrachee, with a liberal allowance for contingencies, is estimated as being at the most 700,000*l.* The association also calculates that the time for constructing and laying down the cable, dating from the period the manufacture commences, to the actual opening of the communication, will not exceed eight months to Aden, and four additional months to Kurrachee. It has been assumed that the extensive coral reefs in the Red Sea present insuperable obstacles to a submarine telegraph; but from a most careful survey of the coast on either shore, it has been ascertained that the cable can be laid beyond the line of coral, except where it is necessary to approach one or two stations, and even at those places the reefs, it is believed, can always be avoided by careful soundings.

The assistance which the association consider indispensable to the organization of the undertaking is a guarantee of 6 per cent. on the capital required, to commence from the delivery of the first message. In return for this concession the association would give all Government despatches priority as to time of sending. The rate of subsidy, according to the Atlantic telegraph, is 4 per cent. by the Government of the United States, and 4 per cent. by the Government of Great Britain—8 per cent. in all. It is further offered by the association, that Government messages from or to India by the Red Sea should be conveyed at the same rate as private ones; and the association agree that all receipts, from whatever source, shall be appropriated to satisfy the guarantee, which is to cease and determine as soon as the amount has been entirely liquidated. With regard to the communication between Alexandria and the continent of Europe, as there are several agencies in the Mediterranean now employed in plans for completing it, the company think there is little doubt that it will be perfected by the time the line from Alexandria to Kurrachee is in readiness; but if these expectations should not be realized, they express their willingness to lay down a cable between Alexandria and the Dardanelles—a distance of 800 miles. Accompanying this statement to the chairman of the East-India Company is a letter from Mr. Bright, the engineer of the Atlantic Telegraph Company, in which, after giving a decided preference to the Red Sea line of telegraph with India, he goes on to say that the coral is by no means an insurmountable obstacle, as can be seen by the working of the first Mediterranean submarine line, which crosses coral several times. On the other hand, Mr. Bright expresses his belief that the proposed line through Mesopotamia will be most difficult, if not impossible to maintain, as he has found that “even in the rude parts of Ireland it requires the most continual watchfulness to keep the wires from injury.” Mr. L. Gisborne also gives his testimony as to the facility with which the coral reefs in the Red Sea may be avoided, or that even where it is necessary or expedient to cross them in approaching the shore stations, it may be done without injury or expense in the construction of the line. The correspondence concludes with a letter from the deputy-chairman of the company, in which the writer calls the attention of the East India Company to the abrupt failure of the Atlantic telegraph, and suggests that the two thousand miles of cable still unused on board the Agamemnon and Niagara, can be immediately applied in forming the submarine line from Alexandria to Aden, without further loss of time than that necessary for the vessels to accomplish their voyage. It adds that, at this period of the year, and in the present state of the money market, it would be impossible to raise the capital necessary for the purpose of establishing the undertaking at once, unless the East India Company would engage to contribute from the date of receiving the first message between Aden and Alexandria, and in consideration for messages conveyed, and priority of transmission, the annual sum of 20,000*l.*, to cease and determine when the company obtained a profit from its general receipts of six per cent. With this letter the correspondence closes, and the matter is still under the consideration of the Court of Directors, though it is generally believed that an answer favourable to the immediate adoption of the latter proposition will be returned.

LIEUTENANT ARTHUR HAWES, of the East India Company's service, and other officers, have left for Bagdad, with the sanction of the Government and the East India Company, for the purpose of commencing the construction of the line of the European and Indian Junction Telegraph Company, northward from that town, in compliance with the recommendation of Sir W. B. O'Shaughnessy, their consulting engineer.

MUTINY (EAST INDIA) BILL.—A Bill has just been sent up from the Commons for punishing mutiny and desertion of officers and soldiers in the service of the East India Company and for regulating the payment of regimental debts and the distribution of the effects of deceased officers and soldiers. The preamble declares that it is “requisite for retaining the forces of the East India Company in their duty that exact discipline be observed, and that soldiers who shall mutiny or stir up sedition, or shall desert, or be guilty of crimes and offences to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, be brought to a more exemplary and speedy punishment than the usual forms of law will allow.”

POSTAL COMMUNICATION WITH INDIA via ASIATIC TURKEY.—It is said that a plan has been submitted to the Board of Control and the India House for establishing a postal communication with India via Asiatic Turkey. It is calculated that by making arrangements with the Arab chiefs, a mail could be brought to Constantinople in about fourteen days, whence its principal contents could instantly be despatched in a telegraphic message to London by the British Ambassador. As intelligence from India cannot at present reach England in less than from 26 to 28 days, about 10 days or a fortnight would thus be saved. The assumption is, that from Kurrachee to Bussorah, at the head of the Persian Gulf, the time occupied by steamer would be four days, and that thence the mail could be transmitted by the Arabs to Seleucia, on the Mediterranean, in four days, from which port it would be carried by steamer to Constantinople in five days. Another route, which would probably take a day longer, would be from Bussorah to Beyrout, and thence to Constantinople; and a third plan is open—namely, an uninterrupted land despatch from Bussorah to Constantinople. According to some authorities the latter would be the quickest, and might be accomplished so that, including the steam transit from Kurrachee to Bussorah, the entire route should be traversed in 12 days. This possibility, however, is questioned, although in confirmation of it the fact is quoted that the news of the fall of Acre was brought by an Englishman from Constantinople to Bagdad in six days.

THE ARMY IN INDIA.—In answer to an inquiry made by the House of Lords, it is stated that no order of the Governor-General in India, or by the late Commander-in-Chief in India, since February last, for providing carriage for the troops at the stations in the North-Western Provinces and the Punjab appears in the “general orders.” There is a general order, dated the 19th of June, 1854, reducing the number of commissariat animals kept at those stations. The balance of cattle attached to the commissariat department on the 1st of April last was 1,203 elephants, 7,884 camels, 13,394 bullocks, and 453 mules.

THE MUTINY IN BENGAL.—It is curious and instructive to observe the tenacity of unbelief with which the British officials in India, of all ranks, clung to their scepticism as to the universality of the disaffection in the Bengal army. No one was disposed to admit that his own regiment was imbued with a mutinous spirit; or, if a civilian, that his own station was likely to become the scene of bloodshed, plunder, and confusion. The first letter from Lord Canning to the Court of Directors, dated the 7th of February, alludes, in very mild terms, to “an uneasiness” which had “manifested itself amongst the men attached to the dépôt of musketry at Dum-Dum,” but which had easily been appeased. At this time there does not appear to have been the slightest suspicion as to anything more serious than a prejudice against the use of the new rifle cartridges. By the 8th of April the ill-feeling is mentioned as existing “in some portion of the native troops,” and the 19th Regt. N.I. had been disbanded for refusing to obey their officers. A subsequent court of inquiry subjected Lieut.-Colonel Mitchell, commanding that corps, to very severe animadversion on the part of the Governor-General in Council. At the same date it was announced that a sepoy of the 34th N.I. had been hanged for wounding the adjutant and the sergeant-major of the corps, “while in a state of excitement from the use of intoxicating drugs.” It was evident, however, that the whole regiment was unworthy of confidence; and accordingly it also was soon afterwards disbanded, with the exception of three companies. On the 22nd of April was announced the significant fact that the 63rd N.I. had declined to avail themselves of the annual indulgence of furlough, “on the ground that none of the regiments at Barrackpore intended to take theirs.” The same mail reported the punishment of two sepoys of the 2nd grenadiers for mutinous conduct. The disease was clearly on the increase. The disbandment of seven companies of the 34th N.I. was announced on the 15th of May, and likewise the proselytizing insanity of Col. S. G. Wheeler, in command of that corps. Thus far, it appeared that the inefficiency of the commanding officers might, in some measure, be the cause of the insubordination of their respective regiments. But only three days later was penned a startling narrative of the disastrous events that had occurred at Meerut and Delhi. It is not improbable, indeed, that it may hereafter be shown that even those were aggravated by the irresolution and incompetency of the Brigadier-General commanding at Meerut. After this date, however, every mail brought home the sad intelligence of mutiny and massacre at almost every station in the North-West Provinces. The plot each day grew deeper and deeper, and at the same time more apparent, and yet the letters to Government from the local authorities are always the most hopeful on the very eve of the ensuing outbreak. Thus, on the 3rd June, the 6th N.I. at Allahabad received thanks from the Lieut.-Governor of Agra for volunteering to march against the rebels; and next day, from the Governor-General in Council. On the evening of the 6th they rose and murdered their officers. Again, on the 2nd of June, the Commissioner at Benares telegraphed to Calcutta, “all quiet in the division.” How long the division remained in that peaceful state is, unhappily, too well known. So, again, on the 1st of June, Brigadier Ramsay reports: “The state of the (Gwalior) Contingent at present is perfectly satisfactory.” No long period elapsed before that same contingent was on its march to join the mutineers at Indore, after throwing the European residents at Agra into the most dire alarm. The same story might be repeated with regard to every corps and every station that has revolted. As a contrast to this blind confidence, it is almost re-assuring to find that one eminent man at least was fully impressed with the importance of the crisis. These are the words in which the Chief Commissioner in the Punjab urged the Government to adopt the most prompt and energetic measures: “June 3rd. All is safe as yet in the Punjab; but the aspect of affairs most threatening. The whole native army are ready to break out, and unless a blow be soon struck, the irregulars, as a body, will soon follow their example. Send for our troops from Persia, intercept the force now on its way to China, and bring it to Calcutta. Every European soldier will be required to save the country, if the whole of the native troops turn against us.” It is needless to add, that Sir John Lawrence is no “croaker;” but a resolute, determined man, who boldly faces the difficulties which weaker minds would extenuate or ignore.

BOOKS.

Emigration to British India. By EDWARD WEST. London: Wm. H. Allen and Co.

THERE can be nothing more praiseworthy than the author's motives for compiling this little volume. He has been actuated by no miserable feeling of vanity, no vulgar appetite for book-making. His object has been to induce enterprising and intelligent young men to venture their small capitals in a new field for industry, and at the same time to furnish remunerative employment to millions of Hindoo labourers. The result of British emigration to India, he fondly hopes, will be the suppression of slavery in other parts of the world, and the diffusion of Christianity and civilization throughout our Eastern possessions. In order to effect this desirable consummation, he has made copious extracts from Thornton's "Gazetteer," and Capper's "Three Presidencies," with a view to familiarize the English public with a knowledge of the productions, climate, and capabilities of that vast empire, and has thus endeavoured to enlist self-interest and worldly advantages in support of higher and purer motives. It is impossible to do otherwise than wish well to such labours, or to refuse our sympathy and respect for the author's earnest philanthropy. But we may fairly question the adaptation of the means he would employ for the achievement of the object he proposes to attain. The climate, excepting on the lower spurs of the Himalayas, or the Neilgherries, is in itself an insuperable obstacle to colonization. Mr. West, indeed, affirms that the children of common soldiers born in the country are much healthier and stronger than those of the upper classes. In this he is mistaken. It is true that there are now some hundreds of native whites in India, but with rare exceptions they lack vigour both of body and mind, and in most instances are imbued with all the low cunning, duplicity, and meanness, that belong to the Hindoo character. It is further suggested that every young man should take an active healthy young wife out with him as the companion of his solitude, and the surest inducement to continued exertion. But if this arrangement were attended with its natural consequences, either the wife and children must be sent in a few years to the hills, or a life of misery must be endured in watching each dear one in succession pine away and perish. There is, we believe, but one opening for European colonists, and that is on the lower mountain ranges, where tea, hemp, silk, and a few other productions may, perhaps, be profitably cultivated. Of course, any man may take his chance in the plains for a few years as an indigo planter, or cultivator of rice, sugar, cotton, or tobacco. But, as a rule, this seldom proves a really advantageous speculation. In the first place, there is the certain injury to health, and the lingering weariness of expatriation, to be endured; and, secondly, labour is not cheap when the results of that labour are taken into account. The Hindoo peasant is satisfied with two pence a day, but that is quite as much as his labour is worth. He is content with this small amount of pay, because it suffices to supply him with cereals and other fruits of the earth. It is an argument that cuts both ways. Where labour is cheap, so also is the produce of that labour. Mr. West is also mistaken in supposing that better crops would reward the introduction of an improved system of husbandry; that is, improved according to our European notions. The experiment has been tried, and signally failed. English ploughs and other agricultural implements have been introduced, but only to be superseded by the simple instruments previously in use. The fertility of the soil is superficial; descend a few inches, and you come upon a sour clay or an acid sand.

There are some minor errors which are hardly worth noticing, as they do not affect the real question at issue. Such, for instance, is the calculation of the numbers of herbaceous animals, founded upon an idea that carnivorous animals require a hearty meal every day. Fortunately, they are gifted with a great aptitude for fasting; but when they do alight upon a victim they adopt Dugald Dalgetty's principle of laying in provender for several days. Another error is the idea that our sepoys would have gladly laboured on the roads for two or three farthings per diem. It is notorious that they could hardly be constrained to perform the military duty of constructing batteries, or throwing up entrenchments. It is to be hoped, however, that they will not again be humoured in this or any other insolent prejudice.

THE NEW COMMANDER AT DELHI.—Major-General Thomas Reed, C.B., who was appointed to the command of the troops before Delhi on the death of General Barnard, is an officer of experience, and has seen much service. MAP OF INDIA;

Showing the British Territories subdivided into Collectories, and the position and boundary of each Native State; chiefly compiled from Trigonometrical Surveys, executed by order of the Honourable Court of Directors of the East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 6 in. high; 5 ft. 8 in. wide. £2; or on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3. 3s.

The object kept in view in compiling this Map has been to render it available to the greatest possible extent for popular use. For this purpose the names of all stations, civil and military, are inserted, as well as those of all towns and places of note likely to be looked for. To make clear the subdivisions of the whole of the country, both British and native, the limits of the various districts and collectories, with their names, are distinctly indicated. The railways are laid down, and the trunk roads conspicuously coloured. The newly-acquired district in Burmah is included. To avoid, however, the confusion consequent upon over-crowding, and make the Map clear and easy for reference, the names of many small villages, and places of no present importance, have been omitted, and thus a very wide measure of comprehensiveness has been attained, while needless diffusiveness has been avoided.

THACKER'S OVERLAND NEWS,
FOR INDIA AND THE COLONIES;

A fortnightly Summary of British and Foreign Intelligence, published on the 10th and 26th of each month, in time for despatch to India via Marseilles. One uniform system is preserved throughout the Paper, and the information is so epitomized and arranged as to present a perfect and comprehensive view of the history of the fortnight, with special reference to those subjects most interesting to Anglo-Indians.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

THE CALCUTTA "ENGLISHMAN."

"Pains have been taken with the arrangement. It is evidently got up with a knowledge of what information Indian readers require, and will therefore, we expect, soon attain a considerable circulation."

THE CALCUTTA "DAILY NEWS."

"Fully bears out the assurance given in the prospectus that it should 'be all that the Overland Papers are, and something more.' We do not think that a single item of news or fact of interest which had transpired during the fortnight can possibly have been omitted, and the power of condensation displayed in this Paper is much beyond what we had expected."

"THE MOPUSSILITE."

"It is well written, and carefully compiled. It is not so diffuse in its information as the 'Home News,' and does not reprint long articles from the London journals; but it will probably not be the less acceptable on this account to a large portion of the public."

"BENGAL HURKARU."

"We gladly pronounce this first number an extremely good one, and we think the periodical is full of promise of something still better. The Editor has contrived to condense into a comparatively small space a vast quantity of miscellaneous information, of a character interesting to his readers here. This superior condensation of his materials is perhaps the leading character of the Newspaper, and a very important one it is, especially for those Indian readers who may receive this one London Paper only."

Orders to be addressed to Messrs. W. THACKER and Co., 87, Newgate Street, London; Messrs. THACKER, SPINK, and Co., St. Andrew's Library, Calcutta; Messrs. THACKER and Co., St. Andrew's Library, Bombay; and Mr. JAMES HILL, Lucknow.

Nor at this season can we be too careful to preserve the teeth from the deleterious effects of vegetable acids (the immediate cause of tooth-ache), by a systematic employment, night and morning, of ROWLANDS' ODONTO, or Pearl Dentifrice, a white powder, compounded of the rarest and most fragrant exotics. SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE Bombay papers are already singing Io Paeans! over General Havelock's successes, and predict a speedy suppression of the mutiny. We much fear this exultation is premature. It is certainly not justified by the facts of which authentic intelligence has been received by the present mail, and still less so by the too well accredited rumours now in circulation. Perhaps the most painful duty of a journalist is that which compels him to become a prophet of evil, and to dash to the ground pleasurable hopes and anticipations. Such, unhappily, is our own position at this moment. We cannot participate in the triumphant shouts of our Bombay contemporaries. On taking a comprehensive view of the proceedings both of our own forces and of the mutineers, we can see no cause for self-gratulation beyond the achievements of Havelock's gallant little band of heroes. We rejoice, indeed, to learn that the British troops at Lucknow were on the point of being relieved, nor do we attach any credit to the telegraphic report of the fall of Agra. It is likewise satisfactory to know that the Punjab remains tranquil, and that no further disturbances have taken place in the Nizam's dominions. But beyond that, all is dark, uncertain, and discouraging. The spirit of disaffection has spread into the Bombay Presidency. At Kolapore, the 27th regiment of Native Infantry mutinied on the 1st of August, and murdered three of their junior officers; the others escaping through the loyalty of a jemadar, whose wife also saved the lives of the European ladies at the station, at the expense of her own. Owing to the foolish reticence of the local government, nothing further is positively known, except that some fighting had taken place. As it is hardly probable that any secrecy would be deemed necessary if things had gone right, it is natural to infer that such has not been the case. The defection of one regiment may not in itself be a very serious matter, but it is a bad symptom, and shakes confidence in the stability of others. Besides, a general feeling of disquiet is reported from Belgaum, Dharwar, Rutnagherry, and Satara. These stations, it is almost needless to observe, are on the Madras Presidency, and have at times been occupied by those troops. There is also a large proportion of Mahomedans in the population of those districts, who may be expected to take the earliest opportunity to co-operate with their co-religionists at Hyderabad. At Sattara, affairs were so threatening an aspect, that the resident suddenly surrounded the palace, and sent off to Bombay the ex-Ranees and the young Junglee Rajah, the adopted son of the late prince. Still nearer to Bombay, a Mahomedan conspiracy has been detected at Poonah; the moulvie being discovered in the act of carrying on a treasonable correspondence with the moulvie at Belgaum. The former at least was secured, and confined on board the steam frigate Aobar, preparatory to being brought to trial. At Bombay itself, the position of the European inhabitants is by no means enviable. It is true, the festival of Buckree Eed had passed over without any breach of the peace, but the more dangerous Mohurru had yet to be celebrated. It is equally true, that both Hindoos and Mahomedans have assured the Government of their unalterable devotion and fidelity, and at the moment of doing so, were very likely sincere; but our recent experience is little calculated to inspire much faith in the permanency of native purposes or promises. The surest hope of tranquillity lies in the arrival of H.M.'s 33rd regiment of foot, so famous in Indian warfare under the command of Lieut.-Col. Arthur Wellesley. The left wing of the 2nd European light infantry had likewise arrived, but were at once despatched to Belgaum, by way of Goa. The money market, however, was easier, and the banks had reduced their rate of interest all round by two per cent.; still, Government securities were not in favour.

But how is the exultation of the Bombay papers to be reconciled with the fact, that the latest intelligence from Calcutta is dated the 29th July, only seven days later than that brought by the previous mail? Is it not evident that the communication between the two capitals has been somehow interrupted? And how could this have occurred, unless the insurrection had spread through Bengal Proper? We know, indeed, that three native infantry regiments, the 7th, 8th, and 40th, have mutinied at Dinapore, and were joined by the 12th irregular cavalry, who illustrated their revolt by the murder of their commanding officer, Major Holmes, and his wife. These very regiments a short time before gave what was deemed convincing proof that they would be found faithful among the faithless, by suppressing an embryo insurrection at Patna. The virus of revolt, however, seems to be fatally contagious. It is stated that this large force of mutineers was allowed, through General Lloyd's indecision, to take the road to Benares, but was finally overtaken by H.M.'s 10th foot, on the banks of the Soane, and dispersed with terrible slaughter. We deeply regret that we cannot accept this version in its entirety. So far as it goes it may be true, but we much fear that a lamentable disaster befell our arms at Arrah, accompanied by the massacre of the small Christian population of that post-town. In any case, the intervention of a large body of mutineers between Benares and Dinapore must seriously affect the despatch of troops to the north-west, who have hitherto been sent up in insignificant detachments, far too weak to offer any effectual resistance to a well-organized attack. If our information be correct—of which we have no doubt—detachments of H.M.'s 5th, 10th, and 37th regiments, perhaps 200 in number, were surprised at Arrah, and cut to pieces, together with the Christian inhabitants of the place. It is probably this disaster which originated, through the similarity of sound, the report that Agra had been captured. In the old Mahratta wars, and likewise in the course of the American war of independence, the danger of sending small detachments of troops through a doubtful country was so frequently and so clearly demonstrated that we might have been spared any further lessons of experience to inculcate prudence in that respect.

Although no details are yet furnished of the massacre at Cawnpore, sufficient is known to satisfy the most morbid appetite for horrors. It seems to have been on the 24th of June that Sir Hugh Wheeler received his mortal wound, and on the 27th the garrison capitulated, after being reduced to the greatest straits for food, water, and ammunition. There were in all about 450 souls; namely, 88 officers, 190 men of H.M.'s 84th, 70 ladies, 120 women and children of H.M.'s 32nd, and a few others. These marched out of their shattered stronghold, and were embarked on board seventeen country boats, together with 3½ lakhs of rupees. But no sooner had they thrust off from the shore than the boatmen sprang into the water, and a masked battery of eight guns suddenly opened upon the wretched fugitives, and sunk sixteen of the boats, with all on board. One contrived to escape a short distance, but was soon overtaken and brought back. Nana Sahib had thus between twenty and thirty prisoners in his power, whom he appears to have treated at first with a semblance of kindness. But on the morning of the 16th they also were put to death with characteristic barbarity. When General Havelock's victorious army marched into Cawnpore, a natural impulse led them first to the assembly-rooms, in which, it was reported, 175 ladies and children were confined. The scene that met their eyes as they entered the courtyard baffles all description. The pavement, thickly clotted with gore, was strewn with tresses of hair, and articles of female apparel, stained with blood. After suffering unutterable outrages, the women had been stripped naked and beheaded, and then flung into a well; the children being thrown in alive and smothered beneath the reeking corpses of their mothers. Only four are mentioned as being still alive,—a Mrs. Greenway, the wife of a merchant, and three Indo-Britons. They did not all perish unavenged, even at the time. Miss Wheeler, with a courage worthy of her gallant sire, is said to have shot five of the miscreants with a revolver, before she was finally overpowered.

After resting his troops for a day or two—for they had marched 126 miles and fought three actions in eight days, in the hottest season of the year,—General Havelock pushed on to Bhitoor, which he found evacuated. He therefore burned it to the ground, and marched back to Cawnpore, with sixteen guns and a number of beasts of burden. Here he was joined by Colonel (now Brigadier-General) Niel, and lost no time in constructing a bridge of boats across the Ganges. On the 29th, he came up with the enemy at Oonao, a small town protected by a morass on either flank and defended by fifteen guns, the houses also being pierced for musketry. Nothing, however, could withstand the onslaught of our men, infuriated by the recollection of the horrid spectacle they had witnessed at Cawnpore. The place was carried at the point of the bayonet, the guns captured, and the enemy driven back on Bupeer-Gunge, only sixteen miles from Lucknow. Halting only four hours, the British force resumed their march, and stormed the new position, though surrounded by water, and the only approach covered by four pieces of artillery. Our loss in this affair consisted of eighty-eight killed and wounded; of the latter, two were officers,—Lieut. Boyle, of the 78th Highlanders, and Lieut. Seton, of the Madras fusiliers. On the following day, or at the latest by the 1st of August, Lucknow must have been relieved, and H.M.'s 32nd regiment added to the avenging force that would then march straight upon Delhi, distant 170 miles. At Oonao the enemy was commanded by Jupa Sing, and it is stated that Nana Sahib drowned himself after his retreat from Cawnpore. It is probable that Lucknow would have been safe even without General Havelock's approach, for 3,000 Ghoorkas were near at hand, placed at the disposal of the British Government by Jung Bahadoor, the Nepaulese minister.

The army before Delhi has again changed its commander. Enfeebled by sickness, General Reid wisely shrunk from a responsibility beyond his strength, and has been succeeded by Brigadier Wilson, of the artillery, an active and skilful officer. It cannot be said that the siege makes any progress. The small force as yet concentrated on that point is even hard beset to maintain its ground against a numerous and desperate enemy. In the sortie of the 14th July, alluded to in our last number, our men pursued their scattered assailants within range of small-arms from the walls, and were severely punished for their recklessness. Among the officers wounded on that occasion, was Brig. Chamberlain, the adjutant-general of the Bengal army; being the seventh time he has been hit in action. Our total loss in killed and wounded was not less than 171 men. On the 23rd the mutineers again issued forth, marching in great force upon Metcalfe House, but were repulsed with great spirit; Lieut. Law, of the 10th N.I., however, being killed. Reinforcements were shortly expected to arrive from the Punjab, as Brigadier Nicholson, after completely annihilating the Sealkote mutineers, was marching downwards. By the end of August, General Havelock would also be at hand; and then will sound the hour of retribution. By order of the Governor-General, no promise or engagement of any kind is to be made to the king of Delhi, or any members of the royal family, but they are to be kept in close confinement until further instructions are received. It is just possible that our soldiers, in the fury of the assault, will spare his lordship all anxiety on that head. A proclamation has likewise been issued, offering a reward of fifty rupees for every mutineer or deserter who may be arrested with arms in his hands; and thirty rupees for every unarmed insurgent.

The Jât leader, Shah Mull, has been defeated and slain, together with 600 of his followers, by a force sent out from Meerut, though the place of his overthrow is not mentioned. In Central India tranquillity has been partially restored by the arrival of Colonel Stuart and his movable column at Mhow. The Holkar continues loyal, and has given positive proofs of his friendly spirit towards the British Government. The rajah of Kerowlie, the maharajah of Cashmere, and the chiefs of the Hill States, have likewise adhered cordially to their respective engagements.

At Calcutta a corps of "Bengal Yeomanry cavalry" was being organized, to consist of four troops of fifty men each; Mr. F. Chapman, who distinguished himself as a volunteer in the Upper Provinces, has been appointed second in command. As the Calcutta mail has not yet arrived, we are unable to give any very recent intelligence from that Presidency.

Madras remains tranquil. Several native regiments have been despatched thence to Bengal, but we cannot commend the policy of pouring armed native troops into the seat of government. We are aware that there is not much sympathy at ordinary times between the Bengal and Madras sepoys; but in a war for the faith, all petty differences are likely to be forgotten, and many of the latter are, moreover, originally from Oude. We cannot at present place any reliance on Hindoo or Mahomedan, notwithstanding the most solemn assurances of fidelity.

REINFORCEMENT OF EUROPEAN TROOPS.—We learn that Captain Griffith Jenkins, of the Indian navy, who went to the Mauritius in the steamer Pottinger, as agent to the Indian government, for the purpose of forwarding troops to this country, had landed at Port Louis on the 23rd July, the day that the Pottinger left for Bombay. After sending on the greater part of the 33rd regiment, two companies of which remain behind in the Mauritius, Captain Jenkins proposed to leave for the Cape of Good Hope if he could obtain a vessel to take him on, and expected to be able to send six regiments from that colony to India. As there seems but little probability of troops coming from England by the overland route, the steamers now lying idle in the harbour should forthwith be despatched to the Cape, to convey troops to India as quickly as possible. Several regiments at the Cape expected to be relieved by fresh troops from England, and these corps, together with those they are to relieve, could at once be brought to this country, as the military establishment at the Cape can be reduced without much danger.

WRITING TO THE PAPERS PROHIBITED.—A general order has been issued to the volunteer guard prohibiting its members from "writing to the newspapers." They were told that if they had any suggestion, representation, or complaint to make, they should address the commandant through the captain of the troop or company to which they belong.

BENGAL.

MUTINY.

ARRAH.—BENARES, AUGUST 3RD.—A letter mentions that the mutineers from Dinapore, having crossed the Soane, marched upon Arrah. The European inhabitants, justly alarmed for their safety, wrote to Dinapore for reinforcements. Two steamers were accordingly despatched with detachments of H. M.'s 5th, 10th, and 37th. In the middle of the night one of the steamers grounded in the mud and stuck fast. The men were hastily landed, and pushed forward on foot, but without taking due precautions. Suddenly they were assailed on both sides by a close and heavy fire, and 150 of their small force, including several officers, put hors de combat. It is supposed that all the Europeans at the station, about 47 in number, have been massacred.

ASSAM.—We learn that the sepoys in the district of Assam have disclaimed participation and sympathy with the shameful abominations perpetrated by regiments of the Bengal army, and have professed their fidelity and willingness to serve the Government. Many of our readers will be interested and concerned in this information. During this serious crisis, the performance of ordinary duty becomes especially meritorious. At the same time it would not be sound policy to make much of such professions, just after regiments have been publicly and extraordinarily thanked and praised for being staunch, on the eve of their breaking into revolt, and murdering their officers.—Englishman, July 3.

AURUNGABAD.—MARCH OF THE 14TH LIGHT DRAGOONS FROM AURUNGABAD.—Abdullahabad, 19th July, 1857.—Our route is direct for Mhow, via Asseerghur, and I fear we will never see Kirkee again, as our head-quarters are coming on to join us, and I believe our ultimate destination will be Delhi. The weather is fearfully hot here, every day tells we are approaching Bengal, and our marches are most terrific, for more frightful routes I never even read of. Since we left Aurungabad this has been our marching, over rocks and precipices, and our tents always two or three hours behind us each morning.

July 12th Aurungabad to Chokah..	.. 14
13th Chokah to Neypoor 17
14th Neypoor to Bowerpoor..	.. 18
15th Bowerpoor to Palodee 10
16th Palodee to Adjunta 14
17th Adjunta to Sumrood 22
18th Sumrood to Boodah 16
19th Boodah to Abdullahabad 16

To-morrow will be twenty-six miles, and forced marches will be continued, to endeavour to rescue those unfortunate Europeans who are in danger at Mhow and Indore. We are all in excellent health and spirits and with but few on the sick list. In my last I omitted to mention that two more mutineers had been shot by musketry, and one blown away from a gun, and there will be, I suspect, some work at Asseerghur, and quick too, as we are marching so hard for Mhow.

A friend writing from the force proceeding to Mhow, whose letter bears date the 20th, says, "Cholera has made its appearance in the camp among the 14th dragoons and the 25th N.I. Some of these last have died, and the commanding officer of that regiment was attacked very severely and fears were entertained for him. The force had been making daily long marches, and this, combined with bad water, has, as it is supposed, caused this fatal disease to appear. The men were behaving extremely well amid all their fatigues and privations.

ALLAHABAD.—Four days' march from Allahabad, en route to Cawnpore, the 10th July:—"Vestiges of the mischief done by the sepoys meet the eye in every direction. Bullock train-carts destroyed and scattered on the road; the electric telegraph-wire, from within nineteen miles of Allahabad, taken off the posts and thrown about the fields, the latter being cut down and removed. The wire furnishes these rascals with offensive materials. They cut it up and use it as slugs against us. In our march this morning we saw four of the rebels that were hanged."

AGRA.—By the latest advices from Agra, the mutineers had not repeated their attack.

The insurgent army, at the battle of Agra, was commanded by General Sidharee Sing of Untabeg, recently a Subadar in the 1st Light Cavalry; while Heera Sing Thakoor of the Malwa contingent was Brigade-Major or Chief of the Staff. Both men it will be observed are Hindoos. The enemy had twelve guns on the ground.—Mofussilite, July 22.

BARODA.—The mutineers have come within sixty miles of Baroda to a place called Godra. Two guns belonging to the Hon. Company, and a hundred men of the Guicowar's horse artillery, under the command of Capt. Buckle; one hundred men of the 8th regt. N.I., under Major Thomas; and fifty men of the Golundauze, under Lieut. Sheppee, were sent out to meet them on the night of the 7th instant. Two hundred men only of the 8th N.I. now remain at Baroda; but it is expected that five hundred of the 1st grenadiers and one hundred of the 86th (Europeans) will arrive at Baroda shortly from Broach and Surat respectively.

We are somewhat at a loss to understand what mutineers these are, unless they belong to the Baiza Bae's force on the Ner-budda, or to Scindia's contingent from Mhow and Indore. It is reported that they have several guns with them.

Another letter from Baroda, of the same date as the above (9th inst), received since the foregoing was in type, states that the force referred to, under command of Captain Buckle, has been sent to Dawud, ninety miles from that city. Dawud belongs to Scindia, and has been looted by Bheels and 6,000 of Scindia's mutinous troops. We regret to hear it is reported that two European officers, and a lady there with two children, have been murdered. It is supposed the mutineers have come from Bhopawar or Mhow. A detachment of 300 of the 8th N.I. from Broach had made a forced march of fifty miles to Baroda in thirty-two hours, accompanied by twenty-five men of the Guzerat Irregular Horse. They were immediately sent off to join the detachment which had started for Dawud under Captain Buckle. The magistrate of Surat had declined to part with any of H.M.'s 86th foot, as there was still some alarm in that place.

We are glad to find it stated that the Gackwar is staunch, and likely to continue so.—Poona Observer Extra, July 16.

BAREILLY.—We have been favoured with the following account of the mutiny at Bareilly. It may be depended upon as correct, and will be found painfully interesting:—

"The news of Delhi and Meerut insurrections reached Bareilly on the 15th May. Nothing had as yet occurred at this station to raise a doubt as to the loyalty of the troops. For days subsequent to the receipt of the above intelligence all continued tranquil. Parades, drills, and other duties were conducted with their usual regularity, and, though the occurrences at Meerut and Delhi were well known in the lines, nothing singular was remarked in the manner of the men. Fugitives now commenced their flight through the station, day after day numbers hurried through, bringing with them alarming rumours; the stories they circulated sowed the seeds of disaffection, although the officers of both corps were in constant intercourse with their men, it soon became apparent that they had lost their influence, and that the men distrusted them. As the garrison of Bareilly were entirely composed of native troops, viz., the 18th and 68th regiments, 8th irregular cavalry, and Kirby's battery, and though the men of all the corps appeared extremely well conducted, it was still deemed advisable to send away the ladies and children, and by the 20th May all had left for Nynce Tal. The turbulent and disaffected in the cities—and their name is legion—now commenced their intrigues in the lines. Emissaries from Delhi arrived with large offers of reward, and were most assiduous in their endeavours to lure the men from their allegiance. The dread of Europeans harassed their minds greatly; with childish simplicity, they believed every report they heard. The words and assurances of their officers were laid aside, and they searched for truth in the bazaars, and amongst those who could give them no information at all. Though not one act of disrespect or insubordination had up to this time occurred, it was obvious to all that there was cause for anxiety; many took the most gloomy view of the state of affairs, others considered the crisis to have passed, while some persuaded themselves into perfect security, and lived and laughed on, as if nothing whatever had happened. The feeling, however, daily became worse, both in the city and amongst the troops; every precaution was taken by the civil and military authorities to keep things quiet; all, however, prepared for any emergency that might happen. In case of surprise or sudden outbreak, a rendezvous was fixed upon; the spot being the 8th irregular cavalry lines. All, however, went on as usual until the 29th, when a report was spread that the troops were about to mutiny that day; officers and others were warned, and every one waited anxiously for the dreaded moment, but the evening and night passed off quietly. Men of both corps stoutly disclaimed all knowledge of the rumour; it was attributed to the blackguards about, who wished to create commotion and profit by the confusion in plunder, and firing officers' bungalows. That very day, the Subadar Major of the 68th went to the Adjutant, and with streaming tears petitioned, on his own behalf and that of the regiment, for the ladies and children of the officers to return to cantonments, stating that all danger had passed, and that the men were never more loyal than now. On Saturday, the 30th of May, nothing unusual was remarked, and though the previous days had ended in nothing, a sense of approaching evil and disaster pervaded all minds. On the evening of this day, a large number of fugitives from the 45th Regiment passed through the station. They succeeded in spreading the wildest rumours throughout cantonments, the men were told that Europeans with guns had arrived in the neighbouring villages, and that all would be destroyed by the avenging hand of the terrible 'Gora-logue.' The leave men also rejoined during the night, and with their lying stories they added to the uneasiness already created by the Ferozepore mutineers. The lines were astir the whole of that night, and few retired to the huts. Sunday, the 31st, came, Divine service was performed at the church and there was a large attendance. Native officers and others reported all quiet, officers were told that the men were never 'in better heart.' The form of examining and closing Muster Rolls and Pay accounts was all carefully gone through. Leave Rolls were prepared and countersigned, and so cleverly was the deceit carried out, that not one officer had the slightest suspicion of what was about to happen.

At eleven o'clock precisely, an artillery gun fired, it was immediately followed by a long sustained yell from the lines, shots flew about amongst the houses, many men rushed up from the lines, imploring their officers to fly, and not to approach the parade. The game was fairly up. Armed men were running frantically in all directions, firing at everything and everybody they came across. Before many officers knew what had occurred, they found their houses surrounded by these devils and themselves fired at. The escapes, that many, if not all, had that day, were marvellous. Lieutenant Barwell of the 18th regiment was dismounted, and his horse taken from him, and though a shower of bullets flew past him, he escaped unhurt. Lieutenant Rogers of the 68th was surrounded by a crowd of infuriated madmen, who attempted to seize his horse, but he galloped past them, and though fired at was not touched. Two companies doubled up to Colonel Colin Troup's house to dispose of him, but their intended victim had left it shortly before. Captains Paterson, Gibbs, and Lieutenant Warde of the 68th, lived in a house on the parade, within a hundred yards of the lines, they found themselves surrounded and fired at from all sides, but their horses having been got ready expeditiously, they mounted, and had to gallop across the entire front of the parade, receiving volley after volley from hundreds of mutineers collected there. On passing the Battery, every gun opened on them with grape, and this within 200 yards; but a merciful Providence, enabled them to escape through this storm of iron missiles, untouched. Ensign Tucker of the same regiment was shot dead, while nobly endeavouring to save the sergeant-major's life. Brigadier Sibbald was mortally wounded, in attempting to reach the rendezvous, by a musket shot in his chest, the gallant old man succeeded in arriving at the spot, but shortly after dropped dead from his horse. About thirty, in all, civilians and officers, succeeded in reaching the rendezvous, here they waited for an hour to collect those that might have escaped. Every house in cantonments was now in a blaze, the fire of musketry and cannon, and the hellish yells of the men told that bloodshed and other horrors were going on. All three arms, artillery, cavalry, and infantry, joined in the insurrection. Against such numbers, the small band of Europeans could do nothing, and it would have been folly to have attempted approaching the insurgents; they therefore turned their horses' heads towards Nynce Tal, seventy-four miles distant, and after a long, hot, and tedious march of twenty-four hours, with one hour's rest, they arrived safely without having met any opposition on the road. All were thoroughly knocked up from exposure to the sun and want of food, and perhaps mortals never felt so grateful as they did, when, on reaching the foot of the hills at Hulwany, they met Captain Ramsay, the commissioner of Kumaon, who regaled them at his house with princely hospitality, and enabled them to reach Nynce Tal the same evening. It must be stated that a faithful few of the 8th irregulars, eleven native officers, and twenty-four troopers leaving all they possessed to the mercy of the insurgents, followed their officers in their flight, determining to share their fortunes, whatever that might be, rather than join their misguided and mutinous comrades.

The fate of many of those who are missing is still unknown, but it is beyond all doubt that enormities have been committed at Bareilly amongst the European inhabitants, rivalling, if not exceeding in atrocity, the dark deeds of Meerut and Delhi. The arch-fiend amongst the insurgents was the artillery Subadar, who constituted himself brigadier-general of the force, raised the green flag, and directed the plunder and destruction of the cantonment, which by nightfall had been fully accomplished by his villainous band, for all that remained there of Bareilly was a heap of smouldering ashes. The city of Bareilly, unless destroyed, will stand as a lasting reproach upon our name. It was here the greatest cruelties were committed; men, women, and children—every European and Christian that could be found—were massacred with great barbarity. One Khan Bahadur Khan, 'a pensioner,' set himself up as shah of Rohilkund; and he, who but a few hours before might be seen courting the smiles of every civilian, issued an edict for the destruction of every European, which was too readily carried out by the ruthless fanatics about him, his first victims being two judges, two doctors, and two deputy magistrates—the very men amongst whom this brute was constantly associating. He offered rewards also for the heads of all those who had escaped, fixing 1,000*l.* upon the commissioner's! The doom that now hangs over Delhi should fall upon Bareilly; such a sink of iniquity deserves to be levelled to the ground; it has long been the abode of the worst scoundrels in India, and its recent atrocities will add to its infamy, marking it, if allowed to exist, a very hell upon earth—a monument of Mahomedan fanaticism and of our imbecile tolerance."

The outbreak took place May 31. Fortunately, as early as May 28 all the non-combatants had been ordered to quit the station for Nynce Tal, otherwise the slaughter would have been much greater.—See Indian Mail, August 31, p. 543.

We have received a private letter from a correspondent at Rohilkund which confirms the particulars above detailed, and supplies the following list of officers and their families escaped from Bareilly:—

The following is a list of the civil and military officers who escaped to Nynce Tal:—

Civil Service.—Messrs. R. Alexander, commissioners of Rohilkund; J. Guthrie, magistrate of Bareilly; C. Currie, joint-magistrate; G. B. Pasley, assistant ditto.

Staff.—Capt. Brownlow, major of brigade; Capt. Hume, executive engineer; the Rev. L. Poynder, M.A., chaplain.

18th Regiment Native Infantry.—Lieut. Hunter, Ensign Boswell, and Surgeon Oakley.

68th Regiment Native Infantry.—Col., Troup commanding; Captains Robertson, Paterson, and Gibbs; Lieutenants Ward, Christian, Stanton, and Rogers; Surgeon Bowhill.

Artillery.—Capt. Kirby commanding, and Lieut. Fraser.

8th Irregular Cavalry.—Capt. Mackenzie commanding, Lieut. Becher, and Assist. Surgeon Currie, M.D.

Known to be killed.—Brigadier Sibbald, C.B.; Ensign Tucker, 68th regt. N.I.

Believed to have been killed.—Messrs. D. Robertson and G. D. Raikes, civil service; G. Wyatt, deputy collector; Dr. Ray, civil surgeon; Assist. Surg-on G. Hanstraw; Dr. Buck, principal of the college; Major A. E. Pearson, commanding 18th N.I.; Captains T. C. Richardson and H. V. Hathorn; Lieutenants J. G. Gowen, H. R. Stewart; and Ensign J. C. Dyson; Sergt. Staples, artillery; Sergt. Henry, 68th N.I.; Sergt. Belcham, wife, and four children; besides residents, merchants, traders, &c. Most fortunately all the officers' wives and families had been sent up to the hills a few days before the mutiny.

The troops at the other military stations in Rohilkund, viz. Moradabad and Shahjahanpur have also mutinied. From Moradabad all the residents escaped to Meerut and Nynce Tal, but at Shahjahanpur, with the exception of two, every European in the place was murdered in church during service on Sunday the 31st May. All the English houses throughout the province had been burned and destroyed; and a descendant of the Nawabs of Rohilkund, named Khan Bahadur Khan, has assumed the government as viceroi of the king of Delhi.

BENARES, JULY 11.—On Sunday evening, the 5th instant, a report came into camp that the rebels were marching upon Benares in large numbers, and well armed; we had not long to wait until the order came for us to stand to arms. A party was sent out to reconnoitre and guard the bridge which crosses a large nullah on the Azimghur and Benares road. Sunday night, however, passed without anything to disturb our equanimity, with the exception of the usual complement of alarm, &c., from the chicken-hearted. The soldiers remained under arms all night; and, on the following morning, were indulging themselves in a few Highland jokes at the expense of the alarmists of the previous night, when the bugles again sounded to arms. Between ten and eleven o'clock A.M., twenty artillerymen, with two guns, accompanied by seventy of the Highlanders, thirty of H.M.'s 37th regiment, thirty irregular cavalry, about the same number of the Loodiannah regiment, and a few gentlemen volunteers started off on the Azimghur road. The sun was scorching hot at the commencement of the march, but before long the rain began to pour down in torrents, which relieved us from its grilling effects. About eight miles from Benares we came in sight of the rebels, who mustered at least 2,000. As soon as the guns were brought within range, they opened fire upon the cowardly miscreants, who, though in numbers at least ten to one, threw down their arms and fled in all directions. H.M.'s 37th regiment were left in charge of the guns, and the rest of us started off in rapid pursuit. About 100 were cut down. The gallant Highlanders brought to the commanding officer twenty-seven caught in a village, who were immediately ordered to be shot, and their bodies to be left on the road as a warning to their treacherous and unworthy companions. The two villages were burnt to the ground. We had only one man wounded during the affray.—Hurkaru, July 17.

CALCUTTA.—The rich Gossains of Serampore have offered some of their houses for the accommodation of soldiers from the mutinied stations, free of cost to Government. The houses in question may contain upwards of a thousand men. Government intends hiring the house of the late Bahoo Mothormohun Sen, situate at Nimtolla-street, lately emptied by removal of the Free Church institution to the new building leased out by Messrs. Mackay and Co.

CASHMERE.—The following is the extract of a letter from Islamabad, dated the 27th June:—"The political atmosphere at Cashmere seems to clear up. Everything is quiet in that Happy Valley, and there is at present no probability of any disturbance as was anticipated after the demise of the Maha Rajah Golab Sing. (See Memoir, Indian Mail, No. 323, Aug. 31.) The son and the nephew of the deceased, it is hoped, will be reconciled, so that all the ancient political grudges in the raj durbar will be at an end. The young Maha Rajah, it is rumoured, is now endeavouring to secure the goodwill and popularity of his subjects. He intends to pay six months' arrears of salary to the soldiers. He has also in contemplation the revision of the tariff, which has been for some time past the subject of general complaint. Should this measure be carried into effect, it would afford the greatest satisfaction to manufacturers, weavers, and tradesmen in general in his highness's territories. The report of the mutiny of the sepoys of the native army of the British Government was heard in the durbar with the greatest regret and abhorrence. Both the Rajahs Rungbeer and Jowahir Sing have offered to render any assistance to the British Government it may require in order to prove their attachment to it."

The following is from a correspondent, dating from Seetabuldee on the 30th June:—

"I fear the news will be rather antique to you; but in case you may not have received any tidings of the event, permit me to inform you that we have, 'just in the nick of time,' detected a pleasant little plot to cut our throats. Keeping a sharp look out in these turbulent times, we discovered that three native officers of the Nagpore irregular cavalry were disseminating the germ of mutiny among their comrades; and it having transpired that they meditated the massacre of the whole of the European portion of the community, the triumvirate were forthwith hung pour encourager les autres—a prompt example which has had a very salutary effect, and has saved our carotides from the knife of the assassin."

CAWNPORE.—We have been favoured with the following extract of a letter from the entrenchment at Cawnpore, dated 26th June:—

"We are in a dreadful plight here. God only knows what is to become of all of us. Our able and gallant leader, Sir Hugh Wheeler, is now no more. He received a mortal wound in the sally made the day before yesterday, and was brought into the entrenchment to breathe his last amongst his own race. Nobly he fought and bravely he fell, most deeply and sincerely regretted by his little gallant band. His death has cast a gloom now greater than ever over our (shall I say doomed) fates. We are short of men, no provisions, no water, and hardly any ammunition left. Now we are thinking of consulting together to capitulate to the enemy, our only and last resource; but are not the 'tender mercies of the heathen cruel?' I send this letter by a trustworthy native servant of mine on to Allahabad, whence it will be posted to Calcutta. I know not if it will ever reach you. However, ere it reaches you our fate will be decided. Oh! the wretchedness around."

The above was written by an officer of rank in the entrenchment to a friend in Calcutta.

The following is from camp between Raneepore and Tewareepore, dated 14th July:—

"I wrote to you from Benares on the 6th, and the same evening started for Allahabad with S—, at 9 p.m. We went in a mail cart, with horses provided by government, and though the road was infested by a lot of most suspicious-looking characters, managed by good luck to reach our destination in safety by 2 p.m. the following day. There was a row at Benares the day we were there, but the wretched riff-raff who advanced on the station were beaten back in no time by the small force sent against them. We were most fortunate in arriving at Allahabad just when we did, for an hour afterwards General Havelock's division marched for Cawnpore; we thus had time to report ourselves, and get permission to accompany the force. The day before yesterday, after marching all night, we came upon a large body of the enemy in a strong position at Futtehpore, from which we succeeded in driving them, capturing eleven guns. It is very jolly to have commenced our operations so successfully. The troops behaved admirably, and underwent their tremendous fatigue, &c. most cheerfully. Many poor fellows died, though, from sun-stroke. I have been attached to the volunteer cavalry since I arrived, S— likewise. We are now two marches from Cawnpore, which place we hope to reach the day after to-morrow, provided we meet with no interruptions on the road. The enemy are reported to have broken down a bridge eight miles from where we are now, and to have taken up a strong position on this side of Cawnpore; it is likely we shall have some sharp fighting there, and I only hope the beggars will stand and let the Europeans get at them with the bayonet; this the horrible state of the ground prevented our doing the day before yesterday.

"July 15.—We have had two encounters with the enemy to-day, driving them on each occasion from the position they had taken up, and capturing their guns. By the way, you may hear General Havelock abused for not having advanced from Allahabad sooner than he did. I heard a lot of absurd reports on the subject while I was at Benares, some of which probably reached Calcutta. Now I know, from the best authority, that the general advanced the moment he could procure carriage for his division,—a most difficult matter at the present time; and I consider that no man could have done better than he has done since we left Allahabad. We had to disarm about one hundred and fifty irregular cavalry yesterday evening; they had misbehaved shamefully during the action of the 12th, hanging back when ordered to charge by their officers, and bolting when charged by the enemy's cavalry. We are all delighted to think they have been disarmed, as it was disgusting to have a lot of fellows acting with us upon whom we could not depend. As yet the volunteers are weak in point of numbers, mustering only some twenty-eight men, most of them officers belonging to regiments that have been disbanded. We are to be increased immediately, though, by about forty men, from the ranks of the Europeans, fellows who can ride.

"Being the only cavalry with the force we have lots to do, what with picquets and our own peculiar duties. We always form the advanced guard on the line of march, consequently whenever we come upon the enemy they get their range by practising upon us. At Futtehpore we rushed twice upon the enemy, once on infantry and once on cavalry, troopers of the regiments that mutinied at Cawnpore. It was great fun, for at that time most of our people were wretchedly mounted; however the scoundrelly troopers bolted directly they saw the Europeans coming at them. We are now better mounted than we were, having been allowed last night to take horses from the batch belonging to the irregular cavalry. At Futtehpore I was mounted on a buggy mare which had never had a saddle on her before. I got her at Allahabad; when trying to make a cut at a man on foot, she swerved so that I missed him, and he was as near as possible catching me on the leg with his tulwar; I then dropped my sword and tried my pistol, but directly I fired she reared straight on end and fell back, throwing me of course; luckily for me some one else engaged and shot the fellow immediately afterwards.

"We generally march between twelve and two, never reaching our ground until late; the heat is excessive; when not very hot one is generally wet through. I will write again soon—at present I am done up, from being exposed to the sun, though as long as there is any excitement one never feels it, so you must excuse this incoherent letter. I would not have missed all this for any money, and consider myself very lucky."—Englishman, July 24.

ALLAHABAD, JULY 18.—I send you an account of the operations now going on above Allahabad from the 12th to 15th inst. On the 12th inst., General Havelock's column having been joined by the advanced one under Major Renaud, first Madras Fusiliers, marched on Futtehpore where the rebels were said to be in force. On nearing there, about four miles off, where the column was to encamp, a party consisting of a few volunteer cavalry, and 50 of the first Madras Fusiliers was sent in the direction of the town to reconnoitre, with orders to retire on the main body, if attacked. This party very soon came back followed by a large body of insurgent cavalry, artillery, and infantry. The cavalry tried hard to close round the flank of our gallant little party, but could not do so, in consequence of the swampy nature of the ground on either side of the road. The main body got quickly under arms, and our artillery opened fire on the advancing insurgents, who were now seen in great force coming down the road. Our first round shot knocked over their leading gun, which established such a fright amongst them that they immediately abandoned three others. Our second shot is said to have knocked over an elephant with a brother of the Nana on it. A company of the 84th was then advanced in skirmishing order, a couple of our guns proceeding with them, regiments, in quarter distance column, covered by skirmishers, moving forward also. The First Madras Fusiliers were ordered to take a small hill to the right of the road, on which some of the insurgents were seen; however, on arrival at the top, to their disgust the enemy had vanished. Our artillery fired beautifully, and drove the enemy at once away from their guns, all of which, twelve in number, were captured by us. The insurgents bolted into Futtehpore, where they tried to make another stand in some large walled gardens, but were quickly turned out by our skirmishers and guns.

Away they fled, helter skelter through the town, our boys after them; they tried once more to make a stand on the other side but were quickly dispersed. Our loss was very trifling, not a European wounded; but some few died from sun-stroke afterwards. The captured guns consisted of mortars, 9 and 12-pounder guns, 24-pounder howitzers, and a siege gun: a little treasure, and lot of gun ammunition were likewise taken by us. It appears that the insurgents fell into a regular trap, they expected only to find Major Renaud's small column, and advanced to smash it; they had not heard of the junction of the two. Our troops bore their hardships nobly: they had marched eighteen miles that morning, and were just beginning to get their tents up when the rebels came down on them. The enemy's force consisted of about 800 cavalry (amongst them the second regiment) and 2000 infantry, and artillery with twelve guns. On the 15th instant, the force had another fight with the insurgents near the village of Aoung, four more guns were captured by us with but little loss; the rebel cavalry, however, had the audacity to charge down on the baggage but were beaten off. On this occasion the rebels were said to have fought much better than at Futtehpore. Their entrenchment in front of the village was captured after a two hours' fight, and another at a bridge was captured after a short but sharp resistance afterwards. I regret to say that Major Renaud of the 1st Madras fusiliers was severely wounded in the leg at this last affair. The Madras fusiliers are said by Brigadier-General Havelock in his despatch to Government, to have particularly distinguished themselves, and their Enfield rifle practice is highly spoken of. The 13th Irregular cavalry, and the 3rd Oude cavalry, behaved shamefully on the 12th instant, not only bolting from the enemy, but trying to drive away our baggage, they were disarmed and their horses taken from them. The steamer Berhampootee, with her force of 100 fusiliers under Captain Spursin, are keeping abreast of the land column. They had a gallant brush with the insurgents on the Oude side a few days back. A party had landed to collect fuel for the steamer, when a large body of insurgents came down on it; they were of course thrashed, and lost their only gun, which was gallantly captured by three privates of the 1st Madras fusiliers. Brigadier-General Neill left this on the 16th to join Brigadier-General Havelock, whose column should be at Cawnpore this day.—Madras Athenæum, August 4.

We are greatly rejoiced to hear that news was received in Poona yesterday of General Havelock having again beaten that ruffianly scoundrel the Nana Sahib, and taken his fort at Bithoor from him, scattering his forces in all directions, and taking thirteen of his guns. This cowardly villain, who dares not meet men, though he can torture and massacre defenceless women and children, has made an ignominious retreat, beaten at all points, and is now a houseless wanderer and a fugitive in the jungle, with a price set upon his head, and the 78th Highlanders on his trail.

General Havelock is, as well he may be, highly pleased with that glorious regiment the 78th Highlanders. In a speech that he made to them after the last thrashing he gave the wretch, we have above alluded to, whose name it is pollution to mention more than is absolutely necessary, General Havelock said, "I have been in 27 fights, and never saw a regiment behave better. I will say more, I never saw a regiment behave so well!"

It appears that in the fight which took place near Cawnpore, which led to its re-capture on the 16th ultimo and the first flight of the Nana, the 78th charged the guns three different times. No officers were killed, but of the men seventeen were killed and wounded. Major Stirling and three other officers of H.M.'s 64th regiment were wounded.—Poona Observer, August 1.

The victims of the horrible massacre were over 468, namely, 88 officers, 190 men of H.M.'s 84th foot, 70 ladies, 120 women and children of H.M.'s 32nd foot, including the whole European and Christian population massacred.

A letter from Cawnpore, dated the 22nd July, mentions that General Neill had joined General Havelock, and that the latter was then crossing the river with his force in the highest ardour for marching possible. After relieving the garrison at Lucknow, they will all return together to Cawnpore—whence, as soon as the expected reinforcements arrive, they will advance with all speed upon Delhi. General Neill will, we presume, remain in command at Cawnpore and of the districts around.

The following message from General Havelock to the Commander-in-Chief in Bengal, dated 20th July, was supplied by Government to the Calcutta press, and appears in the papers of the 23rd July:—

"Nana Sahib's followers appear to be deserting him. He has fled from Bithoor, which was occupied yesterday without resistance. Thirteen guns were found in the place. His palace is in flames. General Neill has joined me with a strong reinforcement of British soldiers. Lucknow quite safe for the present."

In the papers of the 24th July the following message from General Havelock to the Commander-in-Chief, dated 21st idem, is published:—

"Camp, Cawnpore.—I am free to cross the Ganges. Nana Sahib's force at Bithoor is entirely dispersed. We have brought from the place sixteen guns and a number of animals, set fire to his palace, and blown up his powder-magazine. A portion of my troops and five guns are already in position, at the head of the road to Lucknow. The whole army is full of hope that we shall soon be united on the left bank."

In our extra of Thursday last we announced that a report had just reached us, in time for only a hurried notice, that that incarnate fiend the Nana Sahib had committed suicide, and previously destroyed his whole family. This intelligence was conveyed to us in a letter from Cawnpore, dated the 22nd ultimo.

CAMP, ALLAHABAD, July 26, 1857.—This place at present is quiet, and has been so ever since I came to it on the 13th instant. We have reports now and then that some of the rebels are about to come in. About six days ago all in the fort were under arms the whole night, the artillery were at their guns with port fires lighted, but it turned out to be a false alarm.

I received a letter from Mirzapore on the 23rd, dated the 22nd, which says that all was quiet there. A wing of the 47th N.I., who are on duty at that place, are still loyal.

I have also received a letter from Ghazepore, which states that all was quiet there up to that date. The 63th N.I., who are on duty there, are still loyal.

I have also received a letter from Benares, dated the 24th. All was quiet up to that date. I was told in that letter that Captain Archer and forty-four men of the 78th Highlanders were to leave with three guns the following morning for Allahabad: we expect them here to-morrow. Three guns were brought here last Friday by a detachment of the 84th foot, who had been on duty at Gopee-gunge. They were relieved by a similar number of H.M.'s 37th regiment from Benares. We have small detachments arriving here very often, which greatly surprises the natives.

Although it is not mentioned in the following letter, there were twelve men (Europeans) of the force fell down dead from the heat of the sun when at Futtehpore. Our quarter-master-sergeant, John Tulloch, was one of them. He has left a young widow and two children to lament the loss of a good soldier, a kind husband and father, and as soon as his comrades got time they dug his grave with their bayonets and buried him.

"Camp, Cawnpore, July 22.—I received your kind and welcome letter, dated the 7th inst., on the 20th, and was rejoiced to hear that yourself and family, as well as all at Allahabad, were doing well. Yes, we had a little sharp work coming up to this place; the first at Futtehpore where we had nine 12-pounder guns opposed to us, as well as two 24-pounder ones, but by the will of Divine Providence we took the whole from the insurgents without a single scratch to the Europeans; but as for the native irregular cavalry I cannot speak well. They had seven of their men cut up, which was their own fault, as they did not charge, although the order was given three times; and when they did charge among the enemy they fired their carbines over their heads. They are all now disbanded, so we have no more trouble with fellows of this kind.

"The second encounter we had was twenty miles on this side of Futtehpore, where we had seventeen killed and wounded, but the enemy lost four times as many. There we took four guns, and the same evening we had another brush with them at Pandoo Nuddy, where we took three 14-pounder guns without any loss of life amongst us, but only five or six wounded. The fourth and last fight we had, was about two miles out of Cawnpore, where we took seven large 24-pounder guns and howitzers. We had very severe firing from the fort of the enemy from 2 p.m., till 7 p.m., when we lost in killed and wounded about 150 Europeans and Sikhs. The loss of the enemy we cannot tell, but we afterwards came across a house where 300 Sowars and Sepoys lay wounded, and we saw a tank full of dead bodies. We had to encounter about 12,000 of the enemy with only 2,000 Europeans and Sikhs; the latter behaved most gallantly, and lost ten killed and wounded. The same evening of this affair we encamped outside of Cawnpore, and next morning we entered the town straight to where we heard that 175 ladies and children were confined, but on our arrival there, awful, awful to behold, there were all their clothes, &c., strewn about the blood-stained ground. The place was a paved court-yard, and there were two inches of blood upon the pavement, and from the report that we got from the residents of the place it appears that, after we had beaten the enemy the evening previous, the sepoys and sowars entered the place where the poor victims were, and killed all the ladies and threw the children alive as well as the ladies' dead bodies into a well in the compound. I saw it, and it was an awful sight.

"It appears from the bodies we saw that the women were stripped of their clothes before they were murdered. We have picked up three women who had fled, and were protected by a native. We lost poor S. Carr; he was shot dead from his horse in a charge we had to make among 300 to 500 infantry. After he fell, poor fellow, he was hacked about the head to such an extent that we could hardly recognize him. The moulvie of Allahabad was killed at Futtehpore by our shot. Yesterday we went with a small force into Bithoor, where the Nana Sahib was, and walked into his palace without firing a shot. We fired the whole of the place, and burnt the whole of his houses and property, and took fifteen guns from there. The Nana has drowned himself, with his family. He had an intention of going to Lucknow, but when he got as far as the river, the cavalry and infantry deserted him. They are all gone off, after destroying their arms, to their different homes. Cawnpore is now as quiet as Allahabad. We are now crossing the river to Lucknow, and should it please the Almighty Providence to bring me back from there safe, I intend coming to Allahabad, and will then let you know all the news verbally."

Last week there was a native caught here with a large bundle of papers which implicated many natives in the mutiny. He was placed under a European sentry, with double handcuffs on; but he contrived to take one pair of them off and to break the other pair; he then jumped down from where he was imprisoned, but to one of the Highlanders, private T. McCann, did not allow him to go far—he levelled his musket and shot him dead on the spot.

Colonel Walter Hamilton, commanding the 78th Highlanders, had a horse shot under him.

It is stated by the correspondent of a Madras paper that Miss Wheeler, the daughter of Sir Hugh Wheeler, shot five mutineers with a revolver before she shared in the general slaughter.

DACCA.—Our correspondent at Dacca sends us the following dated July 1:—

"Our post-office authorities now refuse to deliver our letters and papers to our own men, and insist on sending them by the post-office peons. This causes an unnecessary and provoking delay of several hours, when every person, who has friends and relatives in the Upper Provinces is anxious to get his letters and papers as early as he possibly can. They have done another thing, but by whose authority they can best explain. They have taken out several men from the Bhanghy line and increased the number of letter carriers. Thanks to them, we do not now receive our parcels even in thirteen days, whereas in the good old times, when the march of improvement had not made much progress, we were accustomed to get them in five or six days. At this rate we hope to receive our parcels in one month within a few years more. I dare say this is exactly the time for every officer of Government to show off his importance, at the expense of the public.

"A gentleman has just arrived from Sylhet, and says all was quiet there. I am glad to say that the night patrolling is still continued here, and is likely to continue until we receive from Calcutta some reinforcements, or the country is settled. The conduct of the authorities, or rather of the magistrate and his assistant, is above all praise."

A person has just arrived here from Dacca, which place he left some time after the arrival here of the European sailors. He came by the water route, and describes the eastern rivers as far from being safe or free from danger to travellers. The numerous creeks and by-way channels which intersect the "Delta of the Ganges" swarm with lawless and freebooting pirates, who, availing themselves of the present troublous times, are committing rapine, plunder, and murder to a frightful extent. The man says that although voyaging in a budgerow with a European flag (nesan) he and his party made a narrow escape in two several localities from attempted robberies by these ferocious marauders. At night, native boats never move from one place to another, unless they aggregate to a large number, as any one straggling and lagging behind is almost sure to be pounced upon by armed parties, who find no difficulty in doing their bloody deeds "sub rosa," the current telling no tales; au contraire, affording the best means for the disposal of the bodies of the victims. Under such circumstances all we can say is, that the sooner effectual measures are taken, with a view to check them, the better for all parties.

STATE OF THE SOONDERBUNDS.—Mr. Lawler left Dacca for

Calcutta, by boat, on the 29th May, and returned on the 26th June, full nine days after the arrival of the marines. He performed the passage all alone, and did it in eighteen days to and from Calcutta, remaining a few days at the presidency, though there were many to dissuade him from the venture. Your informant must have passed through the Soonderbunds at the same time, or even earlier than the above gentleman, who, moreover, says he never found the least occasion to use the gun he had, nor were ever his suspicions aroused, during the passage, of any marauding parties being in the vicinity. The Ballisur is the only river which, from time immemorial, has had a bad name for dacoits, so that a country boat never ventures to cross after sunset. Mr. Lawler, however, sailed through this much dreaded river from 7 to 9 p.m. With reference to your informant's statement about "Boats not moving unless a number can collect together," I am led to conclude that he must be a perfect griffin in respect to the rivers of Eastern Bengal. The Soonderbund rivers are not like those elsewhere, where a boat may go on as far as the manjees wish. Here there is no choice left for an anchorage.

DELHI.—We continue the account of the progress before Delhi, from our last Mail, page 548.

July 11.—It has been raining the last three days; we are in a sad state, all wishing for fine weather. The enemy has not attacked us since the 9th.

July 12.—On the 9th instant, the mutineers turned out in force and gave us fight all along the right front and right flank. By all accounts they were perfectly mad from "churus" or "bhang," and fought more boldly than they ever did before. At one point, the mosque, in front of Hindoo Rao's house, where some fifty of the Guides were posted, the rebels left some eighty or ninety dead on the ground, many lying close to the walls; here also the Guides lost some six or seven men. On all points were the mutineers driven back with great slaughter, and their loss was considered as amounting to nearly 1,000 killed and wounded. From my own observation, and from what I have been told by competent persons, I should say the enemy lost at least 280 killed; the wounded were nearly all carried away, and many of their dead; and next morning, to the right of the Lahore gate, looking from our lines, we could perceive large fires, which, we presume, were caused by the Pandies burning their dead. The complete success of the repulse was considerably marred by our allowing about eighty of their irregular cavalry to get into camp round the general's mound; they actually rode nearly right through the camp, and tried to persuade a native troop of artillery to go away with them, but it was no go. When they were first discovered, Hill, of the artillery, and, I believe, a rough-rider, went in at them; poor Hill got a severe sword-cut on the head. Major Tombs, who always seems to be in the thick of everything, shot the sowar down; the 1st Fusiliers now turned out and shot down some of them. Capt. Fagan, of the artillery, got together some artillery recruits, and some other men, altogether about twenty-five, and followed them on foot, knocked over about fifteen of them, and amongst others the head sirdar—a great swell, in officer's appointments, and a Cashmere shawl round his shoulders. The sowars did not do as much mischief as they might have done in camp; but it was certainly a bold proceeding. In the confusion some wretched camp-followers were shot by our own men, through mistake. On the whole, we have to regret one officer of the 8th (Queen's); and of the whole force about 47 or 50 killed; one officer of the 8th (Queen's), one of the Guides, one of the Goorkhas, Hill of the artillery, and, I believe, Major Tombs, very slightly, and about 160 men of all hands wounded. These are dear victories, and the enemy can afford their loss, though five or six to one, better than we can. Rumour says they are running short of caps, which, if true, is good news. Some of the men say Jack Sepoy, at least a great number were fighting with matchlocks and tulwars only. The fight commenced at about 7 a.m. and lasted till nearly 4 p.m. All our troops, native and European, fighting magnificently, every soldier is looking forward to get inside those accursed red walls, which look us steadily in the face every day. On the 9th, the city fired incessantly during the whole day until their men were driven in. The Guides, 8th and 61st Queen's, and some of the 2nd European Bengal regiment followed them so close up to the walls, that they were fired upon from the city by small-arms. Pandey evidently was in a funk, and thought we were going to knock at the door and walk in, which we could easily do any day or night. The night of the 9th would have answered splendidly, for it had rained all day during the fight, and Jack Pandey does not like wet, I know; besides, he must have been down in the mouth at the drubbing he got, and his head would have ached from the effects of the "churus." I believe, the doubt about the assault at head-quarters, is, not as to our being able to take the place, but as to "what we are to do when we get inside." "What are we to do with our sick and our camp?" &c. &c. See, after we take the city walls, the chances are a panic will ensue, and half the sepoys will bolt; but, suppose they don't bolt, and the streets are commanded by guns, and the fort and palace are defended, then what is to be done? The few troops we have would be lost in so large a place; besides, half of them would be off to loot, &c. &c. Such are the arguments held out against the attack with our small force.—Delhi Gazette Extra, July 18.

Another account of the sortie of the 9th July, says, "There was some hard fighting at another picket, 'the Subzi Mundi,' but I have not heard particulars. The regiments principally engaged were the 8th and 61st, and Sikhs. It was raining all day and all night, and still raining. The following is a list of officers, I hear, who are wounded:—Ens. Stephens, 60th Rifles, since dead; Lieut. Hills, artillery, sword-cut on breast; Capt. Kemp, 5th N.I., hand and leg severely; Lieut. Eckford, Kumaon battalion, slightly; Capt. Burnside, 61st, slightly; Capt. Daniel, 8th, severely; Lieut. Griffith, 61st, severely; Ens. Andrews, 61st, slightly; Lieut. Pullan, 4th Sikhs, severely. Killed, 39 men and 3 drivers, artillery. Wounded, 169. It is stated the enemy's loss is 900."—Ibid.

July 15.—The insurgents again took up a position in the Subzee Munde on our right, and were again driven into the city by a portion of our force with heavy loss. The struggle was fierce, and the mutineers are said to have suffered more than on any former occasion. Our loss was about sixty Europeans killed and wounded. Native troops not known. Brig.-Gen. Chamberlain was wounded (in the arm), and some other officers; namely, Daniel, 1st Fusiliers; Roberts, artillery; Walker, Bombay engineers; Pollock, 35th; Shebbeare, 60th; De Brett, 57th; and Hawes, of the Guides. Private letters confirm the accounts of the heavy loss inflicted on the rebels on the 14th. From too great eagerness in the pursuit, our gallant soldiers got under grape and even musketry range of the walls of the city, and our loss was, consequently, greater than it might otherwise have been,—171 killed and wounded.

Another letter, dated July 15, says, "The enemy came out in force—about 9,000 men, with four guns, at 11 a.m. yesterday, with the intention of taking our batteries. They fought under cover until two o'clock, when they came to the front, and were beaten back into Delhi. Our people, too eager, followed them close under the walls. The enemy opened fire with grape and musketry from the walls; our loss in killed and wounded was heavy. It is a pity our people followed them, as up to the time of their retreat, we had only about six men hit. Major Turner, artillery, had his horse killed under him; Thompson, artillery, wounded in the thigh; Brig.-Gen. Chamberlain, adjutant-general, in shoulder; Chester and Daniel, of Goorkhas, wounded; Burns and Faithful, H.M.'s 75th, slightly; former on the knee, the latter in the arm. The above are the only casualties I can give you at present, and may be relied on as correct. The cavalry was not engaged."—Lahore Chronicle, July 22.

June 20.—Another affair with the mutineers at Delhi on the 18th instant. Particulars are not given, further than that our loss was small, and the enemy as usual driven back. They made a show of turning out on the 18th, but retired again very shortly within the city walls.

Our troops before Delhi have now been engaged in no less than twenty-two conflicts with the mutineers, who have poured in from all quarters to aid the rebel cause.

The mutineers have invariably been discomfited and forced to fly. As soldiers they have proved themselves despicable, and whatever their numbers, they will only venture to fight from under cover.

Lahore, July 25, 1857.—A telegraphic message received yesterday from the camp before Delhi reports, that on the previous days the mutineers had come out in force with field-guns round by the Cashmere gate, and moved upon our position at the Met-calle Battery, under cover of the fire of heavy guns from the city walls. They were taken in flank by a force under Brigadier Showers, when they fled precipitately, saving their guns only by the rapidity of their flight. Our loss was small, but we had a few officers wounded:—Col. Drought, 60th Rifles; Col. Seaton, 35th N.I.; Maj. Turner, artillery; Capt. Money, artillery; and Lieut. Law, 10th regt. N.I., was killed.

Lahore, July 26, 1857.—The report from the camp before Delhi is, that up to the evening of the 24th all had remained quiet. Our wounded officers and men doing well.

Lahore, July 27, 1857.—Up to 4 p.m. of the 25th instant, the mutineers at Delhi remained perfectly quiet. They are reported to have been joined by a body of fanatics from Tonk, a class that are found, generally, to have a remarkable aversion to close quarters. Much rain had fallen at Delhi.

The intelligence of the arrival of a European force at Cawnpore, under the personal command of Sir Patrick Grant, is further confirmed by accounts received from the camp before Delhi. H.M.'s 35th, 37th, 64th, 78th (Highlanders), and the Madras Fusiliers, are said to compose it, and another regiment is also mentioned, probably the Sikh regiment of Ferozepoor.

Lahore, July 28, 1857.—All quiet at Delhi up to 4 p.m. on the 26th inst. Much talk reported among the mutineers of intended great doings and attacks upon our position, but nothing further.

Lahore, July 29, 1857.—There is no news from Delhi, where all remained quiet up to the evening of the 27th. Much rain had fallen.

The following is from the Englishman:—"The Governor-General has directed the lieutenant-governor of the North-West Provinces that on the fall of Delhi no promises of whatsoever kind must be made to the king of Delhi and his royal family, nor even enter into any engagements; but that they must be kept in close confinement."

THE DECCAN.—From Sattara we learn, under date the 5th inst. that six natives had been blown away from the mouths of guns, for having committed murder and robbery. People from all parties of the country came to see them executed; but as the troops were ready in case of a disturbance, everything passed off quietly.

Bombay Times.

Colonel G. Le Grand Jacob, of the 27th regt. N.I., has been appointed to command the troops in the districts of Sawunt Warree and Kolapero, and has been invested with the powers of a special political commissioner within those limits. A better selection could not have been made, as Colonel Jacob, besides being a thorough soldier, possesses considerable knowledge of the native character, and will therefore be usefully employed on the present occasion.—Bombay Times.

Tuesday evening's Gazette contained the order for the formation of a movable column under the command of Brigadier Whitlock. The column is to consist of a wing of H.M.'s 74th Highlanders, a squadron of the 12th lancers, a squadron from the 3rd and 5th light cavalry respectively, two guns of the C troop horse artillery, and two guns from the C company 1st battalion artillery, with the 50th N.I. It seems to us not at all unlikely that the column, which is to proceed on service wherever required, will be employed in the first instance in looking after the Rohillahs, who lately committed some outrages in the Cuddapah district.—Madras Spectator, July 23.

DINAPORE.—The mutiny of the 7th, 8th, and 40th regiments at Dinapore, has been officially announced in the Calcutta papers, in which it was stated that General Lloyd, with H.M.'s foot, was in close pursuit of the mutineers, who were likely to be destroyed. We have heard very strong animadversions, which appear to be just, passed by those able to judge, on the management, or rather total absence of it, of General Lloyd, at Dinapore. The mutinous feelings of the native regiments at that station were known several weeks before they broke into open mutiny, and a most favourable opportunity offered when they might have been disarmed; but the general maintained that the sepoys were loyal, and the arrangements for that purpose were discontinued. On the morning of the 25th July, these same regiments became notoriously and publicly mutinous, refusing to obey an order to give up the caps in their possession, which order ought never to have been issued. Even then, no steps were taken to disarm or coerce them, so that they had ample time to make their arrangements, and at three o'clock in the afternoon, the mutineers marched away without opposition, with their arms and accoutrements. H.M.'s 10th regiment, and a strong party of H.M.'s 5th and 37th regiments, were available on the spot; but no attempt was made to lead them against the enemy, till too late. The general himself, we are told on good authority, went on board a steamer, and others kept out of the way; so that the opportunity of punishing the mutineers was thrown away in broad daylight. What were the authorities thinking about, and who is to blame? The Commander-in-Chief and Governor-General being close at hand, why was General Lloyd so long left at Dinapore, to follow in the steps of his brother general at Meerut? The mutineers have cut off the communication by telegraph between Calcutta and Allahabad, and the safety of the grand trunk road is threatened, if not actually interfered with. The country around Benares, we are told, is quiet, and the city is overcrowded, although the people would rise if they dared.

DEHRA ISMAIL KHAN.—The 39th regt. Native Infantry at Dehra Ismail Khan was quietly disarmed on the 14th instant.

FUTTYGURH.—A private letter from the North-West, received yesterday, states that the 41st N.I., who had mutinied at Seetapore, made their way to Futtighurh, and attempted to loot the treasury. But they were resisted by the 10th N.I., and a bloody battle ensued between the two regiments. It is to be hoped the example will be followed by other mutinous corps.—Phoenix, July 17.

FUTTEHPORE.—A private letter received from General Havelock's camp gives some further particulars of the action at Futtiehpore:—

"Among the enemy appeared the 2nd light cavalry (which had mutinied at Cawnpore), mounted, and in uniform. Some twenty of them came forward, calling out to our irregulars to come and join their 'Bhaees.' Lieut. Palliser, of the irregulars, called on his men to draw their swords; but only six did so, and the 2nd cavalry then rushing forward, succeeded in dismounting Palliser. On this, a number of the irregulars attacked the 2nd, and the latter were beaten off. Seven of the irregulars lost their lives in the affair. Of the 2nd cavalry I only heard of one body being found on the field. In fact the rebels did not wait to be killed. It appears that they had no idea that we were so close to them, and were in loose marching order when we came upon them. Our Enfield rifles opened upon them at a distance from their muskets, which were of no use; and a few rounds from our artillery completed their discomfiture, and they fled precipitately."—Phoenix, July 20.

FUTTEHABAD.—The following is from Futtiehabad, dated the 11th July.—General Van Cortlandt's camp reached this place on the 9th instant. It is situated midway between Hissar and Sirsa; and the Bhuttees sacked and burned the houses of some of the wealthy Mahajuns in it, and murdered some of the people of the small village without the town. During the evening of the 9th, intimation was brought that some of the rebellious Bhuttees intended making an attack on the camp during the night; half of our force was therefore placed under arms; but the information proved false, as no enemy appeared, nor were any collected, as stated, in the village of Begree; some three hours south of our camp.

GWALIOR.—The following is from Agra, dated June 19th 1857:—"The rumour of mutiny at Gwalior, of which I wrote to you the day before, has proved but too true. Several officers and men have been killed, but such as could escape from Morar towards the rajah's cantonment, were saved, and have come into Agra. There is an on-dit that the rajah has been murdered for siding with us, and Beja Bacc raised to the munsud. From one who was a witness of the Gwalior business, I have been able to glean the following facts, and give them to you as correctly as I can. On Saturday last, a day previous to the mutiny, some houses were on fire, and several parties, with a lady or two, had driven over, the former to render assistance, and the latter to bring in the family of the sufferers. On their arrival at the ground, they saw the sepoys readily bearing a hand, and dragging out property while the houses were blazing away. There was nothing that indicated a spirit of mutiny, and their offering ready assistance dispelled any doubt or doubts there may have been regarding their fidelity. Some of the villains, however, assembled there, seemed to carry a degree of impertinence about them, and one was heard to say in an undertone, 'Aj to az ka tamasha dekhne ayaan, kulkooch aur tamaasa a dekhna pare ga.' This was the first mutinous language heard; but as it was not spoken very explicitly nor very loudly, the party that heard this only mentioned the circumstance to a few, but did not fail to guard himself against a sudden outbreak. Sunday passed as a very quiet one, the officers seemed confident of their men, and there was no sign of anything mutinous until after gun-fire, when the bugle sounded, and the troops marched out. The mischief began on the parade-ground. Some officers were here shot at, and others escaped; but this did not satisfy the mutineers: they made towards the bungalow of the brigadier, called him out vociferously, and sent in shots after him on his non-appearance. He was miraculously, however, saved; for as he attempted to escape out of his closet, a sepoy is said to have laid hold of his hands, and to have quietly cut out of the compound in the dark towards the ravines. Here is one instance of the fidelity of some of the sepoys, and goes much in defence of the lieutenant-governor's proclamation; for it is not wise to destroy the grateful with the ungrateful. The insurgents, however, on not finding Brigadier Ramsay, ransacked the whole of his property, and then set fire to his bungalow. And this is not the only instance of a sepoy's fidelity. There was another officer who was roused by his guard at 10 p.m.; and out of the nine that were in his compound, one is said quietly to have gone to him and said:—'Khamin, bhago, sub bigur gaya.' This sepoy had just moved off when the rest came up in a body, saying, 'Houses are on fire, shall we load?' The officer observed that it was folly to load muskets to put out a fire. On this they retired, and the officer went into his bungalow, whence, through a window of his closet, he descried the whole of the guard quietly loading. He roused his servant at once, and escaped behind his house. Two shots were fired at him, but did not tell. He then made toward the bed of the river, and escaped among the ravines, four shots again whizzing over his head and that of his khansamah. Happily none told. Consternation became general at this time, and the Christian portion of the place, man, woman, and child, were flying in all directions towards the rajah's. It is, indeed, a matter of wonderment how so many ladies, with children, did escape. Three more sepoys are said to have saved the lives of a lady and children, by excluding them at the time the bloodthirsty villains were going from bungalow to bungalow, on the terrace of a kotee; and after they moved up, and were absorbed in a loof in another house, to have brought them down, and safely to have escorted them out of the real danger. Plundering and destroying property by fire was then the order by them. All those who could escape, were sent in the next day by the rajah to Agra; but before they had come in only a part of the way, a sowar is said to have come in with intelligence that there was mutiny in the durbar. The cavalry, on hearing this, at once dashed off, saying that they must go, leaving the escorted on the road alone. In this unprotected state they went towards the dominions of the rajah of —, who was kind enough to give his men to bring them into Agra. But they are said to be such a set of rascals, impertinent and insolent, that those under their charge expected every moment to be butchered: for they looked most barbarously towards them, and tried to imitate parties speaking English, and then to satirize them. Happily, however, they were not on mischief bent, and all are now safe in Agra. It is a pity to see some of the ladies bruised and cut, in escaping through the kunkury and thorny ravines.

"P.S.—Another rumour has reached, that the maharajah is not killed. He was bent upon going down upon the insurgents, but the Bacc would not allow him, saying that he was sure to be killed, and, as he has no legitimate issue, the estate would be confiscated, and he, and his wife, her daughter, ruined. She advised him, therefore, to send the minister Dhunker Rae, who is said to have been killed. The mutineers are gone towards Jhansie, —some say towards Oojen. We have no official report, but are glad they have not visited us."—Harkaru, July 13.

HYDERABAD.—The Parsee, Mahomedan, and Hindoo inhabitants of Chudderghat have presented addresses to Colonel Davidson, expressive of their regret at the recent attack upon the Residency. Colonel Davidson returned a suitable reply, thanking them for their loyal professions, and urging them to prove their sincerity by using their influence with their neighbours to preserve peace and tranquillity.

Our letters from Hyderabad are to the 23rd instant, up to which time all continued quiet. The Residency was being barricaded, however, and put in as complete a state of defence as possible, but it was not at all thought likely that any further hostile demonstration would be made against it, either by marauding Rohilla or infuriated fanatic. Toora Baz Khan, as we stated yesterday, has been apprehended; he was not captured until after having received three severe wounds. His colleague, the moulvie, for whose apprehension also a large reward has been offered, is still at liberty; but it is strongly suspected that he is screened somewhere in the city. In the attack on the 17th, not a single scratch was reported on our side. Of the Rohillas, it was reported to the minister that thirty-two had been slain—there were no returns of the wounded.—Madras Spectator, July 28.

INDORE.—We learn that Brigadier Stuart's column reached Mhow on the 30th July; and Col. Durand, the resident at Indore, who accompanied it, has also arrived there. His Highness the Holkar had sent his vakeels and courtiers to receive Col. Durand, who had also summoned the vakeels of the surrounding chiefs, who formerly waited upon him at Indore, to attend his court at Mhow, where he will remain until the residency is repaired.—Bombay Times.

JHELUM.—One hundred and twenty of the mutineers of the 14th N.I. that escaped from Jhelum have been seized in Rajah Goolab Sing's territories, and will be summarily dealt with by the Jhelum authorities. Ten men also of the 14th N.I., who had made their way down to Jhung, were apprehended there by the police. They were in a state of great exhaustion, and two of them, apparently native officers, had destroyed themselves.

JUBBULPORE.—The Kamptee field force arrived at Seonee on the 22nd July, and halted there until the 26th, to enable the D. company of artillery to join them. They were then to push on to Jubbulpore, restore order there, and then (Major Erskine accompanying them) to proceed to Saugor and Jhansi. All is quiet at Jubbulpore as regards the Bengal corps there, who are supposed to be staunch to the back-bone, to use the favourite Bengal phrase. Some of the Zemindars about Jubbulpore are giving trouble, and will be the first to receive the reward of their misdeeds. The whole of the Europeans, about forty, with their families, safe in agency-house.—5th July.

JUBBULPORE, AUGUST 4TH.—All quiet here, and the regiment is behaving well. The movable column from Kamptee arrived here on the 2nd, and will march from this as soon as the weather will allow of its doing so. A great quantity of rain fell last night.

MADRAS.—The following troops from Madras have been ordered to embark for Calcutta, viz., the 27th N.I. from Vellore, the 17th N.I. from Madras, the 8th Regiment of Light Cavalry, and a native troop of Horse Artillery from Bangalore, and a Golundauze Company from the Mount. The 17th N.I. will be conveyed by the steamers Punjab and Semiramis, and the 27th N.I. by the Coromandel and Auckland, which last vessel had not arrived at Madras at the date of the last advices. The cavalry were not expected to arrive there in less than three weeks, and it was not exactly settled when and how the Golundauze should take their departure. It was understood that Colonel Carthew will go in command of the force as Brigadier, but this was not quite certain.

Three new native regiments are, we learn, to be permanently added to the Madras army, but they will be considered extra to the establishment which now exists, and officered from it on the irregular scale, although reckoned regular troops. A commandant, adjutant, and quarter-master, are to be allotted to each. The men will be enlisted in the northern, southern, and centre divisions.

MEWAR, JAORAH, AND REWAH.—MEWAR.—We have understood upon good authority that Mr. Shore, agent in Mewar, lately proceeded to Oodypore, for the purpose of amicably settling the disputes which have unfortunately arisen between the Rana and his sirdars, and thereby reconciling the former with the latter. The ostensible cause of the disagreement appears to have been the revocation by the Rana of the old koulnamah, or deed of agreement, entered into between him and his sirdars, and the introduction of a new one, and the conditions of which had given great umbrage to the chief. Mr. Shore accordingly prevailed upon the Rana to suppress this new document, and to invite his sirdars, promising that their wishes should be complied with. But, strange to say, these advances had no effect, for nearly all of them refused to obey the summons of their liege lord. Nothing has been known as to their real complaints and motives.—Malwa Akbar of Indore, June 23. JAORAH.—It gives us much pleasure to announce that everything is quiet at Jaorah. No disturbance has, up to the time of our advices, happened to destroy the peace and tranquillity that prevail there. Since the day that reports have been flying out relative to the plundering by the insurgents of this place and that, and committing bloodshed and similar other atrocities, his Highness the Nawab has adopted the precaution of ordering strong guards and sentries all over the place, and of placing guns at prominent points. He has also issued stringent orders upon all his subjects, commanding them to allow no insurgents or suspected persons to enter any village or town within his territory, but either to arrest them, or to put them to death at once if any resistance is offered. We highly commend these prudent measures of his highness, and hope they will prove sufficient to produce the desired effect. REWAH.—The Maharajah of Rewah returned to his capital from a visit to the shrine of Juggurnauth at Pooree, in Orissa, on the 9th instant. On the following day he held a durbar, where he received Capt. Osborne, agent at his court, who informed him of the successes of the British force appointed to chastise the mutineers at Delhi. The Maharajah immediately after ordered a salute to be fired in honour of these victories.

We also learn that a similar horse field-battery is to be organized at Poona.—Sindian Extra, July 19.

NEEMUCH.—Ladies and officers of the mutinied corps arrived at Oudypore, and hospitably received by the Maharana.—7th June.

OUDE.—16th July.—Messrs. Astell, Horne, and Simpson, the officials of Azimgurh, with Major Burroughs and the officers of the 17th N.I. left Benares this morning in company with Capt. Boileau and other officers proceeding to join the Goorkha force at Goruckpoor. They were to have started on Monday the 6th, but were prevented by the approach of the Dobee and Deogaon Rajpoots, and the unsafe state of the road. The second company of the 65th N.I. recently sent from Ghazee-pore, will I hope enable them, with the vigorous aid of Mr. Venables to keep the district in order.

All quite quiet at Goruckpoor on the 12th. The Goorkha force of 3,000 men was expected there on the 20th en route to Lucknow.

THE PUNJAB.—It is said that almost all the hill chiefs of the Punjab have offered their services, in case they should be required by Government.

The total number of Sealkote mutineers and camp-followers, sent in by the Jusrouta authorities, amounts to 572.

An émeute took place in the jail at Googaira on the night of the 26th instant. The prisoners rose en masse, and overpowered the sentries inside the jail. The guard outside, however, killed and wounded about fifty of them, most of the latter mortally. Eighteen prisoners managed to effect their escape, owing to the darkness of the night.

A strong party of the 55th regiment native infantry, which attempted to proceed via Khogun and Koubar towards Cashmere, were attacked in a difficult pass in the hills by the Syuds of Khogun and people of Koubar, well beaten, and 32 of their number were seized and sent in prisoners to Major Becher, commanding in Hazara, under whose orders they were tried, sentenced and executed.

Lieutenant McMahon, assistant commissioner, who had proceeded towards the frontier of Maharaja Goolab Sing, with about 300 men of new levies from Sealkote, reports 78 of the 9th light cavalry and 46th regiment native infantry, having been sent in by the Maharajah's people; 68 of them have been summarily dealt with, and the remainder, chiefly commissioned and non-commissioned officers, have been reserved for the present, in order that a more formal and public example may be made of them. Fifty of the 9th light cavalry horses have also been recovered.

At Mooltan, Subadar Major, Nahur Khan, of the 69th N.I., has been convicted before a general Court-martial of mutinous and seditious conduct, and executed by being blown away from a gun in the presence of all the troops paraded for the purpose; some others of this regiment are to be brought to trial, and great praise is due to Major C. Chamberlain, who, aided by some of his excellent native officers (in especial Meer Burkut Allee, Wurdee Major), has succeeded in discovering the base treachery meditated by these miscreants, and establishing it by proof. One hundred and twenty-one of the Sealkote mutineers, brought in from the Jusroutah Il-laquas, have been summarily executed.

A fanatical Moulvie from Swat had moved down and set up his standard in the notorious village of Nirunjaie, on the eastern border of Eusufzaie, where with a number of his followers he was attacked on the 21st inst., by detachments from the mountain train battery from Wild's and Vaughan's corps of Punjab infantry and some police horse. The village was carried by assault after a stout resistance, fifty-five of the enemy were killed and many wounded. The Moulvie contrived to make himself scarce early in the fight, having apparently, on a nearer view of them, no relish for the glories of martyrdom.

The heat endured by our troops during this short expedition is reported to have been excessive, and nine sepoy (out of forty struck down) were killed by coup de soleil.

PONDICHERRY.—A French mercantile house has received letters from Pondicherry, stating that they are greatly alarmed there at the conduct of the Mahomedan inhabitants, who have expressed their determination to have their processions in the heart of the town opposite the Catholic church. The governor has only thirty sepoy, and is therefore quite unable to control them. The French, however, are not likely to submit quietly to insult, and as they have a force in China, the unruly Mahomedans may find out their mistake too late.—Calcutta Englishman, July 25.

RUTNAGHERRY.—The European residents here, fearing that a disturbance would break out, all left in a precipitate manner, and embarked on board the steamer Berenice, which arrived in the harbour on the 8th August.

SAUGOR.—On the 27th June the whole of the Christian population were secure within the fort.

SOUTHERN MAHRATTA COUNTRY.—We understand that a detachment of H.M.'s 86th regiment, 200 in number, under the command of Major Stuart, and a company of the 33rd regiment, besides a detachment of artillery, with two guns, have been embarked on board the Hon. Co.'s steamer Victoria, which has landed them at one of the southern ports of the presidency of Bombay. These troops have been equipped for field service, so that we may hope soon to hear of some mimic warfare in the Southern Mahratta country.

SINDE.—The Commissioner in Sind has recommended to Government the entertainment of a Pilot Establishment for this Port. Captain Daniell, Superintendent of the Indus Flotilla, has recommended Mr. Masterton, Acting Master of the H. C. Steamer Berenice as Head Pilot, and Mr. Layman, Qr. Mr. of the Keddewar Flat, as assistant.

MAJOR NORTH, lately appointed Executive Engineer at Kurra- chee, and who arrived by the last steamer, has been selected by Government to superintend the Harbour improvements proposed to be carried out according to Mr. Walker's suggestions. The gentleman deputed by Mr. Walker, at the request of the Court of Directors, to prosecute the surveys and collect all the other information necessary to arrive at a decision, as to the expediency of making such a great expenditure of public money, as the improvement will involve,—may be expected here in August, when no time will be lost in instituting the necessary inquiries, and carrying out the wishes of the Court.

THE ARTILLERY DIVISION.—The general commanding the division has authorized Colonel Hutt, C.B. commanding the artillery in Sind, to organize a horse field-battery at Kurra- chee with the 9-pounder guns now in store. It is in contemplation to purchase horses from the native dealers here to complete the established proportion allowed to a troop of horse artillery and European battery. Lieutenant T. M. Harris, of the 3rd troop H.A. has been selected to command this battery; and 100 volunteers from the gallant 2nd European regiment light infantry are to be transferred for manning the guns. A large number of drivers and gun lascars have already been enlisted; and pending the arrival of Kafilas from Afghanistan with horses, the mules that have recently arrived from Bushire are to be attached to the new battery. We have no doubt that in the course of a month Lieutenant Harris will be able to report his new battery in good working order; then we can spare the 3rd troop to go where their services are more urgently required.

THE SCINDE RAILWAY.—It will gladden the shareholders of the Scinde Railway Company, as well as the inhabitants of this province, to hear that active operations are likely to be commenced without further delay. Fifty acres of ground lying adjacent to the road connecting Ghizrie with the Bunder, have been set apart for the erection of the necessary offices and sheds of the company at this station, and as a preliminary work, a mound four feet in height is to be raised thereon to form a foundation. We believe this operation will be begun next week, and we are glad to learn that a number of men who have been employed in the land-transport corps are to be engaged on it, until such time as their services may be again required by Government. It is impossible to move troops likely that we will have a large force assembled here before that time. It is therefore a prudent step on the part of our commiss- these men on full pay, when they can be dispensed with, and it is equally prudent in the railway company's agent to take advantage of their presence to begin this work at once.

The present effective strength of the forces in the Scinde division is as follows:—

The General commanding the Scinde division has appointed Lieut.-Col. Hutt, C.B., commanding artillery, to take direct control of the Ordnance department in Scinde, as of a field force, subject to the approval of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief. — Scindian, July 29.

SEALKOTE.—On the departure of the mutineers from Sealkote, Captain Lawrence (on account of the illness of the deputy commissioner) was deputed to that station, with full powers, to restore order and punish the miscreants who, in collusion with the mutineers, had plundered the station. Captain Cripps was associated with him in the inquiries. Several persons were hanged; amongst others the jail darogah, and others were imprisoned. A large proportion of the plundered property was restored, and a fine of Rs. 7,500 imposed on the surrounding villagers, to reimburse, in some measure, the sufferers.

The following is a graphic account of the destruction of the Sealkote mutineers, by a civil officer of rank, with Brig. Nicholson's force:—

"Goordaspore, July 16, 1857, 11 30 A.M.

"I have this moment galloped in from Trimmoo, after witnessing the complete discomfiture of the remnant of the Sealkote mutineers; the capture of their gun; and their dispersion into the Ravee. I send you a capital plan of the action by Dyas. The mutineers had their gun in a breastwork on the very margin of the island. Bourchier's howitzer and two nine-pounders were placed on the very margin of the mainland on this side, the intervening distance being at least 1,150 yards.

"At daybreak this morning, the 52nd began to be crossed over to the island, about three-quarters of a mile below, where the rebel gun was. There being only two small boats, the operation was a tedious one. While this was going on, Bourchier had some very pretty practice with round shot and shrapnell, at the enemy's gun, which replied very well indeed with round shot, but only indifferently with grape. One round shot knocked over four of Bourchier's horses. Not a man was touched.

"About seven o'clock, when the greater part of the infantry was crossed, Nicholson himself went over and advanced, attended by half a dozen of sowars only, to reconnoitre the enemy's position. He then went back and brought up the infantry. The skirmishers of her Majesty's 52nd led, and I think there were two lines of 52nd in support. It was uncommonly pretty to watch the advance from this side. Poor Brigadier Brind's khansamah, who is said to have been the chief artillerist of the enemy, now turned his big gun round to bear upon the approaching infantry. Bourchier and Colonel Daves, who now brought two of their horse-artillery guns to bear, plied the enemy with round shot and shrapnell. He heeded it not, but gave our infantry two, if not three, rounds of grape. The skirmishers doubled, and in a minute had taken the gun. It was helter-skelter with the mutineers. A few stood at the gun, or were under the bank near it: these were speedily disposed of. The rest ran to the head of the island, were followed by our fellows, and took to the water: many must have been drowned; numbers were like mud-larks on sand-banks and small islands; and how poor Pandey is to get out of it, I know not. There is deep water on the other side, and the villagers are up. There are only one or two places on this side where they can cross; these are watched, and the zemindars are all alive. I rode about two miles up the left bank with Boswell's Shere Dils. The congratulations of the people were sincere. 'Moobaruck-bad' was said heartily. Lots more of carriages and buggies, camp equipage, &c., was found on the island. Nicholson left Adams to collect everything.

"The accounts vary as to the number of fighting men on the island. There were a great number of camp-followers.

"All agree in saying that at least eighty mutineers were killed this morning. Our loss is, I rejoice to say, not more than four men of the 52nd wounded. The thing was right well planned, and right well executed.

"My first and very brief campaign is over. It is more exciting and interesting a good deal than hearing appeals. But I must get back to the old dry work. I will see that all is kept going for securing the runaways, and then purpose making the best of my way back to Lahore. The Sealkote mutineers have indeed been frustrated in their plan. They fully believed that we had nothing but a few irregulars and police to meet them, and they were confident of breaking through.

"Their discomfiture is complete."

LATEST OFFICIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

LAHORE.—July 22.—The usual message from headquarters did not reach Lahore yesterday; but it appears that a column of our troops had been ordered out on the 19th to drive back the enemy and seize a battery. The result is not yet known.

Shah Mull, a famous Jat leader, had been attacked by a force from Meerut, and he himself killed and 600 of his followers.

Brigadier-General Nicholson proceeds at once to Delhi with large reinforcements, both European and native.

The chief commissioner having arrived at Lahore, bulletins will, in future, be issued under the signature of the military secretary.

July 23, 1857.—The Punjab continues to be perfectly tranquil. Accounts from Kurnal state that Captain Hughes's corps of Punjab cavalry (the 5th regt.), with a party of the mounted police under Ressaldar Soodh Sing, a few Putteela infantry, and two guns, were employed to coerce a large village named Bulleem, the zemindars of which seemed disposed to withhold the Government revenue, and to oppose the Government officers. The troops met with considerable opposition, but carried and destroyed the village. The zemindars were subsequently fined by the civil authorities. This village does not form a part of the Punjab.

The telegraph messages of yesterday report all quiet at Delhi. Much talk among the mutineers of a great attack upon the British position, but no attempt to assail it.

July 24th, 1857.—There is no news of any importance from Delhi. From intelligence gleaned at Umballa, there are great discussions amongst the mutineers. The want of percussion caps is mentioned, but some very clever man in the city had volunteered to make them! There had been no more fighting up to the 22nd instant. Seven additional regiments of Punjab infantry are at once to be embodied from the four augmentation companies, which were directed to be raised on the disturbances first breaking out. They will be formed at the stations of Umballa, Phillour, Mooltan, Jhelum, Pesbawur, Kohat and Derha Ismael Khan, and we shall soon be in a position to send further reinforcements to the army before Delhi in considerable strength, should it prove necessary.

Accounts have been received from Jodhpore of the 19th instant; all well there, and also at Ajmere on the 17th. Ajmere and Neemuch are held by detachments of H.M.'s 83rd foot, Bombay lancers, and 12th regiment Bombay native infantry, European horse artillery, and Jodhpore legion.

Captain Greensill, H.M.'s 24th foot, was killed by an accidental shot from the Metcalfe battery at Delhi, on the night of the 21st instant. This unfortunate officer appears to have lost his life from neglecting to answer the challenge of a sentry.

Mil. Sec. to the Chief Commissioner.

THE RAJPOOT CHIEF, MAHA RAJAH TUKHUT SING OF MARWAR, has promised to send 2,000 cavalry sowars and as many infantry men, with an adequate number of sirdars, or officers, to aid the British Government in quelling the insurrection of the sepoys.

THE NEW PATENT LAW will shortly come into operation in India, the home authorities having decided that the Governor-General, as the vice-regal authority in India, by virtue of his office, is empowered to grant letters patent.—Hurkaru.

The bark Whelhelmine Marie fell in with the English ship Great Cumberland with foretop-mast gone, in lat. 18° 50', north long. 86° 7' east. She was from London to Calcutta, 109 days out on the 1st of July.—Phenix.

INSTRUCTORS IN MUSKETRY.—The appointment of officers as regimental instructors in musketry, being authorised in Her Majesty's regiments at a rate of pay of 2s. 6d. per diem, the Court of Directors, we perceive from the Calcutta Gazette, have sanctioned this arrangement for regiments of European infantry in India, Queen's and Company's, so soon as they shall have been supplied with a sufficient number of Enfield rifles.

MR. R. SCOTT MONCRIEF has been appointed auditor of the accounts of Emigration Agency for the Mauritius at Calcutta. He is to ascertain by personal enquiries amongst the coolies or otherwise, that the charges made on their account are perfectly disbursed.

SIR JOHN LAWRENCE arrived at Lahore on the evening of July 19.

THE RELIEF FUND.—The Calcutta subscription towards the Relief Fund amounts to upwards of 9,100l.

MR. M. GUBBINS, has, according to the Englishman, remonstrated against the appointment of Major Banks as Chief Commissioner of Oude, as unjust to his own claims for promotion.

COMMISSARIAT ACCOUNTS.—The Court of Directors, in a recent despatch, expressed great satisfaction at the promptitude with which the annual report of Commissariat expenditure for 1856-57 was submitted to Government. The Court of Directors have also been highly pleased with the results of the report. This reflects great credit on the auditor of Commissariat accounts, who is an indefatigable public servant.—Englishman.

DEATH OF MAJOR RENAUD.—We regret to announce the death of Major S. S. C. Renaud, of the 1st Madras fusiliers, who died of the wound he received in the action of Nundoo Nuddy. He is the only officer of General Havelock's force who has been killed. Such a man at this moment can ill be spared. Major Renaud served during the war in Burmah in 1852-53, with the force under Major-General Godwin, C.B., at the capture of Pegu on the 21st November, 1852, at the relief of Pegu on the 14th December, 1852, at Kalreth on the 17th, at Moutsanganoo on the 18th December, 1852, and at the investment of Pegu from 4th to 8th January, 1853.—Englishman.

COLONEL N. B. CHAMBERLAIN, of the 16th N.I., has been appointed adjutant-general of the army, vice Chester, killed in action. This distinguished officer, who has long commanded the Punjab irregular force, served throughout the Afghan campaigns of 1839-40-41-42, during which he was attached to Christie's corps of irregular cavalry. He was wounded on six different occasions, and received two medals:—Ghuznee, 1839; Candahar, Ghuznee, and Cabul, 1842. Colonel Chamberlain was also present with the Governor-General's body-guard at the battle of Maharajpore (bronze star); and was employed with the army of the Punjab at the battles of Chillianwallah and Goojerat (medal and clasp).

DEATH OF MAJOR G. M. PRENDERGAST.—We regret to announce the death, at Agra, on the 21st July, of Major G. M. Prendergast, of the 44th regiment Bengal N.I. and commandant of the Agra militia. The Mofussilite speaks of the deceased as a most gallant soldier, and a most finished and true-hearted gentleman. Major Prendergast served in the campaign in Afghanistan with the force under General Pollock (medal); and also during the operations on the Sutlej, being present at the action of Ferozeshuhur (medal).

GENERAL GOWAN has assumed the chief command in the upper provinces.

ROYAL REGIMENTS IN INDIA.—We have very unexpectedly stumbled on an army list of the year 1824, and from it we glean three very extraordinary facts. The first is, that the number of royal regiments in India in that year precisely corresponds with the number present in India before the commencement of the revolt, as will be seen from the subjoined lists. The second is, that the actual number of companies of European Foot Artillery corresponds exactly with the number at present, only slightly diversified in designation; that is, in 1824 there were three battalions of eight companies each, and at present there are six battalions of four companies each. And the third is, that as in 1824 there were only four royal dragoon regiments on the Indian establishment, so in 1857 there are exactly the same number on its strength. If our possessions in 1824 corresponded with those of 1857, we would not have adverted to the above three coincidences; but as they have almost trebled in extent, it becomes a serious matter for the consideration of the Crown Authorities, especially if the statement made in some of the local papers be correct, that Lord Dalhousie's application (on the annexation of Oude) for fifteen additional royal regiments was refused.—Hurkaru, July 23.

THE CREW OF THE SHIP Norwood has again gone to the house of correction for continued wilful disobedience and refusal of duty. There is rather a scarcity of European seamen here now, as so many have joined the Indian navy and the river steamers, as well as those who had been employed to guard the premises of persons in Calcutta and the suburbs. Several of the steam frigates belonging to the Indian navy which visited the port lately being short-handed, shipped all the available seamen who presented themselves, and whom the surgeons of the frigates passed at 2l. 12s. wages per month and 5l. bounty. A few of the men so shipped having deserted from merchant vessels lying in the river, they had to be given up, as the Indian navy do not enjoy the same privilege as vessels belonging to her Majesty. Such being the case, the difficulty to get back the bounty money paid away to the seamen has been great. The magistrate, Mr. Hume, we have been informed, could render the commander of one of these frigates who applied to him for advice no assistance in the matter.—Hurkaru, July 18.

CAPTAIN MILDMAI, Assistant to Governor-General's Agent in Rajpootana, has arrived at Bahadura from Mount Aboo, having been deputed to the Maharajah of Bhikaneer, and to communicate with General Coortlandt's force.—Lahore Chronicle, July 8.

MILITARY REFORM.—A general order by the Commander-in-Chief, dated 6th July, leaves to commanding officers a responsibility very obviously appertaining to them, and them only, that is, the power of ordering such parades as they themselves might deem fit.

THE LATE GENERAL BARNARD AND HIS SUCCESSORS TO THE COMMAND.—Camp, Delhi, 7th July, 1857.—The electric telegraph will, of course, have announced to you the death of General Barnard. The particulars are these:—He was quite well on the morning of the 5th, and died of cholera in the afternoon, about three o'clock, very soon after he was first seized. General Reed, the Provisional Commander-in-Chief, who is in camp, assumes the command of the army here. In reality though, Colonel Chamberlain, Adjutant-General, will command, for General Reed is a decrepit old man; it is, therefore, fortunate that he has Chamberlain at his right hand. Colonel Baird Smith, of the Engineers, has arrived in camp as chief engineer vice Laughton, sent back to Umballah. With these two new hands at the head of affairs, we expect some new tactics. This crisis was too much for General Barnard; "he was not up to it," as he said on one occasion, he was quite perplexed. The day before yesterday, there was a scrimmage between some of our troops and the Bareilly regiment, in which the latter, of course, got the worst of it, losing some 150 killed, while our loss was nothing, except from the effects of the sun, which was intensely hot, and knocked down several of our soldiers. Our troops engaged were H. M. 61st, Coke's Punjab Rifles, and some Cavalry and Artillery, the action took place about four miles from camp in our regiment's rear, where our troops intercepted the Bareilly regiments on their return from Allipore in our rear, to which place they had gone burning and looting the village and thannah. Allipore is the first stage from Delhi on the Kurnaul road. It is said, that they (the Pandys) have elected a new commander-in-chief in Delhi, a man called Bukhtowar Khan, Subadar of the Artillery, that came from Bareilly. He is said to be a very intelligent man, and has commenced by conciliating the people of the town who have hitherto been plundered by the sepoys. Bukhtowar Khan is the man who rides in Brigadier Sibbald's carriage, and he is said formerly to have mixed much with European officers, and to have courted English society. Excuse errors, writing in a tent in the hot weather, after undergoing great fatigue, is neither favourable in point of place nor time for correspondence. [Since the above was written, General Reed has made over the command to General A. Wilson.]

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

PROCLAMATION.—REWARDS FOR THE APPREHENSION OF MUTINEERS OR DESERTERS.

Fort William, July 10.—The Governor-General in Council hereby offers and authorises the payment of the undermentioned rewards by British civil or military authorities in every part of India:—

1. For the apprehension of any mutineer or deserter from the native army, or of any person guilty of seducing or attempting to seduce any officer or soldier from his allegiance or duty, a reward of fifty Rupees if the offender be apprehended with arms belonging to the State, or of thirty Rupees if he be apprehended without such arms.

2. For information which shall lead to the apprehension of any such offender, a reward of fifty Rupees if he be apprehended with arms belonging to the State, or of thirty Rupees if he be apprehended without such arms.

The rewards will be paid on conviction of the offender.

Whoever delivers to any civil or military authority any arms, horses, cattle, or other property belonging to the Government, which shall have been plundered, or carried off by force, or gives such information as shall lead to the recovery of any such property, shall be rewarded, due regard being had to the nature of the property, and to its value and condition at the time of delivery or recovery.

Every pensioner of the government who conceals or harbours any person whom he knows, or has reason to believe, to have been guilty of mutiny or desertion, or of waging war against the government, or of seducing or attempting to seduce any officer or soldier from his allegiance or duty, or who fails to do his utmost to secure the apprehension and conviction of such offender, or who neglects to give immediate notice to the civil or military authorities of any mutinous or rebellious designs of which he may become cognizant, will, in addition to the punishment to which he is liable by law, forfeit his pension.

THE ENGINEER CORPS.—A reduction from the 1st of August, of no less than 451 of the various grades of executive engineers and overseers in the department of public works, leaves only a total of 549 of those grades as the future establishment instead of 1,000, as at present. This arrangement places at the disposal of the Commander-in-Chief, the services of twenty-eight officers and seventy-nine non-commissioned officers and soldiers.

COURT-MARTIAL.

CAPT. WILLIAM HENRY STONE.

Head Quarters, Choultry Plain, June 5, 1857.—At a European general court martial, held at Rangoon on Friday, May 15, 1857, Capt. W. H. Stone, 44th N.I., was arraigned on the following charges, viz:—

First.—For unbecoming and unofficerlike conduct, to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having, in camp at Nunnoor, about noon on Feb. 11, 1857, been in a disgraceful state of intoxication in the lines of his regiment, in view of the native officers and men, he being, at the time, supported by the native adjutant of the regiment, from inability to walk without assistance.

Second.—For behaviour unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, and to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having, by a disgraceful course of drunkenness between the 3rd and the 11th of February, 1857, inclusive, induced an attack of delirium tremens, when in camp at Tummarajoopully, on the 13th of the same month and year, and thereby necessitated his being put under personal restraint from the date last named, until March 2, of the same year.

Finding.—Capt. W. H. Stone, of the 44th N.I., is guilty of the first charge, with the exception of the averment "he being, at the time, supported by the native adjutant of the regiment, from inability to walk without assistance," of which it acquits him.

Guilty of the second charge.

Sentence.—To be dismissed from the service.

BOMBAY.

The LONDON MAIL of July 11 arrived at Bombay Aug. 5 (per Norna).

THE FAMILIES FROM BOOLDANA, JAULNA, AND AURUNGABAD have arrived at Ahmednuggur, where they have placed themselves under the protection of the gallant Brigadier Blood, under whose guns they are as safe as they could wish to be.

THE subscriptions in Bombay to the Relief Fund amount to Rs. 47,657; of the amount subscribed, Rs. 24,384 have been paid to the Bank of Bombay, as treasurers, up to the 7th August.

Two Arab or Mogul prisoners, with their accomplices in the murder of the mamlatdar of Punderpoor, and two of the government peons who assisted them in their attempt to escape from the custody of the police, have been found guilty of this atrocious offence, and will be hanged at Sattara.

MR. KNIGHT, the acting editor of the Bombay Times, brought a short time since an action against Mr. Craig, of the Telegraph and Courier. The action was compromised, and the latter journal has published a letter in which he apologizes for the imputations cast upon the character of Mr. Knight, which he observes were "without a shadow of foundation," and originated in misinformation.

THE RESIDENT AT HYDRABAD, on the occasion of the disturbance there, publicly warned the sepoys of the 7th Madras light cavalry that suspicious were entertained of their loyalty, although he himself did not share in them. The Bombay Times says that Major Davidson acted ill-advisedly in his interference.

FREIGHTS.

Quotations to London and Liverpool, 2l. 5s. to 2l. 12s. 6d.

IMPORTS (Bombay, Aug. 14, 1857.)—Cotton Piece Goods.—The business transacted has been, in consequence of the mutinies in the upper provinces, to a pretty moderate extent, but not as might be expected at this period of the season. Some of the leading staple articles have, in some instances, been sold under the closing prices of the last season. Metals.—Tin Plates are reported to be very scarce; a slight decline is perceptible in Sheathing and Braziers' Copper; while in Iron, we have no change worth noticing. Beer.—The market continues very firm, with a good demand for that in Wood, while in Bottle the inquiry is quiet.

EXPORTS (Bombay, Aug. 14, 1857.)—Cotton Wool.—The rather limited stock on hand, coupled with the favourable accounts from England, has tended towards a general advance in prices, both for cotton on the spot and that to arrive. We quote Broach and Surat at Rs. 141-42; Oomervuttee at Rs. 135-36; Dhollera, Rs. 141-42; Khandeish, Rs. 125-27; Compta, Rs. 131-32; Veravel, Rs. 131-32; and Dharwar Sawginned, Rs. 153-55. Oil Seeds.—Transactions on a small scale have taken place in linseed, varying from Rs. 5-12 to Rs. 5-15 per cent. Hemp.—The quotations are only nominal, the stock being almost nothing. Pepper.—The same as above may be said of this article. Opium.—There is no stock in the market, except of inferior quality; and our present quotation is Rs. 1250-60 for both Indore and Mandlesir.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

THURSDAY, September 17, 1857.

THE GUIDES.

THIS distinguished corps, of whose exploits before Delhi we hear by every mail, was originally raised on the conclusion of the Sutlej campaign, to act either as regular troops, or as guides and spies. The men are selected for their sagacity and intelligence, as much as for their courage and hardihood. They are taught to rely upon themselves individually, and thus acquire perfect confidence in their mutual co-operation. Though, for the most part, inhabitants of the Punjab, they belong to no particular race or creed. It is said that there is scarcely a wild or warlike tribe in Upper India which has not contributed recruits to this corps. Many of them are genuine mountaineers, others belong to the borders, and from their early childhood have been habituated to miniature warfare; while others again are the daring and enterprising spirits who scorn the dull repose of the plains. From this diversity of origin, it follows that there is no district of Upper India to which they can be sent that is not familiar to some of them; nor is there a dialect anywhere spoken for which they could not furnish an interpreter. Possessing these high soldierly qualities, it is not surprising that the Guides corps has rendered most important service to the Quartermaster-General's department, as intelligencers, or that it has frequently been employed in reconnoitring an enemy's position. In the champaign country there are no native troops that can stand against them, and in the annual campaigns against the robber hill-tribes, their dashing valour has only been equalled by their patient endurance of fatigue. It was at the suggestion of the late Sir Henry Lawrence that this corps was originally raised, by order of Lord Hardinge, in 1846. Its numerical force at that time was limited to one troop of cavalry and two companies of infantry, in all 284 men; but this number was trebled by Lord Dalhousie, so that the present strength of the corps consists of three troops of horse and six companies of foot, in all 840 men, commanded by four European officers, and a surgeon. The colour of their uniform is drab, as less distinguishable at a distance. On the frontier it so nearly resembles the aspect of the country, that the men can scarcely be made out at 150 yards. Their pay is Rs. 8 a month for a foot-soldier, and Rs. 24 for a trooper; but, on the other hand, they carry their own equipage, and receive no extra allowances in the field. It is not too much to say that a braver, more intelligent, more faithful, or better disciplined corps, does not exist in the military service of the British empire.

ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH IN INDIA.

THE use of the electric telegraph, previous to the Bengal mutiny, appears to have been steadily on the increase, both by Europeans and natives. In the July quarter of 1855 there were 4,779 Service messages, 707 paid messages, and 1,432 messages sent by natives: the value of the last two being 2,964*l.* By the end of the April quarter of 1856 these numbers had respectively increased to 11,680 Service messages, 2,576 paid messages, and 3,953 messages sent by the natives: the last two items yielding 5,357*l.* Between the 1st May, 1855, and the 1st May, 1856, there were despatched 33,918 Service messages, 6,032 paid messages, and 11,790 messages from natives: the total value of these two being 17,486*l.*, while the Service messages are estimated at 5,353*l.*; making a grand total of 22,840*l.* Very few complaints have been made against the office-clerks; but the constructors of the line complain bitterly of the ravages of the white ants; in consequence of which the posts must be renewed for many miles, at a very considerable expense. It is stated, however, that Sir William O'Shaughnessy proposes to send out from this country hollow cast-iron supports for the Punjab lines, in consequence of the scarcity and high price of good timber in those provinces. In Pegu, the elephant-grass is described as being productive of great annoyance:—"The wonderful rapidity of its growth is such that, in a single season, after being cut level with the ground, it has attained a height that brings it in contact with the telegraph wire (usually 15 feet high). When this occurs, it becomes almost impossible to keep up communication, even for short distances, during wet or foggy weather, as every point where the wire comes in contact with the surface of a blade of grass saturated with moisture, affords an additional means of escape for the electric current, and causes diminution in its power." Another drawback to this line is the danger of its timber supports being destroyed in the frequent conflagrations by which the natives clear away the grass in order to prepare the ground for cultivation. Fortunately, timber is good, plentiful, and cheap.

THE BENGAL MUTINY A RELIGIOUS MOVEMENT.

THE proclamation issued by the mutineers from Delhi, settles the question that the revolt of the native army of Bengal is a revolt for the defence of religion and caste. The treachery to the Government which the sepoys were serving, their sudden bursting loose from all the ties that bound them to the State they were paid to uphold, their abandonment of the principle of fidelity to the salt, and of every social feeling or tradition conducive to peace and orderly government, in order to plunge into a career of murder and plunder and crime, in association with the convicted felons they were set to guard, is justified by them before the world on the single plea that they had reason to suspect the British Government of a design to subvert their caste and creed and make them Christians. Emissaries of the Dhuama Subha, agents of the deposed sovereign of Oude, and of other injured or disappointed princes, may have assisted in propagating and spreading this belief, and money may have been lavishly spent in working up into a general conspiracy the grounds of suspicion and of dissatisfaction already deeply rooted and widely felt. The pretended discovery of prophecies, Hindoo and Mahomedan, both concurring as to the time when the event the conspiracy was to achieve was to be accomplished, and the Government of the Christian-making English was to be brought to an end, was of course the work of such emissaries and agents. These and other delusions were made accessory to the great end of getting the Hindoos to combine with Mahomedans to resist a common danger; but the idea of the danger to caste and creed has been the source of all the present troubles. The prime movers were beyond doubt the Mahomedans. It was they who, proclaiming a Jihad, or holy war, commenced their career of violence by the slaughter of their officers, and of women and children, moved to the act partly by the desire so to commit their lukewarm associates, and to prevent any possible reconciliation or return to duty, and partly by the bigoted fanatical notion, that as Ghazees, or soldiers of the faith, it was meritorious to take the life of any unbeliever of the race against which the jihad was proclaimed.

Such is the character of the war we are now waging with our sepoy. Every day brings fresh accounts of its merciless bitter spirit; but the first bloodshed and atrocities are ascribed entirely to the Mahomedans or to released felons. Very many instances may be cited of exertions by the Hindoo sepoys to save or protect their officers, and even to escort them out of danger. Some glorious examples also of these men having resisted the contamination of caste influence, and expelled or surrendered to justice those who sought to foment sedition, are daily registered, the most conspicuous of which is the conduct of the 31st Bengal native regiment at Saugur which not only purified its own ranks after the European officers had left them, but attacked and drove out of the station other troops which had taken the infection, and desired to carry matters to the most violent extremity. These are bright spots amid the general gloom. But seeing the spirit which was everywhere displaying itself, the Government and its officers have acted wisely in disarming every sepoy regiment, when the means of carrying out that measure presented themselves; and the European troops which had arrived in India, and those called into the field, were compelled, in consequence, to act with an isolation hitherto quite unknown, having no support whatever of native troops of any kind, excepting a few corps drawn from the Punjab, and one or two Goorkha regiments of different organization and creed from the general native army. They were entirely without cavalry to make their victories effectual.

That the cause of England, and of order and of civilization, will finally triumph, when the succours sent from this country shall arrive, and an army of 20,000 British soldiers shall take the field in Hindoostan, we cannot for a moment doubt; but the months of August and September will be months of heavy trial, in which mere handfuls of men at isolated stations, single regiments at the most, will have to sustain the wear of frequent conflicts with superior numbers, exposed to climate and disease, with straitened supplies and intercepted communications, and under every circumstance of disheartening disadvantage. We doubt not that all our regiments will come out of this ordeal with a glory equalling, if not surpassing, that of the heroes of Plassy and Arcot, and so leave a proud record of their achievements on the page of British India's future history; but it is right our countrymen should know that a crisis of the utmost peril is now passing in Hindoostan, and should be prepared to view the intelligence they receive with a proper sense of what is due to those who are confronting this danger, and who are risking life and everything to save the nation's honour, and to maintain the prestige of her power and her proud position in the world.

Now let us ask what has been the spirit in which the astounding intelligence of the revolt of the entire Bengal native army has been received by the public of this country? We will do the nation the justice to admit that the cry is universal to hasten out succours without limit and without regard to expense. The Court of Directors and the Government have been supported to the utmost of their hopes in the measures they have taken for this purpose. There is no slackness or remissness in this respect to be remarked upon anywhere. The tone of the great leaders of the public press is also proudly national, and well calculated to support and encourage those who are labouring in our cause in India. But though unanimous on the one point of exerting the utmost power of the nation in suppressing the revolt and bringing to justice the perpetrators of the enormities recorded, there are efforts making to give a direction to the future policy of this country in India, which, if avowed or supposed to be entertained by those who have the control of her destinies, will be of the most mischievous if not of fatal effect, both now and hereafter.

Men of the proselyting school have a very pernicious facility of the pen. Their writings are to be traced in most of the papers, provincial as well as metropolitan. They are endeavouring to persuade the public that their past efforts to convert the natives of India and even the sepoys themselves to Christianity, have had no concern in producing the present revolt. They would have it believed to be wholly a political conspiracy, the result of recent large annexations, or a consequence of maladministration, and of the misconduct of supercilious functionaries. According to some, we have been pampering caste prejudices, till they have turned upon us, from being too much encouraged; according to others, it is the measures of progress in the way of education, and the interference by legislation with marriage and inheritance, and suttee and infanticide, that have alarmed the Hindoo mind and driven the sepoys to revolt. Anything, in short, and everything is put forth as the cause of the present great difficulty, except the single thing proclaimed by the sepoys themselves as their motive for revolting; namely, the apprehension of designs to make them Christians. The Times published a letter from a correspondent in Calcutta, giving a pretended conversation with a Brahmin, in which the worshipper of Vishnool spoke of missionaries with especial favour, and drew a nice distinction between them as individuals arguing and expounding their doctrine, and the Government carrying out their views by means of education and legislation. Simple-minded Brahmin he must have been, to have had no dread of colonels and members of council becoming imbued with the missionary spirit, through the influence and permission of these men of argument and of the word; and to have seen no danger to his caste prejudices and Hindoo customs from the executive and the legislature being handed over to the zeal of proselyting high functionaries, for the propagation of their special religious views. We refer to this letter as designed to mislead the public of this country in respect to the real causes of the present outbreak, and the real sentiments of the population of India. It is part of the endeavour now making to inculcate the belief that, after the revolt is suppressed, it will behove the Government to become more of a Christian Government than heretofore, to give more direct encouragement to missionary efforts, and especially to seek to destroy caste in the Hindoos, and to offer every discouragement and opposition to Mahommedanism. We are concerned to observe that many of our bishops have put forth exhortations in the same spirit; and not only has Cardinal Wiseman preached at Salford on the same text, and declared that our troubles are a consequence of the Government's not having been more active in proselyting,—a judgment upon us for telling the natives, as he words it, "We do not desire you to be Christians;" but from many Protestant pulpits political sermons of the same character have been delivered, all urging to a declared war hereafter against the caste and creed of our native subjects in India.

The Governor-General has put forth a proclamation assuring the population of India that the British nation has no design to interfere in any way with caste and creed. This proclamation has been officially approved and confirmed, and conveys therefore a pledge to the people of India that there is to be no change in the policy which the Government has heretofore made the rule of its conduct towards every class of the population. The move of these pious short-sighted persons is in direct violation of this pledge. The pulpit is filled with Peter-the-Hermits preaching a crusade against unbelievers; and they would make the Government and its officers, civil and military, the instruments for carrying out their proselyting views. Let it not be supposed for a moment that the Hindoos or Mahommedans will take no note of the impress thus endeavoured to be given to the future policy of the Government. Will they trust and put faith in the Governor-General's declarations, when they see the voice of the nation speaking through its bishops and public men, speaking through the organs of the press in a different sense from the proclamation—when they see the mission of England to make Christians of all beneath her sway avowed and gloried in at the very time when the apprehension of such a mission has drawn our entire native army into revolt?

We had thought the days were past when the proselyting spirit, which is but another name for intolerance and persecution, was to be allowed admission into the counsels of any British Government. It has been quite given up in Ireland, because of its there encountering a resistance which proved the policy to be faulty, and sure to fail in its aim. Does not the crisis we have brought about in India afford warning of the similar effect of a similar policy in that country? We are dealing at present, however, with a resistance and revolt confined to our native troops. The population, though distrustful, have not entirely lost confidence in the Government. The Governor-General is doing his best to reassure them, and to prevent their making common cause with the rebels. If he fail to succeed in this—if the people of India come to believe it to be the primary aim of himself and of his nation to subvert their religion and laws, what will be his position? what that of every isolated British settler and functionary in the wide extent over which they are spread, relying only for security on their personal character, and on the confidence and trust of the people at large in the justice and liberal policy of the Government? These firebrands of the pulpit and of the press, who are seeking to reverse the policy which has gained India for the nation, and are proclaiming the mission to convert as the first and most imperative duty of this Christian nation and its Government, are reviving the spirit of Albuquerque and of the middle ages. On their heads be the blame, if the war, which is now confined to a conflict with our revolted troops, be converted into a Sicilian Vespers or an Irish rebellion of the 17th century, involving a rising of the entire population against a hated race, for whom they have lost respect, and whom they believe to be perfidious, proclaiming one thing and intending another.

We believe, indeed we know, the Governor-General and the Home Government of India, to have been quite sincere in the pledges and professions they have proclaimed and made. Let the press and the pulpit be careful not to spread distrust, and create the belief of guilt and treachery in their declarations.

THE BENGAL MUTINY AND THE FOREIGN PRESS.

WITH a few rare and ignoble exceptions, the attitude of the foreign Press, with regard to our reverses in India, has been dignified and sympathetic. The avowed opponents of perfidious Albion have, perhaps naturally, expressed a certain degree of satisfaction at our recent disasters, which they affect to regard as the logical consequence of our tyranny and maladministration. At first, too, before the full extent of our difficulties was known, or even conjectured, some of the French papers complacently remarked that the English Government had requested the aid of France to prosecute the war with China. It was likewise asserted by one journal, that the insurrection was mainly attributable to our supercilious and haughty demeanour, which renders us everywhere so unpopular. The Union could also trace it, in some measure, to the wrath of an offended Deity, because we have rather discountenanced than encouraged the diffusion of the Roman Catholic religion among the benighted heathen. For the ultramontane Univers was reserved the coarse insinuation that our rulers tampered with the midwives, in order that none but female children might appear to be born unto the independent native princes; because, in the event of their dying without issue male, their territories would be annexed to the British dominions. The Russo-Belgian Nord went still farther, and, on the authority of its "own correspondent" at Madras (?), overtly charged the Indian Government with persecuting and defrauding their pensioners, and even compelling them to reside in unhealthy spots, with a view to shorten their lives. The Indépendance Belge, by way of exhibiting its gratitude for the independence of Belgium, is on all occasions ready to circulate, with hypocritical expressions of regret, any rumours to the disparagement of England's greatness, and therefore only pursued its usual course in stating—sous toute réserve—that either the Mauritius or Madras would probably be ceded to France, as the price of her co-operation in suppressing the sepoys' mutiny. The quasi-official Constitutionnel was also at one time disposed to think that the hour had come for French aggrandizement in the East, and that at least a powerful naval squadron ought to be despatched into the Indian seas—to watch events. The Augsburg Gazette, again, has received a letter from Calcutta (?), ascribing our escape from immediate expulsion from Hindostan to the precipitancy of the 21st regiment (!). Fort William was to have been occupied by native troops, the ships in the Hooghly sunk, and every European in Calcutta put to death. As it is—an attempt to surprise the fort at Diamond Harbour having failed—an “independence dinner” is to be given in the Town-hall, and a petition drawn up, praying her Majesty to take the administration of the country into her own hands. In the mean time a provisional government is to be appointed, under a President known to the writer, but whose name he refrains from publishing at present, for reasons that may easily be imagined. More recently the Univers has again vented its spleen against Protestant England by predicting an application for the aid of France, in return for which she will cede Malta to that country, the Ionian Islands to Greece, Gibraltar to Spain; and thus resign all pretension to interfere in the affairs of the Mediterranean. But with the exception of these ridiculous crudities, the articles on India that have lately appeared in the French and German papers are honourable both to them and to ourselves. They generously deplore the sad fate of so many innocent victims, and express a hearty and genial admiration for the many deeds of chivalrous heroism that have already come to light. The Débats, in particular, dwells upon the calm devoted courage exhibited by all ranks and classes of our countrymen, and points attention to the unaffected simplicity with which the survivors narrate the circumstances of their escape. No attempt to disguise the truth, no self-laudation, no symptom of weakness. Every one strove to do his duty, but never for a moment dreamed that he was a hero for so doing. An article to a similar effect has likewise been published in the Constitutionnel, congratulating England on having such noble sons, of whom she may justly be proud, though unbidden tears trickle over their untimely grave. Not less fair and courteous are the most respectable of the German journalists, and not one of them expresses the slightest doubt as to the ultimate success of our arms. In painful contrast stand out the rabid denunciations of a fellow-countryman, the editor of the Nation, who seems to forget that hundreds and thousands of Irishmen are now bravely battling in the common cause. It is nothing to such morbid demagogues that numbers of gallant Irishmen and their virtuous wives and daughters have been massacred by the fiendish miscreants; otherwise, how would he dare to write in such a strain as this?—

“Sweeter than the voice of love, sweeter than the warm accents of friendship, dearer than the mellowest sunshine of the heart, is the news of English discomfiture in India to the breasts of the Irish people. They are delighted, rejoiced, and gladdened beyond measure when they hear of the torture and humiliation of their ancient foe. There is not a vessel of hers which is wrecked, there is not a general of hers who is slain, there is not a battalion in her service which is routed and overthrown, that the people of Ireland do not gloat over with the greatest satisfaction and delight. From the deepest recesses of their hearts they wish her defeat and misfortune in whatever enterprise she is engaged. Loyalists, slaves, sycophants, and West Britons may seem astounded by all this, but from our knowledge of the people we can assure them that what we have stated is a fact. The Irish millions wish to see England subdued, her insolence chastised, her barbarous and tyrannical power broken to pieces, her domineering and brutal disposition tamed and sobered down, and her outrageous desire to annoy, bully, insult, and plunder weaker nations rendered impotent and powerless for evil for all time to come. They are consequently delighted by the intelligence received from the East, where the forces of the Great Mogul are pounding the armies of Great Britain. Wherever England draws the sword or lights the match, Ireland prays for her defeat, and at no time has she prayed more fervently in that way than she does now, when the patriot sepoys of India are endeavouring to strangle the British power and sweep it root and branch from the fair and fertile fields of Hindostan.”

Even the Northern Whig, a most respectable paper, and conducted with eminent ability, can venture at such a time to stigmatize the execution at Peshawur as demoniac, and to assert that not a single road or canal has been constructed in India under British rule. Such carelessness and prejudice are almost incredible, except that writers who aim at brilliancy seldom pause to be accurate: their object is to be effective rather than precise. The same journal lately congratulated the natives of India on their prospect of escape from “the coarse and brutal treatment” to which they “have systematically been subjected”—because three young gentlemen, educated at the “godless” College at Belfast, had passed the last competitive examination for the civil service with great credit. The idea that India is about to be regenerated because three Irish lads have passed the preliminary ordeal, is certainly deliciously Milesian.

THE ANGLO-SAXON MISSION.

Or all the cants of this canting age, there is not one more ridiculous or more dangerous than the cant about peculiar missions. Does an individual aim at supreme power, he straightway proclaims it his mission to carry out the views of his deceased uncle, and to wear a green mantle embroidered with golden bees. Does a nation covet the territory of a feeble neighbour, it pretends that its mission is to expel Islamism from Europe, or to put down the Barbary corsairs, or to extend the blessings of civilization wherever stars may shine or stripes be deserved. Does a body of white-chokered zealots desire an arena for the indulgence of their mental disquiet, lo! it is the mission of the Anglo-Saxon race to force the mysteries of Christianity upon all who have not yet accepted those glad tidings of peace and salvation. The first-fruits of this last philanthropical mission we are now gathering in the treacherous slaughter of our too confiding countrymen, and in the agonizing tortures of English women and children. Truly, Voltaire was justified in asserting that fanatics are more dangerous than thorough-paced rogues, for the latter will listen to reason, which the former scorn to do. Their usual answer, indeed, to all arguments that militate against their preconceived notions, is the stereotyped phrase, that the ways of Providence are inscrutable, and that men are nothing more than the blind instruments by which its all-wise decrees are carried into execution. But if this be so, are they not themselves guilty of presumption in dogmatizing on that which they confess to be incomprehensible to human wisdom? While declaring themselves to be only unconscious tools, they take upon themselves to be the artisans also, and mark out the purposes of Heaven with as much minuteness as if they were projecting a map of their own parish. One of these purposes, we are confidently told, is the conversion of the natives of Hindostan to the Christian faith by means of our own highly-favoured nation. That such will probably be the ultimate result of our occupation of that vast empire we are not prepared to gainsay; but we do protest against the fanciful assumption that it is our first and chief duty to accomplish that object. In the first place, we might call upon these earnest proselytizers to define what form of Christianity is to be inculcated, and, if necessary, enforced. Is it the Christian religion as understood by the Church of England, or that which is most acceptable to Presbyterians, or Wesleyans, or Baptists, or other dissenting denominations? Or is it the Christianity of the Church of Rome? Perhaps, when they shall have agreed upon this point, their task will become less arduous and their labours more successful than has hitherto been the case. But we readily waive this preliminary inquiry, because it must be admitted that the most corrupt version of Christianity contains far purer ethics than the sensual religion of the Arabian impostor or the foul idolatry of the Hindoos. We then arrive at the glib assertion that Hindostan has been "entrusted" to this country with the express view to the conversion of its inhabitants. What are we to understand by the word "entrusted"? Were any special miracles wrought in aid of the British arms? Did the walls of any city or fortress fall prostrate at the blast of our trumpets? Were our soldiery protected in any supernatural manner from the arrow that flieth by night, or the pestilence that walketh by noonday? Were they exempted from the usual risks of battle and the ravages of disease? In short, was it not by superior prowess, endurance, and discipline, that India was originally conquered? And is it not by the same means that it must be again subdued, and maintained in subjection? In truth, other means were sometimes employed by the bold adventurers who first set foot in the country as masters, which we should be sorry to see repeated, and which assuredly could not have been pleasing in the eyes of the Deity, whose decrees they are represented as fulfilling. There is nothing more alien to the conception of an Eternal Providence than this narrow doctrine of a special interposition. It is an old complaint of philosophers, that men make the Deity like unto themselves, and invest Him with their own short-sightedness, vacillation, and uncertainty of purpose. We may rest assured that long before this earth was peopled with the race of man, certain impulses—which we call laws—were given, that have ever since been proceeding in their appointed courses, producing undeviating effects in regular succession; but according to the theory of the bigots, the history of mankind is a series of experiments, and ever and anon the machinery of the world needs to be wound up or repaired. Owing to climate and other causes, the Anglo-Saxon race is endowed with great virility. It is dogged, persevering, adventurous, incapable of submitting to poverty, attached to its household gods, but ever ready to remove them to any other region or clime, and prolific beyond all other races. The necessity of emigration and the chances of commerce brought it in contact with the rich and thickly-peopled countries of Hindostan, and circumstances gradually developed a colony of traders into an army of occupation. But we have done far more than merely occupy the land. We have done all in our power to increase its fertility and multiply its productions. In so doing we have naturally and inevitably impressed the natives with the consciousness of our superior intelligence, activity, and perseverance. They have been compelled to recognize us as beings ranking far above themselves in the order of humanity. Some of them, acting upon this conviction, had begun to imitate and adopt the ideas, customs, and institutions of their conquerors. The fine point of the wedge was fairly inserted, and an auspicious result could hardly fail to have been attained in due course of time.

Others would soon have followed the example of their countrymen, had not our own impatience spoiled all. Not satisfied with the gradual, but sure, operation of natural causes, we must needs force the hand of Providence, and, as it were, discount the future. As might have been anticipated, we have only succeeded in offending the most deeply-rooted prejudices of the inhabitants, and in driving them to open rebellion. It was, undoubtedly, our duty and our policy to prohibit such usages as were in defiance of decency and social order. We did well in suppressing thuggee, infanticide, suttee, and Meriah sacrifices. In all these cases we had public opinion in our favour. Not only the most respectable, but the great majority, of the natives applauded the conduct of the British authorities with regard to those atrocious customs. But it was with different feelings, and with jealous suspicion, that they watched a certain fidgety disposition in the Legislature to interfere with minor evils, which were slowly dying out of themselves as the tone of society improved. Our "mission," however, blinded our rulers as to consequences. Had they been content to go on humanizing the people, Christianity would have grown out of their own aspirations for something better and purer than the false and unholy creeds they had hitherto professed. But no pains were taken to prepare the ground for the delicate exotic, and it now lies withered and broken, its beautiful blossoms scattered, seedless, over an ungrateful soil. It is devoutly to be hoped that we may benefit by our present experience, and not again be so hasty in fulfilling this troublesome "mission."

ADMINISTRATION OF THE PUNJAB.

WHEN Lord Dalhousie's spirited proclamation was issued, declaring the Punjab to be an integral portion of the British dominions, dismal were the forebodings of habitual croakers, both in India and in this country. It was asserted that we had burdened ourselves with a territory which could never pay the expenses of its occupation. The people were represented to be either professional warriors or hereditary robbers, whom it would be impossible to humanize, and very difficult even to coerce. The country was described, for the most part, as scorched and ghastly to view, and closely intersected with deep ravines, which, at certain seasons, became the channels of fierce torrents descending from the mountains and flooding the plains. The rivers were unnavigable, there was no port attainable, the roads were impracticable, the frontier untenable, and the entire province a useless encumbrance. It is worth while to consider how far this unfavourable view of Lord Dalhousie's policy with regard to the Punjab has been verified by the event. The experience of eight years cannot be deemed an unfair or too limited a criterion. We will begin with the judicial department.

The object has been "to render justice cheap, quick, sure, simple, and substantial." Every month the reports of all the courts are regularly transmitted to the Judicial Commissioner, by whom they are carefully examined and collated. To facilitate the administration of civil justice, 104 Small-Causes Courts have been instituted, presided over by native judges, whose powers are limited to causes where the property at stake does not exceed 30%. The average jurisdiction of each court extends over 78½ square miles, or a tract twenty-eight miles in each direction, containing a population of 122,286 souls. About two-thirds of the entire judicial business of the country is transacted in these courts. There are, besides, 111 Regular Courts, held by the deputy commissioners, their assistants, and extra-assistants, at the central stations, in which the procedure is conducted on the same system as in the other courts. In 1855 there were 61,829 suits tried, involving property to the amount of 450,579*l*. The average value of each suit, it will be seen, is exceedingly small, not more, indeed, than 7*l*. 6*s*. About two-thirds of the suits were for sums under 5*l*., and four-fifths for sums under 10*l*. The majority of the cases originated in disputes about money-loans, betrothal contracts, questions of inheritance, and mortgages. Litigation respecting land is confined to the Revenue Courts. The average duration of a suit, in 1855, was twenty-three days from which it is evident that in most cases the trial does not extend over more than a few days. Justice is not only speedy, it is also cheap. The cost in the abovementioned year was considerably under five per cent. on the value of the suits; and so few technicalities oppose the equitable adjustment of any question, owing to the absence of professional pleaders, that less than 5½ per cent. were nonsuited. Arbitration was resorted to in one-third of the cases; there were 33,366 executions to 61,829 suits; and eight per cent. of the decrees were appealed against, of which twenty per cent. were modified or revised.

Crimes and misdemeanours amounted to 41,268, or in the proportion of 1 to 308 souls; but of actual crimes there were only 22,002, or 1 to 578 souls. Even for some of these a greater allowance must be made than if they had been committed in this country. For instance, cattle-lifting on the borders, though criminal in our eyes, does not indicate moral turpitude any more than it did a few centuries ago on the marches of England and Scotland. In the Punjab, however, serious offences of all kinds are sensibly on the decrease; and it is worthy of note that the most heinous, such as murder, wounding, violent robbery, and the like, constitute only one-fiftieth of the whole,—in all 221. Even the murders should oftentimes rather be regarded as homicide, arising as they do out of the raids of the wild tribes beyond the frontier. The Thugs, who committed fully one hundred murders annually previous to the annexation of the Punjab, have not been heard of since 1853, in which year one case of thuggee was reported. The Dacoits, or gang-robbers, who formerly went about in formidable bands, armed to the teeth, have likewise been suppressed. And female infanticide, if not entirely extinguished, is probably not more prevalent than in our own country. Miscellaneous offences, or rather personal grievances, are apparently on the increase; but this is so far a good symptom, that it shows the Punjabees no longer take the law into their own hands, though they have become more prone to vindicate their equal rights. In the criminal department, also, justice is prompt, expeditious, and inexpensive. Of the 28,204 convictions obtained in 1855, 1,158 were sentences for three years' imprisonment, 4,610 for periods varying from six months to two years, 3,826 for six months; 16,532 criminals were fined, and 2,078 flogged: for cattle-lifting the only efficacious punishment has been found to be the four walls of a prison—neither fining nor flogging being of any use. The proportion of stolen property recovered by the police is estimated at one-third, while the entire value of the property subtracted does not exceed 65,000*l*. a year. The best proof of the efficiency of the magistrates is the fact that the appeals from their tribunals to the Sessions Court do not exceed five per cent.; of which three-fourths are rejected.

The Punjab police is a peculiarly constituted force, divided into several classes. The military police consists of two corps of irregular infantry, seven battalions of foot, one regiment Punjab cavalry, and twenty-seven troops of horse. Their aggregate strength is 12,853 men, and their annual cost amounts to 186,157*l*. The purely civil police number 9,123 men, and cost 87,330*l*. per annum. They are distributed over 281 thannahs, or subordinate jurisdictions, each averaging 102 villages, 290 square miles, and 45,279 persons. The city police are about 1,250 in number, and the rural constabulary about 30,000. The entire police force, therefore, is equal to 53,226 men, for an area of 81,625 square miles and a population of 12,717,821 souls, at an annual charge to Government of 273,457*l*. The military police are thoroughly disciplined, and frequently encounter with success the marauding tribes from the mountains. The regular civil police are armed with sword and carbine; but the town and village watchmen have only a staff and a spear: all are dressed in a plain drab uniform. The watchmen are maintained by town duties, something like the French octroi. At first the British authorities endeavoured to substitute a house-tax, but the people preferred their old-fashioned duties, which were therefore adopted, though with great reductions. In large cities there is a surplus arising from these duties, which is laid out in local improvements.

The revenue is mainly derived from a land-tax. Owing to the small quantity of rain that falls in the Punjab, the cultivation of the land is confined to the neighbourhood of wells and canals of irrigation. The rest of the land is occupied by vast tracts of pasturage. The cultivator is also the proprietor of the ground. The land-tax is the only rent for which he is answerable. But these peasant proprietors are also members of a village community, having a head man to superintend their joint interests. It is the brotherhood that engages with the Government, not the individual cultivators. The total amount they divide among themselves, each being responsible for his co-parceners as they are for him. When the Punjab came under British administration, the assessments of the former native rulers were abated from twenty-five to thirty per cent. In round numbers, the griping and grasping Indian Government inaugurated its assumption of power by a reduction of taxation equal to half a million sterling. Nor was this liberality evanescent in duration, or restricted to those limits. Since that period the assessments have been further gradually reduced to the extent of 234,000*l*. per annum, and a regular and equitable settlement has been devised, highly acceptable to the people. The annual rate of assessment per acre in the Cis-Sutlej states is 2*s*. 3½*d*.; in the Trans-Sutlej states, 3*s*. 11½*d*.; in the Upper Baree and Rechna Doabs, 2*s*. 9½*d*.; and in the Upper Chuch Doab, 2*s*. 3½*d*. A peasant proprietor cultivates, on an average, eight acres, on which he pays to Government 1*l*. 4*s*., or about five per cent. on his income. On the other hand, he has no other taxes and no rent to pay, and at the end of the year is generally able to add something to his previous hoardings. There are, moreover, some thousands of yeomen who possess three or four times that quantity of land, besides pasturage for brood mares and herds of cattle. Perhaps the best proof that can be given of the reasonableness of the assessment is the small amount of uncollected balances at the close of the year, not exceeding $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. Nor is this the result of harsh measures in the name of the law, for in 1855-56 only sixteen cases occurred in which the legal machinery was put into play. And it must be remembered that there are no fewer than 28,000 estates or village communities, representing nearly three millions of taxpayers. The cost of collection is about three per cent., or 46,785*l.* per annum. It must not, however, be denied that the position of the Punjabee agriculturist is susceptible of much improvement. Owing to the disarmament of the population and the general pacification of the province, many thousands of individuals suddenly betook themselves to agricultural pursuits, and thus a larger quantity of produce is grown than can be consumed within the country. Means of transport are unavailable. The navigation of the rivers is tedious and uncertain, and a long land-carriage is impossible, owing to the frequency of deep, unbridged ravines. From these and other reasons the price of grain has fallen to one-half of the former rates, and the grower prejudiced to that extent. The surplus produce is already estimated at three-quarters of a million, and there are still six millions of cultivable acres to be brought under the plough. We shall presently have occasion to note what steps have been taken by the Administration to remove the obstacles to easy communication between all parts of the province, and thereby to ameliorate the condition of its inhabitants.

In addition to the land-tax, there is an important source of revenue, upon which a vast amount of very unnecessary indignation has been got up by certain journals and individuals in this country. It is held to be a most iniquitous act to tax the poor man's salt—ten times more atrocious than our detested window-tax. The real state of the case is simply this. In the salt-range that runs from the Jhelum to the Indus there are five mines worked by the Government, at which the salt is sold on the spot at the rate of 4*s.* per 80 lbs. These mines were formerly a monopoly of the Sikh Government, but farmed out and mismanaged. Since the annexation, the consumption has nearly doubled, without any increase of price to the consumer. It is sold in Lahore at an advanced price of 6*d.* on the 80 lbs., which covers the dealer's risk, trouble, and profit. The monthly consumption of a poor man is about 1 lb., which costs him three farthings in English money—his lowest earnings being six shillings per mensem. The annual profit to the public revenue in 1855-56 was 193,000*l.* The total amount of the Punjab revenue may be thus stated:—

Land-tax	£1,462,425
Excise on spirits and drugs	60,757
Stamps	30,786
Post-office	31,581
Canal water-rent	18,247
Tribute from feudatories	48,720
Miscellaneous items	159,035
				£2,004,551

Now turn we to the Public Works department, which will bear comparison with that of any country in any quarter of the globe. The staff consists of 1 chief engineer, 2 superintending engineers, 1 director of canals, 44 executive officers, 33 assistant executive officers, 3 civil engineers, 30 assistant civil engineers, 5 conductors and sub-conductors acting as assistant executive officers, and 126 overseers. The first thing to be done for the improvement of the country was evidently the construction of roads. Up to May, 1854, no less than 3,600 miles of roadway had been partially completed in the Punjab Proper, at a cost of 470,000*l.*; and in the Cis-and Trans-Sutlej States, 1,629 miles, at a cost of 175,000*l.*: in all, 5,229 miles, at a charge to Government of 545,000*l.* Since then, 3,520 miles of roads have been constructed, which, added to the above, gives an aggregate of 8,749 miles. But the mere length of roadway affords no true standard by which to judge of the greatness of these works. Already 1,500 bridges, of various importance, have been thrown across rivers and ravines, but thousands will yet be required before the net-work of land-communication will be perfected. One bridge over the Great Guggur will be 450 feet long, with 9 arches of 60 feet span, of the most solid masonry and block foundation. Another, over the Markunda, will comprise 30 arches of 36 feet span, with masonry work extending over 500 yards. It is also proposed to span the Indus with a suspension bridge; but it is clear that works of this magnitude cannot be achieved with sufficient rapidity to satisfy the ignorant impatience of irresponsible pamphleteers.

Although so abundantly supplied with excellent roads, the Punjab will not be deficient in railways. The sub-montane portion will be traversed by a section of the great trunk line from Calcutta to Peshawur. But a more important line, in a commercial and material point of view, is that projected down the valley of the Indus to Kurrachee. It is proposed to commence with a railroad from Kurrachee to Hyderabad on the Indus, a distance of 123 miles, and continue the communication with Mooltan, 300 miles higher up, by means of steam-vessels. Later, a railway will probably be constructed from Mooltan to Lahore and Umritsur, from which almost incredible advantages would accrue to the province. Still later, or contemporaneously, it will be necessary to carry a line parallel with the Indus down to Kurrachee, the future rival of Calcutta. The Five Rivers are only navigable by craft of very small burden, which creep down their circuitous channels with insignificant cargoes. There is an opening, however, for an immense traffic, if goods could be conveyed to the sea at a moderate cost. Everything depends upon the cheapness of conveyance; and fortunately there are no engineering difficulties in the way between Mooltan and Lahore, a distance of 240 miles, and very few between Lahore and Umritsur. At the commencement it might be expedient to be content with water-carriage from Mooltan to Hyderabad, providing steam-tugs of small draught to tow flats, as on the Ganges. Eventually, there can be little doubt that a railroad will connect Kurrachee directly with Lahore and Umritsur, and thus open a new outlet for the produce of Central Asia which now finds its way through that emporium to the Bay of Bengal.

It has already been observed that the fertility of a large portion of the Punjab is dependent on artificial irrigation. At a former period of its history, that territory was intersected in all directions by inundation canals; but these have long since been choked up and allowed to fall into decay. Some still remained at the annexation, near Mooltan, in the Baree Doab, and between the Sutlej and the Ravee. These the British Government enlarged and improved, and has since cleared out and re-opened many of those that had been disused. But it did not stop here—it has undertaken several new permanent canals of stupendous magnitude. Nearly a million sterling will be expended on the Baree Doab Canal, now in process of construction, which will roll down from the canal-head a volume of 3,000 cubic feet of water per second. The central line is to be 247 miles in length, with three branches, respectively 84, 61, and 74 miles, making an aggregate of 466 miles. Along the banks will be planted avenues of forest and timber trees, of which 440,000 have already been placed. Of the main channel 137 miles have been excavated, and 500 miles of road made in connection with the canal. Other canals have been projected, but will not be commenced until the completion of the one now in hand.

In addition to these productive works, a vast expenditure has been occasioned by the necessity of building barracks for 12,000 European troops and artillery,—the cost of properly housing a European regiment amounting to 100,000*l*. It has also been necessary to construct gaols, court-houses, treasuries, police-stations, wells and tanks, and other miscellaneous works. Up to the present time, the total expenditure on roads has been 1,122,460*l*.; on canals, 715,300*l*.; on civil and miscellaneous works, 265,500*l*.; and on military works, 1,142,100*l*.: in all, 3,245,360*l*. Already the electric telegraph extends about 520 miles through the Punjab provinces; but has not yet been appreciated by the native merchants. The wire is supported on 10,000 posts of Himalayan fir timber, and on the banks of rivers, or on low marshy ground, it rests on solid masonry pedestals, or piers. The cost was about 21,000*l*., or 40*l*. per mile, exclusive, however, of the wire and the instruments, valued at 10,000*l*. more.

Among the minor blessings of British rule may fairly be included the introduction of the potato and the turnip. The tea-plant is also being cultivated with success, while flax and linseed promise to become articles of export. The prevailing drought in these provinces is, no doubt, partly owing to the denudation of the land. The Sikh Government scarcely recognized any rights of property in trees, and the people were ignorant of their real value; but since the annexation, upwards of six millions of young trees have been planted, though many years must elapse before any tangible benefit can be thence derived. Iron ore has been discovered, but too difficult of approach to be profitably worked, and the only mineral of mercantile value that can be procured is horax; but that also occurs at a considerable height on the Himalayan mountains.

Such is a cursory view of the results hitherto obtained by the transfer of power from the Sikh Government to the British. In the short space of eight years, a wild and turbulent race has been taught to appreciate the fruits of civilization, and our most formidable foes have become our staunchest friends. The natives themselves are struck with wonder and amazement at the assiduous and indefatigable labours of their conquerors to improve their country and ameliorate their condition. Instead of wresting from them their humble savings, the British Government has reduced their taxation, and even found means, with this abated assessment, to give them roads and canals, and security for person and property. This, however, is only a common illustration of the general system of administration recommended and enforced by the unjustly abused authorities at the India House.

THE GAGGING ACT.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—Allow me, as an old Indian, to express my emphatic dissent from the views you appear to entertain with regard to Lord Canning's conduct in gagging the press. You seem to look upon it as indicative of energy and resolution, and not, what it really is, as a great mistake, and the first symptom of weakness exhibited by his lordship since the commencement of the revolt. I do not deny that the European press of India has been too prone to ridicule the governing powers, and to assume an attitude of systematic antagonism—though vigilance, perhaps, would be the more appropriate term. But there can be no doubt that, in an emergency like the present, patriotism would have mastered the tendency to sarcasm, or—if you prefer a more vulgar motive—that mutual interest and necessity would have rallied all classes of Europeans round their common centre. Depend upon it, this measure does not emanate from the Governor-General, but from his secretariat, and is therefore the more to be regretted, as it shows that his lordship has not been able to shake off that incubus, which, from the passing of the Black Acts down to this very measure, has never ceased to harass the European community not included in the Services.

It is a constant subject of remark, that the natives obtain intelligence from distant stations with a celerity only surpassed by that of the electric telegraph. Nothing is more simple in its explanation. The news-writer is an institution throughout the East. Every king, rajah, nawab, wuzer, zemindar, banker, and merchant of note has a news-writer, or agent, at every principal law-court and station of the British. Some of them have extra agents at Calcutta, Agra, Bombay, and other large cities. These men despatch daily reports to their employers of the news of the day, the gossip of the station, and all rumours, however absurd, that happen to be in circulation. No real event escapes them, and even their falsehoods throw a useful light on the undercurrent of accidents, which lends no small aid to the attainment of a shrewd guess as to the future. Their employers, again, hold levees, or meetings, every night at their own houses, or under the great tree, or at nautches, when these letters are read aloud in the hearing of all there assembled—tenantry, neighbours, friends, and casual passers-by. The news thus spreads like wild-fire, and is commented on in every village and hamlet for many miles around. Now, even the native press was beginning to do good service in correcting the absurdities circulated by these gossip-mongers, and in diffusing more accurate information—though, it must be acknowledged, they seldom summed up in favour of their rulers. Still, they were neither so virulent nor so mischievous as the news-writers, and, under proper direction, would have strengthened the hands of Government. It is true their power of working harm has been checked by the Gagging Act; but so also has their power of doing good. If they cannot censure, they are not very likely to take the trouble to praise; nor would their praise, under such circumstances, possess much influence. The news-writer, however, flourishes more than ever, and where the surveillance is strict, or any danger suspected, he makes use of a cipher, or speaks in parables. Thus, when the Nawab Shums-ood-Deen was planning the murder of Mr. Fraser,—at that time Resident at Delhi, and brother of the civilian lately massacred there by the mutineers,—he wrote about dogs, and the entire correspondence would appear to the uninitiated to refer to the sporting qualities of certain hounds he was anxious to purchase. The key to these dark sayings is usually in the possession of a legion of people, who are thereby prepared to expect certain occurrences at certain times. At the appointed period a rumour is accordingly buzzed about from mouth to mouth, and if the anticipated event come to pass, the English hold up their hands in astonishment at the priority of intelligence on the part of the natives. Nine times out of ten it is little more than a fortunate guess, or comparison of probabilities. Very often they are wrong; as the other day in Calcutta, in affirming the fall of Delhi; but their miscalculations are not heeded, though their lucky hits are noted with wonder and admiration.

But, Sir, no native journalist or news-writer ever issued any paper one-half so dangerous as Lord Ellenborough's celebrated Song of Victory. The Governor-General of India, the ruler of many millions of Mahomedans, congratulated his friends and brothers, the Hindoos, on having avenged the Moslem affront of 800 years' standing. He had chastised and humbled the insolent Wrote him by defending the tomb of Mahmoud of Ghazni, and by bringing back the gates of the Temple of Somnath, which the cruel Moslem had carried off. He, the friend and brother of the idolaters, had avenged them on the followers of Islam! After such an insane proclamation as that, are we surprised that the Mahomedans have watched their opportunity for repaying the compliment in kind? Truly, I marvel at his Lordship's assurance in speaking Lord Canning for doing ought to offend the prejudices of the "wild Hindoo," when he himself had hurled such an arrogant defiance at the haughty and adventurous Moslem. But whatever may have been Lord Canning's previous sins of omission, or commission, he never made a greater blunder than in coercing the press. He has thereby made many unforgiving enemies, and lost the services of some useful friends. The law was open to him. There was no difficulty in punishing treasonous or libellous articles. Or, if some extraordinary measure were really necessary, why was it not limited to the native press? Instead of coercion now, the Government would have displayed more sagacity had they paid greater attention to the violent and abusive articles that had for some time past appeared in the Mahomedan papers. But, in their conceit and self-sufficiency, they chose to close their eyes to the future, in the complacent belief that nothing disagreeable would happen in their time, and therefore they need not care. Their slumbers have been rudely disturbed, and it will be some little while before they will have leisure to doze off again.

Trusting to your candour and sense of justice for the insertion of this grandis et verbosa epistola,

I remain, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

S.

WE have not the slightest intention of defending Lord Ellenborough's Canticle; but we are at a loss to perceive how his Lordship's indiscretions can be held to palliate the insolent diatribes of the Indian press, whether European or native. We are not of those who believe in the omniscience and infallibility of the press, and, as a general rule, we would rather pin our faith to a statesman than to a journalist. There is nothing in the arguments of our correspondent to shake our conviction that Lord Canning was fully justified in adopting coercive measures under existing circumstances. It is impossible to calculate the amount of mischief that might have been wrought by a single indiscreet article in an English paper, translated and circulated, as it would have been, by the native papers. The influence of the Times in this country is not for a moment to be compared to the effect one violent effusion might exercise over the impulsive and excitable peoples of Hindostan. But while we entirely concur in the propriety of establishing a strict censorship of the press, we could wish that his Lordship had at the same time founded a Government paper, in the vernacular language, for the express purpose of diffusing accurate information and of correcting the errors and absurdities circulated by independent journals.—Ed. A. I. M.]

WHO IS TO BLAME?

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—Unlike the majority of London journals, the Indian Mail, I believe, opens its columns to the truth, even at the risk of showing that that much-abused corporation, the Honourable East-India Company, are not the monsters of iniquity which it is sought to represent them.

"Hit him, he has no friends," is the cry, and every newspaper, from the Times to the Press, is loud in its denunciations of the Company,—of the stupidity that failed to foresee the mutiny, and the miserable penny-wise economy which prevented the authorities from being properly prepared to meet it. The English people are thus taught to put all the blame of our recent misfortunes on the Court of Directors.

The British public, except in stirring times like the present, if we are to take the conduct of their representatives in Parliament as an index of their feelings and opinions, know little, and care less, about India,—the thinness of an Indian debate, in ordinary seasons, when the peaceful interests of India form the theme, being a proverb.

Now it is, however, far different. Their feelings of sympathy and pity for the sufferings of their unfortunate countrymen are thoroughly excited by the recent frightful massacres which, alas! come home to all. They are wounded in their tenderest feelings, and but few among them are free from the deepest and most harrowing anxiety, even if they have not already had good reason to deplore the ruthless ferocity with which some near and dear relative has been torn from them.

They look around to find some one on whose devoted head to "pour the vials of their wrath," as the predisposing cause, if not the actual promoter of so much misery and bloodshed. Like all men labouring under excitement, they are swayed by their passions, rather than their reason. Hence a defective logic. There are but three European regiments belonging to the Company at each presidency,—ergo, the Court of Directors must be to blame, first for the deficiency of European troops, and constructively for the massacre of Delhi. There are only 25,000 Queen's troops in India where there should have been 50,000,—ergo, the impending fate of Agra and Lucknow will be chargeable to the Court. There are only ten or twelve European officers with each Native regiment, instead of the full complement of 400; the Court have refused to supply the place of the absentees by increasing the establishment. There are only some 120 miles of railroad completed, when a line to the North-West Provinces would have "saved India," by giving ubiquity to the few European troops: ergo, the Court obstruct the formation of railways.

Now, Sir, admitting, as I readily do, that the Company should have had many more European regiments,—that the number of European officers with each Native regiment is sadly deficient,—that the practice of withdrawing for staff duty, and more especially for service with local corps, officers who should be with their regiments, displays a false economy,—that the warnings of Sir Charles Napier and others ought not to have remained unheeded,—that railways progress with much languor, when a wise executive would have seen the importance of their rapid completion,—and, finally, that the system of divided authority between the Board of Directors and the Board of Control is objectionable in principle, and faulty in practice,—still I must protest against the assumption that whatever defects or shortcomings of the system may be made to stand out in bold relief by the occurrence of the present crisis, are of necessity, or fairly, without inquiry, to be charged to the Court of Directors, and the Court alone.

I have not the good fortune to be in the confidence either of her Majesty's Government, or the Honourable Court, and cannot, therefore, fathom the mysteries of the arrangement by which the two authorities are made to blend into one, but common sense tells me that the divided control is a form of government forced on the East-India Company, not only obnoxious to them in principle, and vexatious in its operation, but entailing on them, as is shown, undivided responsibility whenever public excitement requires a scapegoat!

Let it not be forgotten, therefore, that while incurring all the responsibility of the acts of the Indian Government, either of commission or omission, the Court of Directors are themselves really the victims of this said divided authority.

Let it not be forgotten, that every liberal, enlightened, or prudent measure they may propose, is liable to be mutilated, emasculated, or cushioned, by that ministerial anomaly, the President of the Indian Board, who himself, without the power of originating a single measure for the benefit of the interests of which he is supposed to be the guardian, is able by his "sic volo" to thwart and counteract carefully matured measures, which eighteen gentlemen of practical knowledge and long local experience may deem of vital importance to the good government of India.

Let it not be forgotten, that the Court of Directors are furthermore responsible for any order passed in their name, although it may in no way embody their views, and may have been signed by them under protest, and sometimes under legal compulsion.

Let it not be forgotten, that her Majesty's Government escape all blame under this divided authority, for their frequent obstruction and rejection of well digested propositions submitted to them; and above all, let it not be forgotten, that the President of the Board of Control holds the purse-strings, and that not a European soldier, nor an additional officer, can be added to the Company's forces,—nor an additional mile of railway authorised, without his full sanction,—and when it is added, that this functionary, so powerful for good or evil, is sometimes a gentleman with no qualification for the post beyond a certain amount of subordinate official training, and a certain fluent flippancy in debate,—devoid of all practical knowledge of India, and only able to oppose crotchety theories to the actual experience of those whom he controls and obstructs,—the extent to which the Court of Directors should have the odium cast on them for what the Indian Government does, or omits to do, becomes a point worthy of investigation, and one which, with reference to the present crisis, will, it is to be hoped, be thoroughly inquired into at the proper time, and in the proper place.

I remain, sir, your obedient servant,
September 12, 1857.

PROMOTION IN THE BENGAL ARMY.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—I observe by the Indian General Orders, published in your Indian Mail, that promotion in the Bengal army still goes on, as if the army was in existence. Surely this will be attended with much injustice and future inconvenience. Promotion for the present should be in abeyance, or date of rank be left subject to future adjustment, otherwise, what will be the consequence? The officers on the staff or civil employ (absent from the regiments who have been most mutinous and atrocious, killing all those present) will find themselves superseding their military brethren of the less mutinous regiments, as well as those of the loyal regiments of the other presidencies; a result which would in effect be a premium for mutiny. It appears to me, the ordinary course of promotion by regimental casualties, as in war, must be departed from. A system of promotion, which will distribute and equalise the advantages amongst the officers of the less mutinous regiments, with those where nearly all have been destroyed, must take place; otherwise much unjust supercession will take place. And no young ensign should be posted to a regiment until the reorganization of the army, and readjustment of ranking, have taken place, or we may see young cadets just going out superseding ensigns, and even lieutenants, who have been in India four or five years.

Yours, &c.

Leamington, September 15, 1857.

EFFECT OF HEAT ON SUBMARINE CABLES.

Sir W. B. O'Shaughnessy has addressed a letter to the Times in refutation of the statement that submarine cables are not affected by heat, and adduces the following facts as at variance with that position. At the same time, Sir William wishes it to be clearly understood that he considers it quite practicable to send out the Atlantic cable to Suez or Kurrachee, in suitable vessels and with special appliances, without much risk from the causes of injury described below:—

"In 1853 the East-India Company sent out to India, in sailing vessels, 700 miles of gutta percha covered wire, made by the company who address you, and packed by them in solid deal cases. On opening these cases in India, some weeks after arrival in the cold season, and without any exposure in the interval, it was found that the copper wire had in many places been forced through the gutta percha, which bore evident marks of softening by heat.

"We further found that a still more serious change had taken place partially, and was in rapid progress, by which the gutta percha became brittle, broke off from the wire whenever bent, and lost all its insulating power. This change had occurred within the unopened cases. To save as much as possible of the wire we coated about 200 miles with tarred yarn, and this arrested the change for a time. Still, eventually we had to condemn as useless about 500 miles of the wire.

"The change in the gutta percha from the plastic to the brittle state is the effect of oxidation. This is proved by an elaborate series of analyses made, at my request, by Professor Hoffmann, of the Royal College of Chemistry, on samples of the gutta percha which had been altered in India.

"Gutta percha in its natural state contains—

Carbon	88.10
Hydrogen	12.40

"When altered by prolonged heat and keeping (this in cases not even once opened) two substances are formed containing—

	No. 1.	No. 2.
Carbon	62.79	67.70
Hydrogen	9.29	10.09
Oxygen	27.92	22.20

"These substances are totally useless as insulators. Wire surrounded by gutta percha thus altered must be considered electrically as so much uncoated metal."

RED SEA TELEGRAPH.

Mr. Andrew has addressed the following letter to the Times:—

"Sir,—A valuable letter appeared in the Times of Saturday from Mr. Walter Wilkins, the well-known telegraph engineer, on the all-important subject of telegraph communication with India.

"Mr. Wilkins says the 'Persian Gulf route saves the use of 2,500 miles of submarine wire. I don't mean the cost of it; that is not now to be thought of. I mean the risks of imperfect manufacture, laying, and of insulation and other matters, which at present seem to be entirely overlooked in the manufacture and laying long and deep lengths of submarine wire.'

"Mr. Wilkins's objections to the Red Sea route are fully borne out by a writer in the Friend of India of November last,—a journal remarkable for the accuracy of its information, and whose authority will scarcely be impugned by the chairman of the Red Sea Company. The Friend asserts that 'The Red Sea is remarkable for the extreme variation of its depth. The line must be extended over shoals scarcely covered by the water, and places where for miles the charts are marked "no bottom." The operation of laying the wire, always difficult and often dangerous, would be still further impeded by the furious gusts which at certain seasons sweep over the Red Sea. The route has but one advantage. The line, except in Egypt, would pass through our own dominions. No foreign power can contest with us the sovereignty of the Red Sea, and the tribes along its shores are powerless a mile from land. The advantage, however, is not sufficient to compensate for the indirectness of the route, its costliness, and the comparative certainty of failure. The second scheme, from Scutari to Bussorah, and thence to Kurrachee, involves a submarine line of only one-third the length. According to Dr. O'Shaughnessy's (now Sir William B. O'Shaughnessy) figures, it would be scarcely longer than the cable now made to connect Newfoundland with the Irish coast:—Persian Gulf by Bussorah, Parah Isle to Rus Malgaram, H. Busheab Island to Cape Task; total, 1,270. With the same weight of two tons a mile, which implies a wire of more than average thickness, and a cable of unprecedented strength, the cost would not exceed 259,000*l*. From Korda to Bagdad the line would be submerged in the river for 410 miles. By this expedient the expense of guards would be diminished, while the cable, lying lengthwise, and not transversely to the stream, could not be injured either by current or storm. The sea cable, shipped in pieces of 400 tons, could be laid down by four ships at once, while on the river the large rafts used by the natives would afford every facility for the work."

"Adverting to the prospectus of the Red Sea route, I would remark that the guarantee is only a subsidy so long as the line is actually at work, and has yet to receive the sanction of Government. The difficulty and risk are not in laying the cable, but in maintaining it. If any light line be laid down, even twice as heavy as the Atlantic cable, it is the opinion of the best and most experienced judges that it cannot be maintained for any length of time, on account of the physical formation of the bottom of the Red Sea, and also from the prevalence of coral reefs, which are represented by nautical men as being as sharp as the back of any ordinary knife. The interruptions so constantly experienced on the four light lines of cable laid between Orfordness and Holland show that in all physical probability a single line in the Red Sea could not be depended upon for a week. If the old Electric Telegraph Company require a special steamer, the Monarch, with a large staff at a heavy expense, to watch and pick up and repair the line in question—about 100 miles long—what would be the strength of the squadron required in the Red Sea?

"It is not only the coral-reef difficulty which renders the maintenance of the line so critical, but the exceeding irregularity of the bottom, in consequence of which the line would in many places be unavoidably suspended across submarine chasms and on sharp rocky edges, on which it would speedily chafe through by the force of its own weight.

"This is the true risk to the shareholders, who may rest assured that if they place the Atlantic cable, or any similar one, in the Red Sea, it would be simply the submersion of their capital, with as good a chance of ever receiving any return from the so-called guarantee as they have of fishing up the golden wheels of Pharaoh's chariot.

"I am, &c.,

THE PRESS IN INDIA.

The Governor-General's Despatch to the Court of Directors, stating his reasons for restricting the liberty of the press, has been published by order of the House of Commons. It is a somewhat lengthy document, divided into twenty-four paragraphs. After reminding the Court that the emancipation of the press in 1835 was condemned by Sir Thomas Munro, and disapproved by the Home Government of 1836, it carefully draws their attention to the Minutes recorded by the most eminent Indian statesmen of that period, insisting upon the necessity of reserving to the Governor-General in Council the power of suspending the liberty of the press in any sudden emergency. A greater danger than could possibly have been contemplated by the framers of that measure having occurred, it became the duty, as well as the undoubted right, of Government to suspend that liberty. It was impossible to make any distinction between the English and the native papers, for one of the former published the reasonable proclamation of the King and mutineers of Delhi. Besides, more than one newspaper in the English language is owned and published by natives for circulation among native readers. And even where there would be no danger of treasonous matter, every precaution must be taken against errors, temper, and indiscretion. For these reasons the Governor-General in Council passed Act No. 15 of 1857, restricting the liberty of the press for one year from that date. Since then two cases have arisen for the enforcement of this Act, which are thus reported:—

"23. The first of these is the case of the Friend of India newspaper. This paper, after the conditions imposed upon the press had been promulgated, and a licence subject to those conditions had been granted to it, published an article which, in our opinion, infringed every one of those conditions. The position of affairs at the time was most anxious. The Bengal native army was in mutiny; the North-Western Provinces were for the moment lost; the King of Delhi and our treacherous sepoys were proclaiming a new empire; small bodies of gallant Englishmen were holding out for government in isolated stations against fearful odds; the revolt was still extending, and the hearts of all Englishmen in India were daily torn by accounts of the massacre of their brethren, and the massacre, and worse than massacre of their women and children. Of this disastrous and extraordinary revolt the only one of the causes that is quite certain is what appears to us almost an insane, and what is not the less a rooted and universal persuasion in the minds of the sepoys and the people of the North-Western Provinces, that it is the fixed design of the British Government to interfere by force with the religious liberty of the people. In this position of affairs it appeared to us that we should fail in our duty if we permitted a newspaper to inflame men's minds against the British Government, to excite suspicion and unfriendly feelings in the minds of native chiefs in relations with us, and, above all, to intensify the prevalent and fatal delusion as to designs on the part of the British Government to destroy caste, and to convert the natives of India by force and fraud. We therefore warned the publisher of this paper that a repetition of such breach of the conditions would be followed by the revocation of his licence. Instead of profiting by this warning, the next issue of the paper contained an article repeating, but in offensive and defiant terms, the substance of the article originally objected to. We were on the point of recalling the licence of this newspaper, when we received from the friends of the proprietor an assurance, in which we placed reliance, that arrangements had been completed under which in future the paper would be conducted in conformity with the prescribed conditions. As our object is to obtain the necessary security with the least possible injury to private interests, we have on this assurance abstained from the withdrawal of the licence.

"24. We have revoked the licence granted to the proprietor of a lithographic press in Calcutta, and directed the seizure of all the printing materials, &c., belonging to it. Our reason for taking this step is, that in the Gulshan-i-Nau Behar, a Persian newspaper published at the press in question, there appeared on the 21st ult. two articles of a grossly seditious character, obviously designed to excite disaffection towards the Government and to encourage resistance to its authority."

TRANSPORT OF TROOPS IN INDIA.

We read in the Friend of India the following important statement, bearing on the transport of our troops:—

"The line of railway is open for 44 miles from Allahabad, and will materially assist in the conveyance of troops and supplies towards Cawnpore. In some places the rails had been torn up by the mutineers, but Mr. Betagh, the resident engineer, has repaired the damage. The work of repairing required some fighting; but they not only effected their object, but destroyed two villages, and saved some property belonging to Major Ryves. The whole party mustered but 3 Europeans and 12 Sikh soldiers, yet they attacked 150 men, who, however, did not wait for the assault, but fled, so that no prisoners could be taken. But a little further on a more signal success was obtained. Mr. Betagh charged 50 men, and took out of these no less than 25 prisoners. Fourteen of these men were hanged; many were recognised to be sepoys of the late 6th N.I."

By this time, however, we trust the railway is properly defended from attack and the engineering service has ceased to be thus militant. Perhaps it is worth noting in this connection that the little wheeled carriages already manufactured in some quantity in Calcutta for the purposes of the grand trunk line are admirably calculated for the ordinary transport of European soldiers—for which purpose, indeed, they have been already used—and will quite supersede the necessity of sending out carts for that purpose, as the Times has suggested. The transports needed are for the river navigation, not for the land service. It will be no easy task to forward about 36,000 troops from Kurrachee and Calcutta to the scene of revolt, in one continuous stream, without the largest and most efficient provision for river transports. We trust that in this, as in the primary matter of sending out the reinforcements themselves, we may count on the forethought and energy of the Government.—Economist.

GENERAL HAVELOCK.—It may not be generally known that this gallant officer, whose name has become one of the most familiar to British ears among the most splendid instances of courage and devotion which are now signaling our arms in the East, is a native of the banks of the Wear, and a member of a Sunderland family. His father, Mr. William Havelock, was a well-known ship-owner and coalfitter, residing at Ford Hall, the present residence of Mr. W. Hay, where the family, since so distinguished as soldiers, were born. Another brother, Col. W. Havelock, well known in all the Oriental campaigns as one of the most dashing cavalry officers in the service, fell at the head of the 14th Light Dragoons, in one of the bloody engagements on the Sutlej.

MAJOR BANKS.—This distinguished officer, now in command at Lucknow, has been in India twenty-eight years, is a first-rate linguist, and has seen much active service; among other campaigns he served in the second expedition to Cabul. He filled the office of deputy-secretary to the Government of India Military Department for some years, and in that capacity went through Scinde with Lord Hardinge, and Pegu with Lord Dalhousie. The latter nobleman appointed him to be his military secretary, and sent him from Ootacamund to Lucknow, two years ago, on business connected with the annexation. He is commissioner in Oude in charge at Lucknow, and so succeeds his late chief. Sir C. Napier, in a letter dated May 31, 1850, thus writes:—"There are some glorious magistrates, who really do exalt the honour and power of England in the East. I came through a district governed by a Mr. Banks. I do not know him, I never saw him, but I really felt proud of my countryman. Yet even there I saw tyranny by the Board which rules the Punjab; he cannot help that, all he does himself is splendid."

THE LATE SIR HUGH WHEELER, K.C.B.—In the short notice of General Wheeler's services which appeared in our columns on Saturday, the 29th ult., we omitted to mention that that gallant officer was present at, and took an active part in the Battle of Aliwal. The despatch of Sir Harry Smith, dated from the Camp at Aliwal, Jan. 30, 1846, states that Brigadier Wheeler came up with the rest of the army, after a long and forced march, only just two days before the battle, and, being placed in command of the 2nd division, rendered very important services in gaining the day. Sir Harry Smith writes,—"While these operations were going on upon the right . . . I observed the brigade under Brigadier Wheeler, an officer in whom I have the greatest confidence, charging and carrying guns and everything before it, again collecting his line and moving on in a manner which ably displayed the coolness of the Brigadier and the gallantry of his irresistible brigade." And again,—"In Brigadier Wheeler, my second in command, I had a support that I could rely upon with the utmost confidence, and most gallantly did he discharge his duty." In justice to his memory, it should also be mentioned that he was returned among the list of those who were "severely wounded" at the battle of Moodkee, in which he held a command on the divisional and brigade staff.—Times.

RED SEA TELEGRAPH COMPANY.—A prospectus has been issued of the Red Sea Telegraph Company, with a capital of 300,000*l.*, for constructing the first section—Alexandria to Aden—of a line to India. The India Company have guaranteed a minimum annual revenue of 20,000*l.* on this portion, subject to the approval, yet to be obtained, of the Board of Control. Ultimately, it is contemplated to extend the cable to Kurrachee, but meanwhile the proposed section would, it is stated, reduce the distance from India to one week. A purchase of the Atlantic cable is proposed.

THE EAST-INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE.—The Government of India have increased the salaries of the clerks in the Government offices in the Arracan provinces. Such an increase is to continue so long as the cost of provisions in those provinces remains at its present high rate. Mr. S. Scott, Madras civil service, has been permitted to resign the service. We understand that the following gentlemen are about to resign the service:—Mr. R. P. Martin and Mr. H. S. Ravenshaw, Bengal civil service; Mr. C. A. Bird and Mr. A. S. Mathison, Madras civil service. We understand that the East-India Company have decided upon paying the passage of civilians under orders to return to their duty who may embark for India before the end of the present month.—Civil Service Gazette.

REINFORCEMENTS FOR INDIA.—The following force is under orders for embarkation for India as reinforcements:—One troop of horse artillery, three batteries of royal artillery, five companies of royal artillery, four companies of royal engineers, three regiments of cavalry, and four regiments of infantry, to embark as soon as transport is ready.

QUEEN'S TROOPS IN INDIA.—When all the reinforcements now on their way or under orders for India have reached their destination, the total force of Queen's troops at the disposal of the Indian Government will be as follows:—11 regiments of cavalry, 55 regiments of infantry, 4 troops of horse artillery, 11 companies of foot artillery, 7 field batteries, 4 companies of engineers, making, together with the Company's European regiments, a total in round numbers of 87,000 Europeans.—Overland Mail.

THE LONDON AND EASTERN BANKING CORPORATION.—A petition has been presented to Vice-Chancellor Wood on behalf of Mr. Abel Stuart, of South-bank, Regent's-park, and Mr. Geo. Duplex, of Torrington-square, praying that an order absolute may be granted for the dissolution of the London and Eastern Banking Corporation, and that its affairs may be wound up under the provisions of the Joint-Stock Companies Winding-up Acts. The Vice-Chancellor Page Wood has fixed the 21st inst. for the appointment of an official liquidator.

THE ISLAND OF PERIM.—According to the Independence Belge—by no means, however, an infallible authority—the Austrian Internuncio at Constantinople has proposed to the ambassadors of the other powers to send a collective note to the British Government on its occupation of this island. A protest, addressed by the Ottoman Porte, was very properly disregarded, and it is suggested by a correspondent of the Times that the best answer to the collective note would be “the immediate seizure of Jidda. Valid reasons, not pretexts, are at hand to justify this step, in the unsatisfied claims of British subjects on the Government of that province. Both the English and Indian press have been disposed to ascribe the present mutiny in India to Russian intrigues. It is much more probably due to Turkish lies working upon Mahomedan fanaticism. The only place where Indian Mahomedans see Europeans in contact with Turks is in Jidda, and there the position of the two Christian Consuls is so unworthy of the great countries they represent that we cannot be surprised if the vauntings so loudly indulged in, of the subjection of all Christian princes to the Sultan of Constantinople, seem credible. It is probable that the Indian Mahomedans looked to the victorious Sultan of the Turks for assistance against their infidel masters, rather than to the Czar of Muscovy. The Turks have gained in the far East almost as much prestige by the last war as they have lost in the estimation of all the Europeans who have come in contact with them.”

CALCUTTA.—The Oriental Gas Company have received a letter from their managing director, from which the following is an extract, describing the first introduction of gas into Calcutta, which took place on the 6th of July last:—

“Calcutta, July 20.

“I have much pleasure in informing you that Calcutta is at last lighted with gas. It is about four years since the project was started in London. The delays and tedious correspondence we have had with the authorities, and the distance we have had to bring every article required in our works, with the losses sustained at the commencement by shipwreck, will show our shareholders the difficulties which have beset us. On Monday, the 6th inst., we lighted all the public lamps from Bow Bazaar, along Cossitollah, Chowringhee Road to the corner of Harrington Street, in all fifty-five (all lamp-posts). The success was complete, not one contretemps of any kind, and we have had them lighted steadily every night since, and they now are lighted as regularly and with as little fuss as if Calcutta had had gas for twenty years, barring always the wonderment and excitement of the natives. For the first week the crowds which paraded the streets were immense, and their conjectures as to the cause of the light were amusing. Even now, crowds assemble every evening at each end, and run along the line with the lamplighter, setting up a shout of astonishment as he applies his lamp to the burner. The commissioners are highly pleased, as are also Lord Canning and Mr. Halliday. My own house, Prosono Coomar's house, Bodry's hotel, and F. W. Browne's are already lighted, and my servants are perfectly au fait at the gas-lighting. Prosono had about 10,000 people in his house for the first two or three nights, gazing at the brilliancy of his lights with astonishment. We are getting laying mains and fixing up the lamp-posts and brackets as fast as we can. We are to go on along the Chitpore Road as far as the lamp-posts will admit, and we are laying mains and fixing brackets along Radha Bazaar, China Bazaar, &c.”

INLAND NAVIGATION OF INDIA.—An influential meeting of merchants and others was held in the Manchester Town Hall, to receive information in reference to the intended operations of the newly-formed Oriental Inland Steam Company. The meeting was addressed by Mr. J. A. Turner, M.P., who presided, and by Captain Hall (of the Nemesis), Mr. Bourne, and Lieut. Wood, of the Indian Navy; these three gentlemen being a deputation from the company. It was stated that the company were about to commence the steam navigation of the Indus, by means of flat-bottomed boats of 24 inches draught, trains of which would be towed by steamboats of 200 horse power, and under terms of a concession from the East-India Company, which was tantamount to a guarantee of 10 per cent. on the outlay. Manchester enterprise was invited to co-operate for the extension of the scheme to the Godavery and other rivers, with the view of increasing the supply of cotton. Several gentlemen expressed their conviction of the importance of extending the inland navigation of India, and the chairman commented emphatically on the urgency of the cotton supply question, and the apparent neglect of it by a large portion of the trade. Resolutions were passed unanimously, recognizing the importance of the scheme, and appointing an influential committee, for the diffusion of information on the subject and aiding the London board in the prompt execution of the enterprise.

TITLES TO LAND IN BOMBAY.—Returns relative to the commission issued by the Government of Bombay to inquire into the titles and to resume lands held in “inam,” or rent-free, in hereditary occupation by native land-owners in the southern Mahratta country, have just been printed by order of the House of Commons. These papers show that the total number of inam claims adjudicated upon by the commission up to the 30th of April, 1856, was 6,913, of which 6,787 belong to the southern division, and the remaining 126 to the northern division of the Presidency. The estimated accession to the revenue from these resumption is—Rs. 4,31,773 6an. 2p.; of which Rs. 1,58,467 0an. 9p. have been, and Rs. 2,73,306 5an. 5p. will, after the lapse of one, two, or three lives, be recovered. Besides a variety of correspondence, the returns include a statement of the proceedings in the three first and three last trials where lands have been resumed yielding a rental respectively of 100l. a-year, together with a copy of the Act No. 11 (1852) of the Governor-General in Council for the adjudication of these titles. This Act provides for the appointment of an inam commissioner, with assistants, in any zillah or other division of the territories subject to the Presidency of Bombay, and empowers them to procure the attendance of witnesses and to take evidence. Annexed to the Act are schedules defining the duties of the commissioners and their assistants, and also precribing the rules to govern their decisions.

THE TELEGRAPH TO INDIA.—This subject has not been lost sight of by the Government. Many months before the first tidings of the recent disasters in India arrived in England, arrangements had been entered into and negotiations commenced with the view of completing a perfect system of telegraphs between England and India. And before we proceed to consider what the public interest now further requires in this direction, it may be as well that we should state what has already been done, and what is in progress. The last accounts from India were received by telegraph from Cagliari, a small town at the southern extremity of the Island of Sardinia, nearly an entire week before they reached us through Trieste or Marseilles. More than two years ago the enterprising Government of Sardinia established this submarine telegraph from Spezzia to Corsica, and thence to Sardinia; thus opening a direct communication from Cagliari with England through France. This was so far in a direct line to Malta. The English Government, therefore, some months ago entered into a contract with the Mediterranean Electric Telegraph Company to construct a line from Cagliari to Malta, and thence to Corfu. These two lines will be laid down in the course of next month, and thus in a few weeks we shall receive the Indian news immediately upon its arrival at Malta. This will at least be one point gained. At the same time that this arrangement was made, the Government received overtures from the Government of Austria for the latter to construct a line from Rugusa, on the shores of the Adriatic, to Alexandria, passing through Corfu, the effect of which would be to complete the entire line through Malta and Corfu to Alexandria. This arrangement with the Austrian Government is, we understand, upon the point of being concluded, and it is expected that early in the spring the line will be laid. Thus by these arrangements, made some months ago, there is every probability that early in the next year we shall have a telegraphic communication perfected from London to Alexandria; which will bring Bombay within fifteen days of England. In six weeks our communication with Malta will be completed, and in six months with Alexandria. It remains to complete it to Kurrahee, and the Government has shown every desire to aid those who are prepared to embark in that undertaking.—Examiner.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CHAPLAINS FOR INDIA.—We are informed that two Roman Catholic clergymen have volunteered their services as chaplains to the army in India—namely, the Rev. John Kyne, of St. Peter's Chapel, Clerkenwell, and the Rev. Edward Lescher, one of the priests attached to the Chapel of the Holy Family on Saffron Hill. They have been already armed by Cardinal Wiseman with the necessary "faculties," or spiritual authority, and will leave London for the East with as little delay as possible.—Times.

THE TRANSPORT SERVICE TO INDIA.—We are informed that the European and American Steam Shipping Company, who are now the owners of the fleet of ships built for the India postal service via the Cape, by the General Screw Steam Shipping Company, have made a proposal to the Chairman and East-India Board to establish a monthly line of steam transports from Southampton, overland, to Bengal, or such of the Presidencies as may most require immediate reinforcements. The fleet possessed by the contractors consists of eight powerful screw steamships, already most favourably known during the late war, and fully capable, as we are informed, of carrying out the proposed service. Four of these vessels have been already chartered by the East-India Company—the Golden Fleece, 2,700 tons; the Lady Jocelyn, 2,250 tons; the Queen of the South, 2,250 tons; and the Hydaspes, 2,250 tons. The other four now employed upon the Bremen and New York trade, of equal size and similar accommodation, it is suggested, shall be withdrawn from that trade and placed at the disposal of the East-India Board in the course of the months of October and November, so as to give a perfect line of steam communication with India. The first of the ships already despatched to India could discharge her troops and reach Suez in sufficient time to receive the regiments forwarded from Southampton in the month of October, be they draughts or reserves, while she could also deliver at Suez such of the British troops invalided as had reached Calcutta or the other Presidencies by the end of September or October. The advantage of this arrangement, shortly stated, would be a direct and regular communication with India monthly, or more frequently if necessary, by ships within the absolute control of the Board, with the power to forward to Bombay, within forty-five or fifty days from England, such reserves or reinforcements as may be required, and with a speed and certainty of despatch which has not as yet been attempted. One of the peculiar features of the service is, that the four ships on the Indian side of the Isthmus being of precisely the same character in point of size and fittings with those on the European side, the troops embarked in England, on reaching Suez from Alexandria, would find the same accommodation prepared for them there as that from which they had but a few hours before disembarked,—an advantage which those who are familiar with the transport of large bodies of men can alone entirely appreciate.—Observer.

BOOKS.

Myra; or, The Rose of the East. A Tale of the Affghan War. In Nine Cantos. By ELLA HAGGARD. Longmans and Co.

A SIMPLE story, told in simple rhymes. The scene is laid partly in the Mahbleswar hills, and partly in Afghanistan, though the curtain rises on the brilliant revelry of a "lovely and joyous band," assembled in a magnificent mansion in the island of Salsette. During a lull in the music, "a graceful youth and a gentle maid" saunter "through hall and corridor along," until they reach a "broad verandah's pleasing shade." The youth had come of gentle blood, but had contrived, like many other young gentlemen of equally ancient lineage, to dissipate his patrimony so that his worldly goods were reduced, in poetic phraseology, to his "good broadsword." The maiden fair was both wealthy and high-born, and the only child of a "stern parent," whose sole solicitude was to find a suitable match for his beauteous daughter. Apparently the young lady, having completed her education at a London or Brighton boarding-school, had returned in "bursting womanhood's full flow" to her sire, whose

"— solitary heart

Had nigh forgot affection's tender art."

Leaning over the balustrade of the verandah, this interesting pair, having duly gazed at the Chinese lamps and listened to the plashing of a fountain, very naturally dropped into sentimental conversation. The lady, we regret to say, addressed her broadsword companion as Walter, and of his patronymic no mention is anywhere made. The gentleman was at first more respectful, and begged the "sweet maiden, purest of her sex," to be his father and mother—Ay-ma-lap, as a Hindoo would say. But presently he, too, becomes familiar, and asks the "gentle Myra" to give him, in token of friendship, the rose "that blushes on her bosom fair." She also blushed, and "heaved her breast;" then, striving to speak, burst into tears, "gave the rose, and gently breathed his name." Matters had now drifted into what Brother Jonathan would call a "tarnation fix;" but the young people were rescued from the embarrassment of a situation of which neither was master, by the sound of footsteps. The intruder proved to be "an arrogant, officious wight," named Maximian, seemingly an ex-sheriff, alderman, or lord mayor.

"Proud of the wealth whence flowed his right

To bear, not grace, the rank of knight."

Sir Maximian requests "lovely Myra's" hand for the next polka, and the next moment—

"With careless elegance her white arms twine" round the happy cit. Walter, of course, is furious, and lays his hand upon the hilt of his fortune—he was too canny to lose sight of that even in dancing. But in due time everybody goes to bed, and Myra passes rather a bad night. On the morrow the sun rose as usual, looking very red in the face, whereupon hyenas and jackals slunk away, and parrots came forth to “scream harsh delight”—“hunger,” in simple prose. Maximian also rose, and placing “his form” in “a cushioned palanquin,” bade his bearers hasten

“To where a mansion tall through mangoes showed;
For there Montresor, Myra's sire, abode.”

The young lady likewise shook off her troubled slumbers, and—either before or after breakfast—practised at the harp. Scarcely had she finished her second song, when her father entered her “chamber bright,” and informed her that Sir Maximian requested permission to make a formal tender of his heart and hand, adding that the amorous knight had observed and pardoned her love passage with Walter. Myra tosses her head, promises obedience, but refuses to obey, and finally declares that she will marry Walter, or remain for ever single, and “lead apes in hell.” The “stern parient” thinks he sees her mother—then a saint in heaven—and very naturally rushes out of the room.

When the curtain again rises, the “perfumed roses” of Cabul are blooming over the unburred bones of heroes. A British army has been destroyed, and one sole fugitive makes his way to Jellalabad. It was not Walter. The “illustrious garrison” still held out, but Myra, sick at heart and enfeebled in frame, was taken by her father to the Mahabeshwar hills, which are described with rapturous enthusiasm. Amid the glorious scenery of those mountains Myra's affliction is robbed of its sting, and she gradually subsides into a dreamy state of repose. The respite is brief. Walter's faithful servant, Ahmed, finds his way to her retreat, and tells how he saw his master struck to the ground by a crowd of Ghilzyes, and how at his bidding he had himself escaped, in order to convey to her the flower she gave to Walter on that eventful night. The shock was too much for her,—she gasped for breath, and burst a blood-vessel, and “in ensanguined glow from her pale lips the vital torrent gushed.”

Wonders never cease. A hoarse voice is borne in a palanquin through “Brahmins, Gentoos, Hindoos of every caste,

And Islam's sons—neath hostile banners ranged;
Parsees, with towering caps, careering fast
In cars grotesque, by fashion's hand unchanged;
Sleek Persians, by the love of gold estranged;
Jews from Bagdad, long-robed, of beauteous mien.”

Through this motley throng the “scarce-clothed hamals, strong of limb,” fray a passage to Montresor's house. Out springs the owner of the hoarse voice—Walter, in propria persona, who, after many hair-breadth escapes, had come to claim his bride, armed with a letter announcing his succession to his uncle's broad acres in merry England. Alas! he came too late. Myra was rapidly sinking into a decline, from which no human skill could avail to save her. A very edifying death-bed scene then ensues, and Walter returns to England with Montresor, whom he ever after regards as his adopted father. He himself is brought to a serious way of thinking by a little girl, six years of age, whom he accidentally meets in the churchyard, and who talks to him in a very sensible and proper manner.

Such is a brief outline of the plot, which might have been worked up into a very readable prose story. It is therefore to be regretted that the really talented author should have travelled out of the way to invest it in a garb beyond her powers of construction. Some of the descriptions of scenery, indeed, are well drawn, but rhymes and poetical phraseology alone do not constitute poetry.

ADVICE TO OFFICERS IN INDIA.

By JOHN McCOSH,

London: WM. H. ALLEN and Co., 7, Leadenhall Street.

FUND FOR THE RELIEF OF THE SUFFERERS

THE INDIAN MUTINY.

At a Public Meeting held in the Egyptian Hall, Mansion House, on Tuesday, the 25th of August.

The Right Honourable the LORD MAYOR in the Chair.

The following resolutions were unanimously agreed to:—

Resolution 1.—Proposed by Lieut.-Colonel Henderson, seconded by W. Dent, Esq.—

That this meeting, sympathizing with the many helpless sufferers by the late mutinies in India, who are now reduced to a state of utter destitution, feels itself called upon to extend its public benevolence to this calamity, and its determination of the value of the services of the rebel army, and of the rabble abettors of its cruelty, to helpless women and children and our unarmed fellow-subjects in the East; and trusts that the energetic efforts of the British Government and of the East India Company for the repression of the rebellion and the punishment of the guilty, may, by the Divine blessing, be crowned with the earliest success.

Resolution 2.—Proposed by Sir Admiral Sir Stephen Lushington, K.C.B., seconded by the Rev. J. Leifchild—

That, in consideration of the extreme urgency of the case, and the necessity for promptly meeting the wants of the sufferers—now literally depending on others in Calcutta and elsewhere for clothing and food, in addition to their cruel loss of husbands and parents—this meeting most anxiously entrusts the benevolent contributions of its fellow-citizens and of the public at large, and recommends that the subscribers list be kept open at Messrs. Smith, Payne, and Co.'s, the Oriental Bank Corporation, the Agra Bank, and the other London bankers, and that the accounts, as collected, be despatched by each mail to the Right Hon. the Governor-General, to be by his Lordship placed at the disposal of the Calcutta Committee, or other recognised committees and distributors employed in India in carrying out the object in view.

Resolution 3.—Moved by W. Theobald, Esq., seconded by Alderman Rose—

That this meeting is of opinion that the example of the City of London is deserving of the imitation of the other cities and towns of the United Kingdom, and that the Committee be now appointed be requested to promote the above suggestion.

Resolution 4.—Moved by Captain Lynch, seconded by General Tulloch—

In order more effectually to promote the desire of this meeting, the undermentioned gentlemen be requested to form themselves into a Committee, and that the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor be solicited to act as its President:—

SECRETARY—Charles Lennox Peel, Esq.

The primary and immediate object of this Company is to lay down a telegraphic cable in the Red Sea, between Suez and Aden, so as to effect telegraphic communication thus far with India at the earliest possible period. This object may be completed in a few months, simultaneously with the Mediterranean telegraph to Alexandria.

By this means communication with all India will be brought within one week, and by the extension to Kurrachee, which will immediately follow, hourly communication will be established.

The political value of this undertaking at the present juncture is too painfully established by recent occurrences in India to require comment, while its social and commercial importance is scarcely less urgent.

The Honourable the East-India Company participate so fully in these views, that they have consented to guarantee a minimum annual revenue of £20,000 on the first section to Aden, from the date of the first message received, accompanied by assurances of every necessary assistance and support. This arrangement only awaits the confirmation of her Majesty's Government, without which the Company will not proceed.

As a commercial investment, the returns, which have been carefully prepared, and which may be inspected at the Office, show a profit far exceeding any ordinary returns from similar enterprises.

This statement will be appreciated by those connected with the trade of India, to whom it will be evident that all orders for produce, insurance, shipments, arrivals, departures, accidents, change of destination of vessels, &c. &c., would be the subject of telegraphic communication.

It is proposed, so soon as the capital is subscribed, to purchase the Atlantic Cable, or provide a new Cable, whichever may be decided to be best or the object in view.

The Cable will be laid in sections of from 300 to 600 miles, and arrangements have been made with responsible contractors to undertake the risk of laying it.

The Company have secured the necessary concessions from the Turkish and Egyptian Governments.

The urgency of the undertaking is universally admitted. The remunerative results are placed beyond all doubt. Perfect immunity from all risk is secured by the Limited Liability Act, and by the guarantees of the Government, the East-India Company, and the contractors. As a great and important national question, it is only necessary to urge upon all who feel any interest in securing immediate telegraphic communication with India to give their earnest and cordial support to an enterprise which is brought before the public with this sole object.

Application for Shares may be sent to the brokers, Messrs. Scott, Corthorn, and Scotts, 16, Throgmorton Street, or to the Company's Offices, No. 8, Moorgate Street; but no application will be considered, unless a deposit of £1 on each Share applied for is previously made to the bankers of the Company. The deposit will be returned if the application is not acceded to.

MAP OF INDIA;

Showing the British Territories subdivided into Collectorate, and the position and boundary of each Native State; chiefly compiled from Trigonometrical Surveys, executed by order of the Honourable Court of Directors of the East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 6 in. high; 5 ft. 8 in. wide. £2; or on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3. 3s.

The object kept in view in compiling this Map has been to render it available to the greatest possible extent for popular use. For this purpose the names of all stations, civil and military, are inserted, as well as those of all towns and places of note likely to be looked for. To make clear the subdivisions of the whole of the country, both British and native, the limits of the various districts and collectorates, with their names, are distinctly indicated. The railways are laid down, and the trunk roads conspicuously coloured. The newly-acquired district in Burmah is included. To avoid, however, the confusion consequent upon over-crowding, and make the Map clear and easy for reference, the names of many small villages, and places of no present importance, have been omitted, and thus a very wide measure of comprehensiveness has been attained, while needless diffusiveness has been avoided.

About 10 months ago he commenced using Holloway's Ointment and Pills, and these wonderful remedies in 12 weeks left him without a wound or blemish, enjoying sound and robust health.

Sold by all Medicine Vendors, at PROFESSOR HOLLOWAY'S Establishments, 244, Strand, London, and 80, Maiden Lane, New York; by A. Stamps, Constantinople; A. Guidici, Smyrna; E. Muir, Malta; and by all European and Native Vendors of Medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

TOURISTS and TRAVELLERS, exposed to the scorching rays of the Sun and heated particles of Dust, will find ROWLANDS' KALYDOR a most refreshing preparation for the complexion, dispelling the cloud of languor and relaxation, allaying all heat and irritability, and immediately affording the pleasing sensation attending restored elasticity and healthful state of the Skin. Freckles, Tan, Spots, Pimples, Flushes, and Discolorations fly before its application, and give place to delicate clearness, with the glow of beauty and of bloom. In cases of Sunburn, or Stings of Insects, its virtues have long been acknowledged. Price 3s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

The heat of summer also frequently communicates a dryness to the hair; and a tendency to fall off, which may be completely obviated by the use of ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL, a delightfully fragrant and transparent preparation, and, as an invigorator and purifier of the hair, beyond all precedent.

Nor at this season can we be too careful to preserve the teeth from the deleterious effects of vegetable acids (the immediate cause of tooth-ache), by a systematic employment, night and morning, of ROWLANDS' ODONTO, or Pearl Dentifrice, a white powder, compounded of the rarest and most fragrant exotics. It bestows on the teeth a pearl-like whiteness, frees them from tartar, and imparts to the gums a healthy firmness, and to the breath a grateful sweetness and purity.—Price 2s. 9d. per box.

HANWELL COLLEGE, MIDDLESEX.

INDIA AND THE COLONIES.

The increasing importance of the cultivation of the LANGUAGES of the EAST, and the immediate advantages that result from their acquisition, have induced the Principal to make arrangements for affording INSTRUCTION therein.

The rudiments of Hindustani, Persian, and Arabic, will be taught to all who are intended for employment in our Eastern Possessions; and the more advanced Pupils will be prepared for their examination on their arrival in India.

The course of instruction includes not only that which is necessary to pass at Addiscombe or Haileybury, but all that may be requisite for those who are destined to pursue an Indian career.

The history and geography of the country, and the general features of Anglo-Indian life, are taught by a gentleman whose perfect acquaintance with India, from long residence there, peculiarly qualifies him for the duties he has undertaken.

The great advantage to Parents in India of an Institution of this kind must be evident. At a short distance from London, in a proverbially healthy locality, they may place their children from an EARLY AGE under a system from which there need be no departure until their education is completely finished; a class being expressly formed for the matriculation at the University of London, wherein they may matriculate at sixteen years of age, and graduate two years after that time.

Prospectuses, with full particulars, may be had on application to the Rev. J. A. EMERTON, D.D., Hanwell College, Middlesex.

IMPORTANCE OF ASPHALTE FLOORING IN INDIA.

They are laid at a trifling expense, by unskilled labourers, and last for centuries!!! ASPHALTE is particularly recommended for GODOWNS, VERANDAHS, Stables, Footways, Tanks, Roofing, Railway works, and Foundations.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE gloomy anticipations we expressed in our last number have been even more fully realized than we then apprehended. There is, unhappily, not the slightest doubt of the disaster at Arrah, and of the interception of reinforcements for the gallant Havelock. The relief of Lucknow is still in the womb of time; nor is it likely to be effected by the undisciplined rabble of Ghoorkas sent to our aid from Nepal. It is almost laughable to read of those hardy mountaineers marching under umbrellas and fanning themselves, oppressed by the unwanted heat of the plains, and fainting by the roadside. The cholera, too, had broken out in their ranks, and carried off some hundreds. The survivors, brave though they may be, will be no match without guns or cavalry for the overwhelming masses of the rebels, who are well supplied with both those arms of war. It is in the late kingdom of Oude that the main struggle may be expected to take place. The great body of the mutineers is now assembled around Lucknow, where they can be readily reinforced and provisioned from the surrounding country; and the Oude people are a nation of warriors. It is to that quarter, therefore, that public attention will be chiefly directed for some time to come, unless the symptoms of disaffection in the Bombay and Madras presidencies assume a worse hue and become developed into open and general mutiny.

After defeating the rebels at Busserut Gunge, on the 29th July, General Havelock found it necessary to fall back a few marches, in order to dispose of his sick and wounded, and the heavy guns which he had captured. Receiving some reinforcements from General Neill, he again pushed forward on the 4th August, and on the following day routed 5,000 of the enemy, and took some more guns. He then again advanced as far as Busserut Gunge, the limit of his previous march; but learning that 30,000 armed men, with artillery and cavalry, intervened between him and Lucknow, and that he would have to force three fortified villages and cross a deep torrent in the face of superior numbers, the gallant veteran was reluctantly compelled a second time to fall back. On his retreat, which was conducted slowly and in good order, he appears to have been incessantly harassed, and on the 13th was seriously attacked while preparing to recross the river. It seems that the British artillery had already gained the southern bank, for otherwise the two guns brought into play by the enemy might surely have been silenced, without calling upon the handful of Highlanders present at the action to perform the desperate duty of carrying them by storm. It is said that our entire force consisted of barely 800 men, most of whom were Sikhs, and that when the little band of Scottish heroes, only 120 in number, rushed upon the guns, the general exclaimed: "Highlanders, you have saved yourselves and the whole army." The next day the northern bank of the river was evacuated, Cawnpore re-entered, and Lucknow for the moment abandoned to its fate. In fact, General Havelock's victories are reduced to mere glorious exhibitions of valour. He has captured many guns, has slaughtered some hundreds—perhaps thousands—of the enemy, and carried several positions defended by guns badly worked. After all this exertion, and the decimation of his own small force, he is now looking forward to the probability of being himself besieged at Cawnpore. In his absence, a large body of the mutineers had made their appearance before that city of slaughter, but the bold front presented by General Neill had discouraged them from making an attack. Now, however, it is reported that they are gathering from all quarters, and closing round the small British force, who in their turn are anxiously looking for reinforcements from Bengal. For these they would not long have had to wait, had General Lloyd displayed either judgment or nerve at Dinapore. It is a miserable consolation to be told that he has since been suspended, and will be brought to a court-martial. The account given in our last number of the Arrah expedition has been fully confirmed, with two important exceptions. There were none of the 56th present, nor was there any massacre of the Europeans at Arrah. These were rescued by Major Vincent Eyre, of the Bengal artillery, well known to the British public through his interesting description of the disasters in Afghanistan. This distinguished officer proceeded from Buxar with three guns, fifty gunners, 150 of the 5th fusiliers, and twelve gentlemen volunteers, and after a sharp action with about 2,500 armed men under Kowur Singh, succeeded in rescuing a dozen Europeans, a lady, and forty-five Sikhs, who had hitherto heroically held their own against the overwhelming numbers of the enemy. This Kowur Singh, who boasts of being descended from the famous Doomrao Raja, was much esteemed by the English gentlemen with whom he came in contact, and was honoured with a prize medal at the Great Exhibition of 1851, for his skill in the manufacture of fire-arms. He has now proclaimed himself Maharajah of Shahabad, the district in which Arrah is situated, and is supposed to have gone off to Sasseram on the great trunk road. As Sir James Outram has been appointed to the temporary command of the Patna division—his occupation as Chief-Commissioner of Oude being suspended for the moment,—there is no reason to fear any unnecessary dilatoriness in restoring the communication between Allahabad and Calcutta, though the force at his command is small, and he himself enfeebled by sickness.

From Allahabad there is no news. Mr. J. P. Grant, member of the Calcutta Council, has been appointed Lieutenant-Governor of the Central Provinces, with headquarters at Allahabad; but what particular benefit is thence to be expected is not yet very apparent: perhaps he was in the way at Calcutta. In addition to Mrs. Greenway and the three Indo-Britons mentioned in our last as having survived the slaughter at Cawnpore, we have now the gratification of reporting the escape of Lieuts. Thompson and Delafosse, of the 53rd Bengal N.I., and of two European soldiers, whose names are not given. According to the Poona Observer, these officers deny any credit to General Wheeler for the defence of Cawnpore, and assert that he was seldom seen outside his own quarters. We yet trust that there is some mistake in this statement, which is totally at variance with the antecedents of that brave old general. Still, we have seen the debilitating effects of age upon two other good officers—Generals Hewitt and Lloyd,—and may not therefore dismiss as untrue whatever is unacceptable and displeasing to believe.

The British army before Delhi was preparing to assume the offensive. General Nicholson had reported himself, and his column was expected in camp on the 13th August. The rebels had not been quite so aggressive as they were reported to be by former mails. On the evening of the 1st August they began a desultory attack on our pickets, which they kept up until the afternoon of the following day. Indeed, for several days they maintained a distant but harassing fire, though the list of casualties is confined to Capt. Travers, of the 1st Punjab infantry, Lieut. Brown, 33rd N.I., and ten men killed and twenty to thirty wounded. The mutineers are said to have suffered severely from the Enfield rifles; but a greater loss befell them in the explosion of their powder-manufactory, containing 15,000 lbs. of gunpowder, besides a large quantity of ingredients, and a considerable number of the men employed on the premises. This mishap, being attributed to treachery, has greatly dispirited the rebels, and the king is believed to have sent his zenana to Rohtuck. On the 12th August, Brig. Showers achieved a brilliant exploit in storming a battery of four guns outside the Cashmere gate, which for some days past had annoyed the pickets at Metcalfe House. The guns consisted of one 24-pounder howitzer, two 9-pounders, and one 6-pounder, which were safely brought into camp. Our loss was considerable. Lieut. Sheriff, of the 2nd fusiliers, was killed, and Brig. Showers, Major Cope, and Capt. Greville, wounded: the total number put hors de combat is estimated at 112. On the junction of Brig. Nicholson's column the siege of Delhi was to commence in good earnest, and it is said that a large park of breaching artillery was a part of the reinforcements.

From Agra there is nothing new. The Neemuch and Nusseerabad mutineers had not made their appearance, and were supposed to have directed their march to Delhi. Those from Indore had arrived at Gwalior, but no apprehensions were entertained on their account. The fort was well provisioned, though inconveniently crowded. In the Punjab tranquillity continued to be maintained, and the Sikhs were volunteering with alacrity to serve against the rebels. The people generally exhibited an excellent spirit, and were particularly active in cutting up—and despoiling—straggling parties of mutinous sepoys. The 26th N.I., which mutinied at Meeran Meer, after being disarmed, murdered Major Spencer, the quartermaster sergeant, and a native officer; but they have since been virtually exterminated, many having dropped dead from fatigue, many more having been drowned, and not a few shot down by the villagers. At Mooltan the native artillery had been disarmed, and the citadel was occupied by the Bombay fusiliers. It is now asserted that Maharajah Gholab Singh died only on the 2nd of August; but it is certain that his death was officially reported at least two months ago. The hill rajahs remain loyal, and the Maharajah of Puttiala has really done good service. The Nawab of Rampore and the Terai rajah have also cordially co-operated with Colonel McCausland in provisioning Almorah, and in raising Ghorkas for its defence. That officer has now 1,000 brave fellows under his command, and is prepared to defend his post against all comers. A private letter, published in another part of our columns, wisely suggests that the ladies and children now at Nynee Tal should all be removed to Almorah, and that a large proportion of the domestic servants should be sent down to the plains. It is gratifying to perceive that the Government has at length been awakened to the necessity of disencumbering the combatants of the care of providing for their wives and children. An order has been issued that these should at once be sent down to Calcutta, whenever it can be done with safety; and it would be advisable that females from this country were likewise prohibited from proceeding to India.

The panic at Calcutta had partially subsided, through the arrival of Lord Elgin with 1,700 soldiers and marines on board the Shannon and the Pearl. His lordship was to return to China about the end of September, on board a chartered steamer, the Ava. Captain Peel, with a naval brigade of 400 sailors and ten 68-pounders, was on his way up the Ganges in a river steamer, with a train of flat-bottomed boats in tow. During the Mohurram the police force had been strengthened by 100 Europeans, but the festival was passing over peaceably. It is now nearly certain that the ex-king of Oude has been accessory to the insurrection, and it is to be hoped that no false ideas of clemency will shield the royal miscreant from due punishment. Sir Patrick Grant appears to have returned to Madras, where his presence is urgently needed, and the arrival of Sir Colin Campbell at Calcutta rendered his longer stay at that presidency altogether unnecessary. The medical boards have been abolished in all the presidencies. The functions hitherto confided to those boards will for the future be discharged by an officer at each presidency, to be designated Director-General of the Medical Department, and to be appointed for a term of five years' service.

The non-arrival of the Calcutta mails again disables us from giving the latest intelligence from Lower Bengal.

We have said that Sir P. Grant's presence was required in Madras. That presidency, which has sent several regiments to put down the rebellion in the North-West Provinces, has itself become the scene of a mutiny. The 8th Madras cavalry having volunteered their services for Bengal, were marched down from Bangalore for embarkation, though the fact of their being Mahomedans might reasonably have excited some suspicion of their sincerity. But the same infatuated credulity appears to have been entertained by the Madras authorities, as has so frequently and unaccountably been exhibited in the Upper Provinces. When the regiment had arrived about twenty-six miles from the presidency, they refused to proceed any further, unless they received the same pay, batta, and pension as were in force previous to 1837. Some of the officers instantly hastened to Madras by the railway, and laid this insolent application before the Government. It will scarcely be believed that the demand was acceded to, and then the men moved on thirteen miles further, when they again halted, and positively refused to fight against their own countrymen on any terms. There were infantry and artillery there, who would quickly have brought them to their senses. Instead of which, they were simply dismounted and disarmed, but allowed to retain their swords, and are now to do duty at Arcot—their horses being shipped to Calcutta, as the more faithful and useful animals of the two. Not a single man has been punished for this act of mutiny; and the fears and weakness of the Government are thus proclaimed for the encouragement of the ill-disposed.

The Bombay journals contain long accounts of the gallantry displayed by Lieut. Kerr, of the Southern Mahratta horse, in suppressing the Kholapore mutiny. In twenty-four hours he marched seventy-six miles at the head of fifty horsemen, and arrived without the loss of a man or horse. The mutineers were subsequently driven out of a strong position, through the brilliant courage of this young officer, who headed the storming party. The 27th regiment seems to be the only one that has yet broken out into revolt; but the danger was enhanced by the fact of that corps being scattered in detachments through a difficult country. The wing at Rutnagherry has likewise been disarmed. At Belgaum a plot was discovered for attacking the two companies of the 33rd while wearied with their march from Goa. The chief conspirators have been detected and executed. Dharwar is reported as in a state of excitement, but overawed by a company of the ubiquitous 33rd. At Mount Aboo a detachment of the Joudpore legion suddenly attacked the barracks of H.M.'s 83rd and the bungalow of Captain Hall, their commandant, but were speedily repulsed. Mr. A. Lawrence, son of Brig. Geo. St. P. Lawrence, was slightly wounded.

Bombay was recovering from its panic, being reassured by the arrival of a company of European infantry from Bushire, and of eight officers and 241 rank-and-file of H.M.'s 33rd from the Mauritius. The Governor was at the presidency, but the Commander-in-Chief had returned to Poona to organize another movable column. The banks had lowered their rate of discount one per cent. all round, but business was slack, and no improvement could be quoted in Government securities. The Relief Fund amounted to upwards of 6,000*L.*, of which rather more than one half had been paid up. The Committee have engaged two houses, one at Mazagon and the other in Upper Colaba, for the temporary accommodation of fugitives. We trust that they will not be much needed.

BENGAL.

THE MUTINY.

ARRAH.—The mutiny at Dinapore, which ought to have been stifled by General Lk yd, has produced the most wretched results. It was not until the 29th July that the Horungutta steamer was sent to the relief of Arrah, where a few Europeans were beleaguered by three whole regiments. And she was doomed never to reach her destination, for almost within sight of Dinapore, she took the ground. Thus, after a delay of three days and a half, other twelve hours were lost, and it was not until the steamer Bombay, with 150 additional troops, had taken the flat of the Horungutta in tow, that the expedition started. The troops were under the command of Captain Dunbar, of H.M.'s 10th. When they had reached the ferry at the point where the Arrah road crosses the river, the troops were disembarked, and when within a mile of Arrah, they fell into an ambuscade, set by the mutineers in a mangoe tope. They were fired upon, five officers and 150 men were killed, and the rest retreated to Dinapore, which station they reached on the 30th. Up to that time, the little band in Mr. Doyle's house at Arrah were safe, and 200 Europeans and three guns were marching to their relief from Buxar. But the mutineers had been strengthened by a large body of rebels, and have elected Baboo Kowar Sing for their rajah. He already holds his court and with three vakeels of the civil court as vizier, superintendent and darogah, keeps petty state, from the delights of which he will shortly be somewhat rudely awakened.

ALMORAH.—We (Allen's Indian Mail) have received the following letter from a private correspondent, dated Almora, July 24.—“I suppose we may now make up our minds to be cut off for the next few months, so I write to tell you I feel every confidence in holding our position here, come what may. We have 1000 staunch Goorkas, and are enlisting more; and it will take a brave army of some thousands to shake our position. We have some 2 or 300 ladies and children innumerable to protect. We are just making arrangements for their coming to this post. Nynce Tal is too near the plains to be comfortable for them, and as that will be the point of attack, it is well to have them out of the way. It is to be hoped that the Government are sending out troops; overwhelming forces will be required to regain the country, which I look upon as lost in some degree. If you do not hear from me next mail, it will be because we are cut off: however, do not fear but what we shall hold our ground with flying colours, come what may, as we have plenty of grain, and are nursing our resources in every way.

AGRA.—We take the following from the Mofussilite of the 1st August:—“On Tuesday morning last a party of forty-five men of the 3rd European regiment and twenty-five of the mounted militia left the fort under Captain Patton, on a razzia expedition towards Futteypore Sickree. The road was exceedingly bad, in many places being under water, which rendered the march very toilsome both for horse and foot. The force reached its destination about nine o'clock the next morning, and during the day captured five prisoners and recovered two or three hundred muskets and bayonets. Night passed without anything disturbing its serenity, but next morning (Thursday), while a few of the cavalry were escorting Mr. Phillips, the magistrates, and had set fire to a couple of villages by his orders, the Meevatees inhabitants turned out to the number of a hundred or a hundred and fifty, and fired their matchlocks at the incendiaries, but the only man hurt was a dismounted sowar, who was severely cut by a tulwar.

The sound of the firing alarmed the main body under Captain Patton, which immediately turned out to support their comrades. The cavalry upon coming in sight of the Meevatees, charged upon them down hill, followed as fast as possible by the infantry, and although the ground was very difficult they succeeded in driving the enemy away with a loss on their side of six killed, besides an unknown number wounded; while we sustained a loss of one syce killed, and Lieut. Salmond, 7th L.C., and the above-mentioned sowar, wounded. Having thus fought and conquered, the gallant band wended its way back to the fort, and reached its quarters in time for breakfast, to which meal the hungry men brought appetites that had not been stayed during their absence.

BANGALORE.—We publish the following extracts from a letter addressed to us (Allen's Indian Mail) by a lady at Bangalore, dated 10th Aug. 1857:—

In Bengal the mutiny may have passed the crisis; but we have yet to undergo it. God help us! It looks very threatening. From Madras to Seringapatam the country is in a state of commotion ready to rise. Here it is not the sepoys, but the Mahomedan inhabitants, who from other parts are quietly making their way to Bangalore. The authorities here have made every preparation. The troops are ready, guns are mounted in the fort and barracks. I have learned to fire with a pistol, and keep one ready headed. All the ladies are learning to fire. The nizam's dominions also are in a very unsettled state. The Mohillas have broken out, and are plundering wherever they can. Some of them have been caught and hanged: a large force has gone from Bangalore against them.

At Nagpore the Europeans had a very narrow escape. Just on the night when the rising was to take place, and when the rebels had all gone to their posts, a spy was caught tampering with the sepoys of the 1st Madras N.I. He disclosed the whole plot, and the authorities instantly took measures to defeat it. The ring-leaders were seized and hanged the next day. In several places, just when the wretches were on the point of carrying out their plots, they have been providentially discovered. A volunteer corps patrols the streets at night: they learn a drill. It is a very unpleasant state of existence, daily expecting to be murdered. We expect the railway from Madras to Bangalore will be completed in three years. The officers of militia are fond of their titles, and have had expensive dresses made, profusely trimmed with gold and silver lace. You no doubt know of the gag put upon the Indian press; we can scarcely get any news of what is going on in Bengal. The English papers give us much more news about Bengal than the Indian papers do; and the arrival of the London paper is therefore eagerly looked for.

BEHAR.—The Behar magistrates of Allahabad and Behar, with the deputy magistrates of Sevan and Shergotty, have been ordered to entertain an additional police force at each Sudder station. The Behar station guard have been publicly praised by the commissioner of the division for their fidelity in resisting all the solicitations of the Dinapore regiments to revolt and seize the treasure.

BERHAMPORE.—The Hurkaru has been favoured with the following official account of the disarming at Berhampore:—"By letters received this morning, it has been reported that the 63rd N.I. was disarmed at Berhampore, without difficulty or disturbance of any kind, on the evening of the 1st of August. The 11th irregular cavalry were also disarmed, and their horses taken possession of at the same time. Every man of the 63rd N.I. was reported present and doing duty cheerfully the next morning."

BENARES.—A plot has been discovered at Benares, and four men have been apprehended. One is a banker, worth some eight lakhs of rupees. In the house of the banker some 200 swords and guns had been discovered. The banker offered the darogah a Government promissory note for Rs. 10,000 if he would let him escape. The darogah said that he must first sign the note before he let him go as he could not trust him. The banker signed, and was at once dragged, note and all, to the magistrate.

The latest news we have received from Benares (date not given), states that Major Haliburton had captured a number of the mutinous cavalry (the 12th irregulars, we presume), with ammunition packed up, ready for a start. They were disarmed and made prisoners. It is expected that Major Haliburton would cause the whole of them to be executed. It was rumoured that Benares was to be blown up and abandoned. At Mirzapore they had entrenched themselves, expecting an attack.

CALCUTTA.—AUGUST 3RD.—THE CALCUTTA PETITION.—A very influential meeting of the European inhabitants of Calcutta was held this day at the Chamber of Commerce, to consider the propriety of addressing the British Parliament on the subject of the present state of India. Sir A. D. H. Larpet being voted into the chair, speeches were made by Messrs. Peterson, Abbott, Mackinlay, Bullen, and other influential gentlemen, in favour of sending Mr. Mead (the officiating editor of the Friend of India), to England, with a view to get up an agitation against the Company's Government. They are at least fortunate in the choice of their representative, who will feel quite at home in cockney-land, to judge from his sleight of tongue with the poor letter H. He has, besides, a grievance of his own, having received a public reprimand for his seditious and unpatriotic writings.

THE KING OF ODEE, on a recent occasion, requested the Governor-General to inform him in what way he could remit Rs. 45,520 to his relatives in Europe. His majesty has been informed that the Court of Directors will be requested to pay them the amount.

COLLISION BETWEEN A VOLUNTEER AND A NATIVE.—The Phoenix mentions that as one of the volunteers was riding along the Chitpore road, a native rushed out upon him. The horse of the volunteer started and threw him. The native who committed the assault was taken prisoner. He has since been sentenced by a native judge to one month's imprisonment, a punishment quite inadequate to the offence. We are not told why the volunteer did not defend himself. It was perhaps fortunate that he did not use his sword, as a mob of natives speedily collected and manifested considerable sympathy for the assailant.

INSULTS BY NATIVE SERVANTS.—The native servants of the house of refuge in Cornwallis-square have thought proper grossly to insult the refugees from the Mofussil. On the 30th July, some of the Volunteer Cavalry were summoned to the assistance of a lady into whose sleeping apartments the native servants had insolently intruded. Five of them were taken into custody and made over to the police.

The Guide pilot vessel has been ordered to anchor off the mint to protect it in case of an émeute. She has two guns, and is manned by European sailors. The Magna and Coleroon, pilot vessels, have been stationed so as to cover with their guns Hastings-bridge and Coolie Bazaar. Mr. Master Pilot C. Phillips has, by order of the Lieut.-Governor, been suspended from rank and pay for two months, for detaining the Hon. Company's transport ship Belgravia, and for telling an untruth.

THE CALCUTTA VOLUNTEERS have received printed rules for their guidance with reference to any emergency which may arise. It is expressly enjoined that no one is to fire or make an attack unless under the immediate orders of the magistrate, or to put down open riot or rebellion.

The Government have issued directions that the families of European soldiers on duty in the provinces shall be victualled and otherwise cared for at the public cost. This act of liberality, whilst it will entail but little expense, will be a source of the greatest comfort, not only to the actual recipients of the State's bounty, but to the husbands and fathers who are fighting our battles.

DISARMING THE NATIVE POPULATION.—The following is a copy of the presentment of the Grand Jury, on the 13th of July, to Sir Arthur Buller:—"That as a measure to allay apprehension of danger on the part of the public, and for the preservation of peace and the preservation of crime (especially as the Mahomedan holidays which are approaching are usually a period of excitement), it is desirable that the native population of Calcutta and the suburbs should be disarmed, and that the sale of arms and ammunition should be prohibited, except under such restrictions as Government may deem advisable. Therefore the Grand Jury do hereby request her Majesty's Justices to lay this their presentment before Government, and to move the Government to take the same into its favourable consideration." It is reported that the Governor-General is averse to disarming the native population, because to do so he must, consistently with the edicts of "imperial legislation," whatever they may be, also disarm the Europeans!

CANWONPORE.—GENERAL HAVELOCK'S ADDRESS TO HIS SOLDIERS.—The following orders by Brigadier-General Havelock, commanding the Allahabad moveable column, were issued to the troops at Camp Canwopore, 20th July:—

"The Brigadier-General takes blame to himself for not having yet noticed in orders the gallant behaviour of the troops in the two affairs of the 15th instant, and the victory of the 16th. But he has in the mean time sustained a heavy loss in the sudden death of his deputy assistant adjutant-general, and his time has been pre-occupied in preparations for the troops' further cause of congratulations.

"Canwopore, won by Lord Lake in 1803, has been a happy and peaceful place ever since, until the wretched ambition of a man whose uncle's life was by a too indulgent Government spared in 1817, filled it in 1857 with rapine and bloodshed. When, soldiers, your valour won the bridge at Pindoe Nuddy, you were signing the death-warrant of the helpless women and children of your comrades of the 32nd; they were murdered in cold blood by the miscreant Nana Sahib, whose troops fled in dismay at the victorious shout of your line on the evening of the memorable 16th.

"Soldiers! Your general is satisfied, and more than satisfied, with you. He has never seen steadier or more elevated troops. But your labours are only beginning. Between the 7th instant and the 16th you have, under the Indian sun of July, marched 126 miles, and fought four actions; but your comrades at Lucknow are in peril. Agra is besieged—Delhi still the focus of mutiny and rebellion. You must make great sacrifices if you would obtain great results. Three cities have to be saved—two strong places to be disblockaded. Your general is confident that he can effect all these things, and restore this part of India to tranquillity, if you only second him with your efforts, and if your discipline is only equal to your valour.

"Highlanders! It was my earnest desire to afford you the opportunities of showing how your predecessors conquered at Malwa; you have not degenerated. Assaye was not won by a more silent, compact, and resolute charge than was the village near Jansemow on the 16th instant.

"Sixty-fourth! You have put to silence the gibes of your enemies throughout India. Your fire—reserved until you saw the colour of your enemy's mustachios—this gave us the victory."

THE BATTLE OF BUSSEUT GUNGE.—The following is General Havelock's despatch:—

"Camp Busserut Gunge, July 30, 1857.

"I marched yesterday and came up with the enemy at Oonao. The town was flanked by an extensive swamp, and the position defended by fifteen guns. The inundation prevented any turning movement, and I attacked the place, captured all the guns, and put the enemy to flight. The troops from Lucknow in our front were aided by a considerable detachment of the Nana's force from Futtehpore Chowrassee, which was on our left flank, commanded by Jussa Sing. I halted four hours in the extreme heat of the day, and then marched on this town which is also surrounded by water. Four pieces of cannon were mounted on its old-fashioned gates and towers. The road at the entrance of the town had been destroyed and the gate strongly barricaded. I had no sappers, so, after a cannonade, I assaulted and took the place with all its guns. The enemy will not await any close contact with my troops except behind walls. Their loss this day has on that account been heavier than usual; mine also is severe—88 killed and wounded.

"At Oonao the soldier most distinguished was Private Patrick Cavanagh, of H.M.'s 64th regiment. He was cut to pieces by the enemy while showing a brilliant example to his comrades. Had he survived, I should have recommended him for the Victoria Cross. I trust a grateful Government will pension his relations.

"The Madras fusiliers were particularly distinguished. Major Stevenson selects Lieutenant Dangerfield as most conspicuous. He was the first on the barricade at this place. Lieutenant Bogle, of the 78th Highlanders, was severely wounded whilst leading the way at Oonao into a loopholed house filled with desperate fanatics. I would desire that he should be specially recommended to His Royal Highness the General Commanding in Chief.

My staff gave me glorious support. Colonel Tytler, hardly able to sit upon his horse from indisposition, set an example to the whole force for activity and daring. Lieut. Havelock, Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General, had a horse shot under him; and my acting Aide-de-Camp, Lieut. Seton, Madras Fusiliers, was severely wounded.

"I have captured an entire field-battery of guns; but without cavalry I cannot secure horses or equipments.

"I must not overlook my volunteers, who improve, however, every day.

"(Signed) H. HAVELOCK, Brigadier-General."

NANA SAHIB'S PROCLAMATION.—The following is a translation of a proclamation posted up by Nana Sahib at Cawnpore:—

"A traveller just arrived at Cawnpore from Calcutta states that in the first instance a council was held to take into consideration the means to be adopted to do away with the religion of the Mahomedans and Hindoos, by the distribution of cartridges. The council came to this resolution, that, as this matter was one of religion, the services of seven or eight thousand European soldiers would be necessary, as 50,000 Hindostanees would have to be destroyed, and then the whole of the people of Hindostan would become Christians. A petition with the substance of this resolution was sent to the Queen Victoria, and it was approved. A council was then held a second time, in which English merchants took a part, and it was decided that, in order that no evil should arise from mutiny, large reinforcements should be sent for. When the despatch was received and read in England thousands of European soldiers were embarked on ships as speedily as possible and sent off to Hindostan. The news of their being despatched reached Calcutta. The English authorities there ordered the issue of the cartridges, for the real intention was to Christianize the army first, and this being effected the conversion of the people would speedily follow. Pigs' and cows' fat was mixed up with the cartridges; this became known through one of the Bengalese who was employed in the cartridge-making establishment. Of those through whose means this was divulged one was killed and the rest imprisoned. While in this country these counsels were being adopted, in England the vakeel of the Sultan of Roum sent news to the Sultan that thousands of European soldiers were being sent for the purpose of making Christians of all the people of Hindostan. Upon this the Sultan issued a firman to the King of Egypt to this effect:—'You must deceive the Queen Victoria, for this is not a time for friendship, for my vakeel writes that thousands of European soldiers have been dispatched for the purpose of making Christians the army and people of Hindostan. In this manner, then, this must be checked. If I should be remiss, then how can I show my face to God; and one day this may come upon me also; for if the English make Christians of all in Hindostan, they will then fix their designs upon my country.' When the firman reached the King of Egypt, he prepared and arranged his troops, before the arrival of the English army at Alexandria, for this is the route to India. The instant the English army arrived, the King of Egypt opened guns upon them from all sides, and destroyed and sunk their ships, and not a single soldier escaped. The English in Calcutta, after the issue of the order for the cartridges, and when the mutiny had become great, were in expectation of the arrival of the army from London; but the great God, in his omnipotence, had beforehand put an end to this. When the news of the destruction of the army of London became known, then the Governor-General was plunged in grief and sorrow, and beat his head.

"Printed by order of the Peishwar Bahadour."

The following intelligence has been furnished by Government:—
"General Neill reports on the 25th July from Cawnpore that he assumed command of the station, on General Havelock's crossing, and at once proceeded to re-establish police and British authority in the bazaar and city, and to put a stop to plundering. That news from Agra and Lucknow were good, and that all was well at Cawnpore."

AUGUST 13.—"Here I am again safe and sound at Cawnpore, after a most severe fight yesterday with our old enemies the sepoymutineers, in which we had three men killed and ten wounded; one young man had his leg blown away. There were only 120 of the 78th Highlanders present, the remainder being sick. Our whole force consisted of 800 men, including the Sikhs. A great many followers were cut to pieces by the enemy's cavalry and round shot. There were two guns playing on the 78th, which would no doubt have destroyed every man of us but for our timely resolution—a desperate one, no doubt; but it had to be done, or all would have perished beneath the deadly fire. General Havelock was calmly looking on: he knew well what we desired; and before he gave the order to advance all rushed forward at the charge, and in less than five minutes captured two guns and four horses, bayoneting a number of the enemy who tried to save the guns (two brass 9-pounders). General Havelock rode up after us, crying out, 'Well done, brave Highlanders! You have this day saved yourselves and your comrades!' We did not lose a man in the charge, though it was thought by other corps to be a mad attempt. As we started to charge, the last round of grape-shot went immediately over the heads of our small band of men; but in their haste to fire the enemy lost their elevation, so we thus escaped. Private McGrath and myself were struck in the action, but only bruised, the shot having first hit the ground. McGrath received five balls on different parts of his body, so he had to fall to the rear. I was merely struck on the hip-bone with only one ball, therefore I ran on, not heeding it. Mr. Crowe and Mr. Campbell thought I was killed, until I jumped up and after my comrades."

"We crossed the Ganges this morning in small boats, being unable to do any more in the kingdom of Oude until we are reinforced. The first news I got on landing here, about two hours ago, was that Colour Serjeant Camm had died a day or two before, of cholera. Since then another man of No. 6 Company died of the same disease, and Crowe of the same company—the married man—is likewise deceased."

It appears that in the action which General Havelock had with the enemy on the 5th instant, he repulsed the enemy with but very slight loss on our side. A round shot carried off the legs of Colonel W. Hamilton's, 78th Highlanders, horse. This is the second horse he has had shot under him within a few days. It is said that Nana Sahib was still lurking about somewhere in the neighbourhood of Cawnpore, and that the mutineers of the 42nd N.I. were waiting near to reinforce him. An attack on Cawnpore was expected, but there was nothing to fear as to the result.

Three hundred men of Her Majesty's 5th Fusiliers passed Benares on the 13th instant en route to Allahabad by steam; also another company of the 78th Highlanders from Gazeepore. All the Highlanders proceed from Allahabad to join General Havelock. The relief of those at Benares under Major Haliburton has been delayed by the destruction of the detachment of Her Majesty's 37th Foot at Arrah.

Colonel Gordon, commanding at Benares, has approved of a volunteer militia corps being formed in that camp under the instructions of Major Haliburton.

Since our last we have been favoured with letters direct from Cawnpore and Benares, dated the 10th and 14th August respectively.

Our Cawnpore correspondent, who had arrived at that station from Allahabad on the 6th, confirms the intelligence which we gave in our last as to General Havelock's movements up to that date. Since then he had sent over the wounded, the sick, and all his heavy baggage to Cawnpore, and was preparing to cross himself with his force on the 11th, and there await the arrival of reinforcements from Lower Bengal. The enemy had threatened Cawnpore on the 8th, and it was rumoured that a body of 2,000 infantry and cavalry had advanced to within three miles of the station. General Neill had in consequence gone out to meet them with a small body of H.M.'s 64th, 78th, and 84th regiments, and Madras fusiliers, with a couple of guns; but the mutineers were not game to meet him, and bolted off the moment they heard of the near approach of our force, which, therefore, returned to quarters quite disappointed at not having had an opportunity of giving the vagabonds a good thrashing.

We regret to learn from our obliging correspondent's letter that the hospital arrangements at Cawnpore are very defective, owing, apparently, to a paucity of medical officers, but more particularly to there not being a well-organized subordinate medical establishment attached to the field hospitals. We have no doubt, however, that this state of things will very shortly be rectified, as General Neill is evidently not a man to be trifled with, and the health of his troops will naturally be his first care.

We regret to learn that since the 9th June last, the Highlanders alone had lost four sergeants and forty-three privates, chiefly from cholera and fever.

"Camp, Murrugarwur, about five miles east of Cawnpore, on the left bank of the Ganges.—On the 29th ult. we had a severe engagement. Our 4th and 6th companies were engaged. It lasted the whole day, from about six a.m. till seven p.m. We succeeded just as darkness was setting in in totally routing the enemy. We stormed two fortified villages, took nineteen guns, and a quantity of ammunition. But our losses were rather severe. In our regiment we had one officer, Mr. Richardson, killed, and one, Mr. Seton, wounded. I don't know how many men were killed and wounded of the force, but in my company there were two killed and three wounded. The two former were privates Scullion and Murphy, both Catholics, God be merciful to them. We bivouacked for the night in a tope, and to the surprise of all returned to this place, or rather commenced our retreat to this place, the following evening, which we reached on the 31st. The cause is, I believe, to wait for reinforcements, as our force is too small to cope with so many thousands.

I assure you we are all very well knocked up, marching and fighting all the day in a blazing hot sun. Our regiment is very much reduced in numbers; indeed, killed and wounded, we have lost very little short of 200 since we left Madras. Poor Major Renaud has died of his wounds.

The Poona Observer has been informed that General Havelock received a slight wound in his last action with the rebels on the 12th instant; so slight, however, we rejoice to learn, as not to prevent his attending with his usual energy and vigour to his many arduous duties.

CUDDAPAH.—The Spectator affirms that the Rohillas have been plundering in the Cuddapah district. On the 15th July they passed through a pass in the Nullah Mullah Hills. A detachment of the 30th N.I. have been sent against them. The Rohillas are reported to have recrossed the Kistnah, and returned to the Nizam's country.

DELHI.—The following is from Delbi, written on the 3rd of August:—

"All quiet to-day. The enemy came out in force on the 31st July, both from the Cashmere gate and the Ajmere gate. Since the 23rd we had not been troubled with them. The centre and left battery played upon them coming out of the gate (Cashmere), and the right battery, as usual, gave it them pretty strongly on their parade-ground (the old encamping ground). The men coming out of the Cashmere gate moved rapidly away to the right towards the residency, and the houses near, and got a couple of 9-pounders, from which they played on the mosque, also sending shots to the centre battery. During this time the guns on the different bastions were not idle; they fired shells both from mortars and howitzers, which fell either short or went over the ridge, and burst harmlessly amongst the trees in the valley of death. The Moree was troublesome as usual with the 24-pounders. The Pandies might be seen in the houses to the left of the residency; shots were fired at them from the centre battery, and shells from the mortars and howitzers, which made Pandi depart; he remained lurking about, and firing occasional shots with his musket. They are not allowed to return to the city till four o'clock; so they wile away the time by sitting behind a rock and smoking their hookas, and taking an occasional shot at a thousand yards. This is what they do on the left, but on the right they came within a hundred yards in some places, and farther off in others, of the breastwork, which extends from the mosque known by the name of the Ram Sammy House to the road, and another from the three 9-pounder battery to the Crow's-nest and Subjee Mundeel pickets. During this time cavalry and infantry and about twelve guns came out of the Ajmere-gate, went behind the Eed Gab, and took the road to Rhotuck. They were coming out in one continued stream from seven o'clock till twelve; they had elephants and laden bullocks with them. Our loss was trifling. Two Goorkhas were killed in the right battery by a round shot. The right battery was commanded by Captain Fagan, who has been in command of that battery in almost every engagement.

This day month, the 23rd of June, they attacked the battery in great force, but since the Subjee Mundeel has been cleared and breastworks thrown up, they have never been able to advance so close as they did on that day. About five o'clock, the little affair being over, the supports were withdrawn, and the men were marched down to camp, or rather waded, as the rain had been falling since twelve o'clock. I forgot to mention that at four o'clock Pandi, with his guns and cavalry (the latter, by the way, always come out, and are not seen again till they go in), returned into the city, under a salute of guns from the left and centre batteries, several rounds from a 9-pounder, and several from the 18-pounder and 8-inch howitzer, rather uncomfortable, I should imagine, to the gentle Hindoos. On the evening of the 31st, the moveable column was sent out, but saw nothing of the force that went out in the morning from Delhi, they brought in a convoy, also the Kumaon Battalion. It rained very heavily in the morning, notwithstanding this, there was musketry going on the whole day; the camp did not turn out till about six in the evening, the party returning from the Rhotuck road were met by a party from the city, and they joined in an attack on our right; we were kept up all night, they had several light guns out. They were maddened by Bhang, and came tolerably close to the breastworks. During the night they had bugles sounding the advance the whole time, but it had not the power of pushing them forward; they shouted and called out to each other "Chalo bhai;" they wasted a considerable quantity of 9-pounder ammunition, as they were firing all day on the 1st, all night of the same, and all the 2nd.

The pickets held their own all night; the 60th rifles made some excellent shooting. Pandi never shows more than his head: his musket generally has a good elevation. Musketry was going on on both sides all day, with scarcely any casualties on our side, though many a Pandi bit the dirt. The two buglers were knocked over and their bugles taken by some riflemen. The Subjee Mundeel picket did good execution. Buttons were cut off belonging to men of the late 18th regiment, 57th, and 7th Scindia contingent. I suppose they found it cold at night, as they do not generally wear their uniform. A medal was also found on one man, giving his name, which I forget. They began firing some rockets from the Kishen Gunge, intending them to go into camp, but they fell short: two of them fell amongst some of their own men. They were speedily obliged to withdraw by some shots from the right battery and 9-pounder battery, which prevented their firing another rocket. They had evidently intended passing the evening there, and they had invited their friends to see the tomasha. Pandi does not like the whiz of a round shot. It was all quiet after five o'clock, both sides being tired of the work. Our casualties altogether I do not think exceeded twenty-five killed and wounded, after thirty-six hours' engagement. Their loss was great compared to ours: about 200 killed, and a great many wounded and carried off. Several books were found near the dead bodies, which were all stripped by their friends. Travers, of Coke's corps, was killed; poor fellow! he was shot through the head; he lived a few hours. He was a good officer, and is regretted by all who knew him. All has been quiet since.

A friend, writing from camp on the 3rd August, sends the following account of the two days' fighting on the 1st and 2nd:—"The alarm went early on the morning of the 1st ult., but after falling in it proved to be a false one, and our men returned to their tents. However, there was a good deal of firing all day, and at about 6 p.m. we were again turned out, and marched to our respective posts. The troops remained under arms till about 9 p.m., and the grenadier company of the 61st were ordered off to the breastwork in front of the Sammy House, and we saw nothing of them till about 12 a.m. on the 2nd; the light company were sent to relieve them. Such a feu d'enfer as was kept up all night has not been heard since the old Crimean days: the enemy fired shot and shell into our batteries all night. You might see as many as six shells bursting in the air at one time. We could not sleep much, as you may well imagine, as we expected a general turn out every moment. However, in the morning, we found out what had occurred. The enemy, no doubt, blanged up to the eyes, attacked our pickets three or four times, but were driven back by grape as often as they came on, leaving their dead and wounded as a memento of their stupidity. They fired musketry by the volley, scarcely touching a man; at daylight getting more plucky by our not advancing, they got pretty close, when the grenadier company of the gallant 61st and the rifles leaped on the breastwork with a yell, and polished them off in style, bayoneting and bulleting about fifty before they had time to run for it. The fire kept up through the whole of the 2nd and the night of the 1st, with scarcely ten minutes' intermission, principally on the side of the enemy; our fellows holding hard till they could make it tell on them. They were seen carrying away their brethren nearly all day yesterday, and they are supposed to have lost somewhere between 200 and 500. Our loss altogether, killed and wounded, as far as I learn at present, does not amount to above a dozen or so. I regret to hear our glory received a damper in the death of Captain Travers, of Coke's corps, here. Poor fellow, he was shot through the temple. One shot came into the breastwork, yesterday afternoon, carried away some four or five sand-bags, and sent about a dozen men spinning in all directions. One man of the 61st had his head taken off, and three or four others wounded by stones, &c., slightly. Lieut. Hutton, 61st, got a puri; I hear he swallowed nearly half a sand-bag, and had all his pockets and his hands full of the contents when he got on his legs again. The cartridges picked up yesterday were filled with gun ammunition, coarse and damp, and they were seen firing with matchlocks. They have also caps of their own making; at least it is reported so. But I think that it is all bosh. We are all anxiously looking out for the left wing of H.M.'s gallant 61st, now on its way here, and in which corps the greatest confidence is generally placed; no doubt they will tell a tale and behave as they did at Chillianwallah. The cholera, I am happy to say, has almost entirely disappeared."—Lahore Chronicle, August 8.

A letter from Aboo, dated the 11th August, mentions that the King of Delhi has offered to make terms with us, on the condition that thirty-six lakhs of rupees annually, instead of fifteen as heretofore, should be secured to him and his successors. This proposal was of course peremptorily declined. He was informed that nothing but unconditional surrender could be accepted; and this, we should hope, would be instantly followed by unexceptionable hanging, drawing, and quartering, on a gallows raised so high over the royal palace at Delhi that the "Great Exhibition" should be witnessed by all the country round.—Poona Observer, Aug. 27.

At the request of Major-General Wilson, commanding the Delhi field force, the chief commissioner of the Panjab has sanctioned the free transit, under frank by commanding officers, through the post, of letters and small parcels from the wives and families of all European soldiers, to their husbands and fathers in camp before Delhi, and vice versa. This has been communicated to the Postmaster-General of the North-West Provinces, in view to the necessary instructions being issued. We hope that a similar concession will be made by the Bombay Government in favour of the troops scattered in different parts of this presidency, and engaged in field service.

An officer of H.M.'s 61st, now before Delhi, writes to us as follows:—

"Camp, July 26.

"As soon as Delhi was taken by the mutineers, my leave was cancelled, and I was ordered to join my regiment at Ferozepore. The regular roads being closed, I had to march through the hills to Simla. When I got there, I found the corps was on its way to this place; and here I have been since the 1st of this month, at the old business of pickets and guards, with now and then a "mill" on a grand scale—generally twice a week—in which we lose a dozen men or so, and the Pandies from three to five hundred. Since my corps came down here I have been in four engagements,—on the 4th, 14th, 18th, and 23rd;—rather good for three weeks. On the 4th I stuck a sepoy of the 68th, and cut off his buttons with my sword; on the 14th I shot one. Poor Delhi is a heap of ruins,—I mean the cantonment part of it; and so will the city be before we have done with it. Every day we get nearer and nearer, and our guns must tell on the mutineers with fearful effect, because they are crowded inside. They have, I am sure, 15,000 men (report says 20,000); so every shell that falls inside must play "Old Harry" with them. Our own force is under 3,000 Europeans, with about an equal number of Sikhs, Goorkhas, &c. &c. We could storm the city any fine morning we were ordered to do so; but there would be no possibility of keeping the men together when once within the walls. They would be certain to separate in search of plunder, liquor, and Pandies, and in that state might be cut off by one determined rush of the enemy. Patience, therefore, yet a little while."

Delhi letters mention that the kotwal of cantonments had made his escape from the city, and come into our camp. He reports that only five men of Capt. De Tessier's battery survive, and that the rebels are running short of powder, caps, &c. The powder they use for shells is evidently of a very inferior description, as some forty unexploded shells have been picked up and brought into our camp.

The mutineers, having heard of the near approach of reinforcements of Europeans, are said to be in a state of great alarm, and will probably make their intended grand attack, of which there is much talk among them, as speedily as possible.

The kotwal also reports that Mrs. Leeson is still alive in the city, and protected by Affghans; the mutineers, it is supposed, being unaware of her existence. A letter from her had been received in camp. It is fervently to be hoped that a speedy release awaits this unfortunate woman, whose husband and children were murdered before her face.

ENSIGN MOUNSTEVEN.—The following letter and regimental orders were written by Lieutenant-Colonel Greathead on the death and gallant conduct of Ensign Mounsteven, 8th (King's) regiment:—

"Regimental Orders, 8th (King's) Regiment.

"Camp before Delhi, July 10.

"The regiment will learn with the greatest regret that Ensign Mounsteven has died of the wounds received by him in the affair of the 9th of July, in this his first and last engagement. This admirable young officer, though only eighteen years of age, displayed a coolness and a brilliant bravery which, had he been spared, must have led to future distinction; and it is with the most heartfelt sorrow that Lieutenant-Colonel Greathead announces the untimely close of his career. He is buried in the cemetery, and the officers and men will erect a monument to his memory."

"Camp before Delhi, July 13.

"My dear Sir,—The very painful duty has fallen upon me of acquainting you with the loss you have sustained by the death of your most gallant son, from a mortal wound received in action before Delhi on the 9th instant. I cannot express to you the sorrow this has caused to me, and to every one in the regiment. None have felt more than I, for I had formed great hopes of him. He had every quality to make a good soldier—bravery, coolness, ready will, and ready obedience; and never were those qualities more conspicuous than in the engagement which was his first and last. We went into action about 11 A.M., and the duty which we had to perform was to clear the mutineers out of an intricate labyrinth of gardens and houses. This was done with great rapidity, but not without considerable loss, as the mutineers took advantage of every wall and building, and we lost thirty men killed and wounded out of 160 we had in action. I saw your brave boy head the men of his company in a dozen charges, and his light foot let no man head him, and throughout he was unhurt. We had driven the mutineers out of the gardens across the road, which we crossed, and going up the bank of a canal we entered an enclosure, round which the mutineers had mustered in force, and a shot from a loophole struck him in the abdomen, passing out just above the groin. He is buried in the cemetery. When this business is over we shall erect a tomb to his memory. He was sensible to the last, and died like a true Christian, without repining. It is for us to regret him who are left, for a finer young officer never entered her Majesty's service.

"Believe me, my dear Sir, yours faithfully,

"E. M. GREATHEAD,

"Lieut.-Colonel commanding 8th (King's) regiment."

DINAPORE.—The Dinapore mutineers have since had a severe beating at Arrah by Major Eyre. He had three guns, fifty gunners, one hundred and fifty of the 5th fusiliers, and twelve gentlemen volunteers from Buxar. The mutineers mustered about 2,500 men, some of them with Enfield rifles. They fought desperately, charging the guns, but were beaten back; and the little garrison at Arrah, consisting of forty-five Sikhs, twelve gentlemen, and a lady, were rescued by our brave little force. The rebels have gone to Sasseram, on the Grand Trunk Road. They have cut the telegraph wire, and stopped the dak.—Bombay Times, Aug. 28.

The Phoenix has received a letter from Dinapore, dated the 7th of July. The mutinous regiments killed, at Soane, Mr. Hoyle, and subjected Mrs. Pacquet, with her two children, to gross indignities; the other Europeans succeeded in effecting their escape to Delhi.

General Lloyd, who commanded at Dinapore, has been suspended, and is to be brought to trial. Sir James Outram has been nominated to the command of the Dinapore and Cawnpore districts.

At three p.m. on the evening of July 25, gun after gun was fired and volleys discharged at Dinapore. Universal panic reigned here then. The city people were seen flying in every direction; every shop was shut, and all Government offices broke up in a moment. Every one knew from the commissioner's circular that the sepoys were to be disarmed in the evening, and no one doubted that they had risen to resist the order. Such proved to be the case. The 7th N.I. the 8th N.I. and the 40th N.I. mutinied; but our veterans were ready for them. The gallant 10th rushed after them like deer; the grape shot did its work, and the scoundrels of the three regiments bolted. They divided themselves into three bodies. One ran towards the Soane, another towards the villages in the Gya direction, and the third jumped into boats to embark for Patna. All three were pursued. Those in the boats were fired on by the Europeans; and a steamer which chanced to be lying off Dinapore opened broadsides upon them, and sunk several of their boats. The mutineers were entirely discomfited. Not a single European was killed; but the native barracks are in ashes. Patna in the mean time (by Patna I mean the Christian population only) is on the qui vive, ready assembled at the commissioner's residence, which is surrounded by Ratray's Sikh battalion and Nation's Nujeebs. Patna is comparatively safe. About three companies of Europeans are here for our defence.—Phoenix Extra, July 30.

GOORDASPORE.—Reports from Goordaspore, received this morning, state that forty-eight more of the 26th mutineers have been seized and destroyed in that district. A body of about twenty-five of them were charged by Major Jackson and three of his men (the 2nd irregular cavalry), and eight of them were killed. Major Jackson was unfortunately wounded, and one sowar was killed. The remainder of the twenty-five mutineers were captured.

HAZARA.—Major Becher reports from Hazara, that 160 more of the 55th N.I. mutineers, including two subadars (apparently the last remnant of the corps), were being brought in by the Syuds of Khagun. They will meet the fate they have so richly merited. A number of them, Brahmins, Khuttries, &c., had become Mahomedans in the hope of thereby escaping, but in vain. The Khagun men cut off their supplies, and finally seized them all. In Hazara the best spirit prevails among the people.

JHEELUM.—From Rawul Pindee we hear that Capt. W. Miller, of the Bombay Fusiliers, greatly distinguished himself on the occasion of the mutiny of the 14th Bengal N.I. at Jhelum. This gallant officer, who is a captain of police in the Punjab, charged a body of twenty-five of the mutineers, at the head of five sowars only, though himself, it is said, unarmed. His horse was shot under him, and he received two bayonet wounds; but the sowars, we are glad to hear, cut up the mutineers to a man. Capt. Miller is doing well.

JUBBULPORE.—No disturbances at the latest date.

LUCKNOW.—We are informed that after General Havelock's brilliant success on the 29th July, at Basserut Gunge, the enemy remained about two miles in his front, in a position unapproachable on all sides, in consequence of jheels and swamps. Having no cavalry to follow up his successes, the enemy, who always run away as soon as their guns are taken, get away unmolested; and his small force of Europeans being much hampered with the sick and wounded, and with the care of the large park of artillery he has taken from the rebels, was compelled to make a retrograde movement so as to communicate with the garrison at Cawnpore. He accordingly retired nearly to Cawnpore, to escort his wounded, but has again marched to attack the mutineers. News from Cawnpore, of the 5th instant, mentions that General Havelock had advanced the night before, and heavy firing was heard that morning. The firing was heard by the force at Cawnpore, and seemed to recede towards Lucknow. No doubt we shall very shortly hear of General Havelock having had another successful action with the mutineers.—Poona Observer, August 19.

MADRAS.—The 8th Madras Cavalry refused to proceed to Bengal, and were immediately disbanded.

MEERUT.—Accounts from Meerut of the 31st ult., says the Lahore Chronicle, mention a most successful expedition by a small detachment from that place, of carbineers, rifles, volunteer horse, and two guns, which had attacked and defeated an insurgent force (under Khalid, Khan of Malighur) at Gallontee, on the Boolundshuhur road. Khalid had come out to collect revenue, and to plunder Hauper; but the prompt and vigorous movement of the Meerut detachment took him by surprise, and put him and his men completely to flight, after losing four small guns, and sustaining considerable loss.

MIRZAPORE.—We have intelligence from Mirzapore to the 4th of August, at which date all was quiet at that place. There had been some symptoms of disaffection amongst the 47th N.I. in consequence of which they were disarmed on the 2nd of August, when all went off very quietly.

MOOTEHAREE.—A postscript to the Phoenix supplies the following disastrous tidings:—

"The following is an extract of a letter from Mooteeharee, dated 26th July, 1857:—

"As my note of yesterday would alarm you, so I lose no time to inform you that Raikes and myself returned to the station this morning, and, I am glad to say, I found all safe as when I left the factory on the 24th. Poor Holmes and his wife's bodies were brought in yesterday; the former without head, and Mrs. H. dreadfully mangled, and not recognizable; they were murdered while out on their evening drive, about a mile and a half from the lines. Dr. Garner and wife had got home when they were attacked, and, having secured the doors, the savages set fire to the bungalow, and they perished in it, including their little boy, about two years old; the girl, a year older, was saved by some one, and will be brought in here. The bodies, I fancy, must have been buried, since they have not been brought in. A poor man who had charge of the post-office there was also murdered. We got away not more than an hour before two of the sowars came to my bungalow, went all round it, and ascertained no one was there, when they went over to Raikes's, which they also found empty, after which they went into Mootal, where the darogah tried to stop them, but he was soon made to understand that, if he did, there would be a fight for it, so, after a few threats on both sides, they galloped off, and we suppose they joined the main body at Gobindgunge, where they crossed, after (we heard) killing the jemadar of the police. Mrs. Raikes, the doctor and wife, Hitchins and family, are all at Meerpore, but will return in a few days.

"No vats filled yesterday at any of the places, and little will be done to-day, we are very hard up for fuel, and the roads are very much cut up. Since I left this at 10 a.m. on the 24th, it has hardly ceased raining for two hours. We left Meerpore at 7 a.m., it having cleared up a little, but came in from Lallbageah in heavy rain. The river is very high.

"Holmes and wife were attacked by only four men. They say the scoundrels took away his head. Baldwin is safe, and none left the factories, though I fancy he hid himself in the Beasa House, which, indeed, I should have done, had I been alone.

"28th July.—Since writing the above, a man has come in from Alligunge, and reports that McDonnell's bungalow was attacked by the mutineers, but that McDonnell and Lynch had got news, and left the place for a more safe one. Of course the man can give no news as to whether the treasury was plundered or not. As soon as the sepoy began firing on the bungalows everybody ran away. I fear the brates have taken away his horses; they took all they could from Segowlie, and Holmes had a large breeding-stud. The man that brought the news here is a syce of that place, and he was serving McDonnell."

"The detachment of Major Holmes's Irregulars, stationed at Mozufferpore, marched through the district towards Govindgunge Ghaut, to join the main body of the mutineers. The route of the entire party is supposed to be for Oude.

"The European inhabitants of Mutteeharee, ladies and all, returned to the station on the 29th inst. and all was quiet."

MUSSOORIE.—MUSSOORIE CONVENT, JULY 11TH, 1857.—

"My dear Cousin,—At the request of your sister, dear St. Patrick, I send home these few lines to inform you all that she, Madame St. Anthony, Madame St. Edward, and myself are safe and well, thank God, and that up to the present none of our dear sisters in religion have fallen a victim to the Mahomedan persecution or rebellion. Kindly inform Mesdames St. Anthony and Edward's family of the above. Mary St. Patrick continues to reside in the Sealkote Convent. You must have received her letter of last April. Madame St. Edward is here with me, and Madame St. Anthony is with the Sirdhana Convent community now in Meerut, a military station eighteen miles from their convent. You must have learned from the newspapers that nearly the whole of India is up in rebellion against the government. After satiating their vengeance at Meerut, the rebels (Mahomedans and Hindoos) marched to Delhi, were joined by their brother sepoys, and massacred all the Europeans except a few who fled. The poor Catholic missionary was among the slain. Our poor sisters of Sirdhana were attacked; they went with the boarders and chaplain to the roof of the house, on which they had to stay three days witnessing scenes of horror all around. Having the Blessed Sacrament with them, and expecting every hour to be their last, they remained in perpetual adoration, midst the carnage, calling on the Immaculate Virgin to shield them from the monsters ready for any outrage—death was not what our dear sisters feared most God only knows what may be the issue of the war. The atrocities committed by the natives on Europeans, especially women and children, are, I think, unparalleled in the annals of history. Fancy infants being tossed by them into the air, and received by them on the bayonets; others cut open, the hearts placed on spears; some sliced like bread, and all in the presence of the tortured mothers, subjected to every species of outrage, and then roasted alive. May our good God have mercy upon us, and put an end to this carnage. I will write, if alive, next month. We are preparing for death, which may come sooner than we anticipate. God's will be done. Love to aunt and all dear to us.—Your affectionate cousin,

"MARY ST. JOSEPH SMITH."

MEAN MEER.—The disbanded 26th regiment of Native Infantry mutinied at Mean Meer. Major Spencer, who commanded the regiment, immediately went into the lines, and for some time appears to have succeeded in pacifying the men; but he, with the quartermaster-sergeant, the havildar-major, a pay havildar, and some others, lost their lives in the vain attempt to maintain order. The major appears to have been slain from behind, by blows dealt him with a hatchet. The miscreants attempted to inveigle some other officers into their lines, and Lieut. M. White had a most narrow escape. Just as he was on the point of dismounting to aid, as he imagined, his wounded commanding officer, he was warned by a syce that he would be murdered, and got away with difficulty and with a slight scratch from a sword.

The mutineers fled rapidly to the eastward across the grand parade, and got into the dense jungle without being overtaken. About thirty of the mutineers were killed by the new Sikh and Punjabee battalion, and seven were captured and summarily executed.

Parties of horsemen have been detached in pursuit from Lahore and Umritsur, and Capt. T. Blagrove has taken charge of one party from Lahore. Expresses have been sent to secure all the ghats on the Sotlej and Beas; and it is hoped that but few of the villains may escape.

MOUNT ABOO.—At this station a part of the Joudpore Legion has mutinied, but no mischief was done.

NAGODE.—When the last accounts left all was quiet at this station.

NAGPORE.—The Athenæum contains an account of the attempted insurrection at Nagpore. On the night of the 13th of June, 500 of the rabble at Nagpore were stationed in a garden to the north-east of the cantonments, 300 were posted near the arsenal, 150 near the hill of Seetabuldee, and 300 in a mosque near the jail, now containing some 500 prisoners. The signal for the slaughter to commence was the ascent of three fire-balloons from the city. One of the ringleaders of the rebellion, when the plot was nearly ripe for execution, sent to the 1st N.I. to seduce them from their allegiance. They seized the emissary and spread the alarm. Within half an hour four 9-pounder guns were loaded, and placed in position outside the arsenal gate. The guns at the hill of Seetabuldee were loaded and placed under Captain Johnstone and a party of sepoy. Directly the rebels heard that the plot had been discovered, they dispersed. On the 17th of June the Resalahs were disarmed, and the ringleaders seized. They were tried, and the evidence given in the trial was most conclusive. The conspiracy had been planned for three months. The European ladies had been assigned individually to the heads of the Resalah. Three of the ringleaders were condemned and hanged on the 30th of June before a vast concourse of people. The Europeans at the station sleep on the Seetabuldee Hill.

NUSSEERABAD.—The 12th Bombay N.I. at Nusseerabad have been disarmed, as the men exhibited symptoms of disaffection.

PESHAUR, August 13, 1857.—I am quite well. All continues perfectly quiet and safe at Peshawur, a great exception to the rest of our presidency. My regiment (61st N.I.), you will be glad to hear, keep staunch and loyal, and all in it doing their duty steadily and well.

ROORKEE.—The detachment which left Roorkee on the 21st have fallen in with several parties of the Goojurs. On the 22nd, between Muhmoodpore and Deobund, two or three were killed and thirty-eight taken prisoners. Of these, fourteen, convicted of having taken part in the late attack on Deobund, were executed at that place on the 23rd. On the same day (the 23rd), six of the villages which have been most notorious in plundering and harbouring plunderers, were destroyed; thirteen men were killed, and 135 taken prisoners. A large number of men were seen to escape by the ravines bordering on the Kalee Nuddee. An endeavour would be made to beat up the whole line of those ravines, and dislodge the concealed dacoits.—Roorkee Garrison Gazette, July 25.

SAHARUNPORE.—The jail guards at Saharunpore were quietly disarmed on Monday evening, the 27th ult., by the magistrate and Major Bagot. This was rather a matter of precaution, than of absolute necessity. There had been rumours of intrigue between some of the guards, the Goojurs of the neighbourhood, and a few of the disorderly city badmashes. As it was well known that the Goojurs were assembling on the village of Bahere, a few miles from Saharunpore, and openly expressed their intention, when joined by the Baugurs, Rajpoots, and other disaffected classes of the district, of attacking Saharunpore, the magistrate forwarded an express to Colonel L'Estrange, at Landour, calling for the aid of some Europeans from that dépôt.

The colonel was prompt in action, and the men were at once despatched on ponies, &c. &c. towards Saharunpore, under command of Capt. Sneyd and Lieut. Baring. The authorities at Saharunpore sent out a lot of buggies, carts, and a few elephants to meet and bring in the party. The men arrived safely on Monday evening, about 9 P.M., leaving Landour at 3 A.M. on Sunday.

SAUGOR.—This station is quiet. The proposed day of attack was the following morning, Tuesday; but the expected arrival of the Europeans, the return of a detachment of the Ghoorkas from field service, under Lieut. Boisragon and Mr. Robertson, joint magistrate, and the presence of a small force from Roorkee, with a 6-pounder gun, under Capt. Drummond, had the effect of breaking up the conspiracy; at any rate for the present.—Lahore Chronicle, Aug. 1.

SIMLA.—We (Allen's Indian Mail) have been favoured with the following letter from Simla, dated July 12:—"The dawks are entirely stopped below Delhi. We get our Calcutta letters occasionally only, and then via Bombay, and all our news comes by that route; but I have not received a single overland letter or paper since the Delhi massacre. With Agra our only means of communication is by way of Hyderabad in Sind. It is impossible, therefore, to give you any very recent intelligence of affairs down country. At Delhi matters remain much as they were—the army waiting for reinforcements. Up here we are said to be tolerably safe, certainly more so than we should be in the plains. Still, we are at the mercy of the hill rajahs, who could at any time utterly destroy us. Including tradespeople and half-caste clerks, we cannot muster above forty males, while the ladies number from 350 to 400, besides soldiers' wives and troops of poor children.

We live literally from hand to mouth, and the commissioner has just issued a circular limiting the number of servants and the quantity of food for each family. Throughout the North-West Provinces, the natives, it is said, are being disarmed, but it is a mere farce, for any man who chooses can secrete as many weapons as he pleases. It is almost amusing to think that the king of Delhi has had the cool effrontery to offer his mediation between the British Government and its mutinous soldiery, on condition that his palace and pension be secured to him. This very reasonable proposition was made to Sir John Lawrence, and by him—rejected. When N— went down with our forces into the Delhi cantonment, he naturally visited the ruins of his own house. In the compound he found many papers, a table, chairs, and his khansama, who came up to him, and, putting his hands together, said, "Sahib, moorghee sub atcha hai." I doubt if others will find even their poultry again. I know that the walls of my own bungalow were besmeared with blood, so that any of our servants who remained faithful, must have paid for their fidelity with their lives. It is said that Mrs. Beresford and three children were saved by a dhobee (washerman), and are concealed in a village near Meerut, but I doubt this very much. However, Mr. Bayley, the postmaster, has escaped into camp, and reports three Europeans as being still alive within Delhi, in the house of a nawab. He thinks two of them may be Messrs. Hutchinson and Galloway.

June 25.—A volunteer guard has been formed, and placed under the command of Capt. Briggs, the superintendent of the Hill roads.

SHAHJEHANPORE.—Statement of Munroos (Lohar Mistræ), or the regimental blacksmith, late of the 28th B. N. I. at Shahjehanpore:—

"Dinapore, July 2nd, 1857.

"On the evening of Saturday, the 30th of May, 1857, sepoy Ram-narain Pandey, of the 1st Co., 28th N. I., and others, informed me that there would be an outbreak on Sunday morning, being the next day, during church time. Upon hearing this, the native doctor, by name Meer Kassim Ali, and myself went to Captain Lysaght's and Dr. Bowling's Bungalows, the former was out taking his drive, the latter was in his garden, and to whom we lost no time in giving the alarm that there would be an outbreak in the morning during church service. The doctor viewed this statement very lightly, telling us we must be mistaken, so we then returned to our lines. Next morning, Sunday, 31st May, about eight o'clock, during church time, sepoy Ram-narain Pandey, and some fourteen or fifteen others, entered the church whilst all the officers, except Captains Salmon and James, were there assembled. Sepoy Ram-narain was the first I saw enter and leave the church. All this I saw from my house, which is directly opposite, and he it was who gave Lieut. Spens a sabre wound across the right shoulder and head whilst in a kneeling position; these wounds the officers and ladies bound up as best they could. Captain Salmon, who was at his house, when he heard the firing ran instantly towards the church, where he met the rest of his brother-officers coming out; as Capt. Salmon ran towards the church he was fired at, the ball taking effect, and carrying off the first joint of the forefinger of his left hand. Capt. James, in command of the regiment, on hearing an uproar in the lines, went on horseback in that direction to speak and reason with his men. Whilst he was remonstrating with them, they told him to hold his tongue and leave the spot or they would murder him. On this, Capt. James turned his horse and was riding away when the men fired upon him from different directions, and shot him; he was left dead on the ground for three days, when several Mussulmans from the city came and burned his remains close to the church, along with Dr. Bowling and Mr. Ricketts, C. S., who were also murdered by the men of the 28th Regiment, the former was shot when seated on the coach-box whilst driving his wife and child to church. The Sergt.-Major hid himself on the roof of his house, where he was afterwards found and made prisoner. The rest of the officers and surviving party of the 28th, whose names are annexed,* proceeded with Mrs. Bowling in her carriage to a place called Koramun, a distance of ten or twelve miles from Shahjehanpore, where they were supplied with an elephant by some rajah; from this they went to a place called Mohumdee, where they were promised protection by the tehseldar; they all remained at Mohumdee eight or nine days, when two companies of the 41st regt. at Setanpore were sent off by the order of their soubadar and jemadar to bring them away or else kill them all there. Before receiving charge of the Europeans from the tehseldar these sepoy falsely promised them every protection, but on seeing Lieut. Spens with his shoulder bound up, they said,

* Capt. Sneyd, Lysaght and wife, Salmon, Lieut. Scott, mother and two sisters, Pitt, Robertson, Rutherford, Key and wife, Ensign Spens, Scott, Johnston, White, Mrs. Bowling and two children, 2nd master serjeant, wife, and child, Serjt. Leilly, wife, and child.

True copy.

"What is the use of taking a wounded man with us, he had better be shot!" so they shot him instantly. All the rest were made to proceed on their way to Setapore, but before they had got the distance of four miles from Mohumdee the sepoy ordered the ladies to get out of the carriage and walk. Upon this the officers all remonstrated, that they would walk and the ladies remain in the carriage, but the sepoy said "No;" the ladies must get out, which they did, and on their alighting they were shot one by one; the children, some bayoneted, others dashed on the ground; the sepoy then turned round and killed all the officers, leaving them all lying on the ground. The police jemadar afterwards came up, and finding the bodies of the officers, ladies, and children lying there, had a large hole dug and buried them all in it. Seetal Sing, sepoy of the 9th company, who had left the officers on the arrival of the 2nd company, was met, sixteen miles from Mohumdee, by some sepoy of these two companies, who related how that not one of the party had escaped death. Seetal Sing upbraided them with breaking their promise of protection, but they replied, "Never mind, our orders were not to return until all were killed." I got all this information from Seetal Sing, on meeting him that day, on his return to his home.

Taken before me,

A.D.C. Major-Gen. Lloyd.

P.S.—Major Moir is an officer of the 28th.

LATEST OFFICIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

ATTEMPTED PUBLIC SALE OF PERCUSSION CAPS.

From the Officiating Commissioner of Police to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

Fort William, Calcutta, 4th August, 1857.

SIR,—Having observed in Messrs. Mackenzie, Lyall, and Co.'s catalogue of this morning, that upwards of 200,000 percussion caps, drawing the notice of bazaar dealers, were to be put up to auction this day, I directed my deputy commissioner to endeavour to put a stop to the sale, or, if unsuccessful, to prevent any of the caps being removed from the Exchange premises by purchasers.

2. I am happy to state the sale was not proceeded with.

3. A few days ago a quantity of pistols and revolvers were advertised for sale by auction by the same firm, but were not sold at that time.

4. I consider it my duty to report the above for the information of the Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal; and I have at the same time to add, that a partner of this firm was one of the grand jury who very lately submitted a strong recommendation to the judges of the Supreme Court and the Government, that all natives in Calcutta might be disarmed.

I have, &c.

S. WAUCHOPE.

Offg. Commissioner of Police.

LATEST OFFICIAL, LAHORE, AUGUST 10, 1857.—There is but little news from the camp before Delhi.

The mutineers were still out on the 8th instant, and skirmishing had been going on at intervals, during the previous twenty-four hours.

Their new battery, which had been constructed to enfilade our guns, had been almost altogether silenced.

2nd Lieut. Fraser, artillery, severely wounded, and about twenty men killed and wounded.

The most absurd reports are being promulgated in the city. One day the whole of our camp are reduced to living on raw grain, another day the mutineers are to be joined on the morrow by a band of 14,000 fanatics from Peshawar.

LAHORE, AUGUST 11, 1857.—The only intelligence received from Delhi (of the 9th instant) is, that cannonading and skirmishing had been maintained at slight intervals throughout the previous twenty-four hours. No officers hurt, and only a dozen men.

The mutineers appear to persevere in these futile petty attacks, in the hope of harassing our troops. Their powder manufactory, containing 15,000 lbs. of powder, is reported to have been destroyed by an incendiary.

A detachment of two regiments of infantry, 300 cavalry, and two guns, is said to have left the city for Jhujur.

The wing of the 9th Light Cavalry, formerly attached to the movable column, has arrived at Meean Meer, and is encamped on the Parade, with the other disarmed corps.

The subadar major, one jemadar, two havildars, and seven sepoy^s of the late 26th Light Infantry, have been apprehended in the Umritsar district.

LAHORE, 12TH AUGUST, 1857.—Nothing of importance from Delhi. A short message by telegraph says, the mutineers continued to persevere in their attempts to harass our troops by repeated demonstrations of attack, and by a fire of round shot, shells, and rockets, but with scarcely any perceptible effect; our loss very trifling.

Brigadier General Nicholson had reached camp on the 8th, having proceeded in advance of his column, which was within the distance of a forced march.

The explosion of the powder manufactory in the city is said to have been accompanied with great loss of life,—about 500 men supposed to have been killed. The cause remains unknown, is of course attributed to treachery, and there is great disquietude among the mutineers in consequence.

The King is reported to be sending his zenana to Rohtuck.

Major Wodehouse's detachment of H.M.'s 24th foot, with the head-quarters of Captain Paton's troop of horse artillery, reached Meean Meer this morning.

LAHORE, 13TH AUGUST, 1857.—Desultory skirmishing going on at Delhi up to the 11th instant. Our troops restrained and kept under cover, and very little loss had consequently been sustained.

As the guns of the mutineers, placed between the Cashmere gate and Metcalf picket, had for some days annoyed our pickets, it was determined to attack them; and they were taken by surprise, by a force under Brigadier Showers, at daybreak, on the morning of the 12th. The affair was most successful. The guns captured were, one 24-pounder howitzer, two 9 and one 6-pounder, all safely lodged in the park in camp. Our loss small. Lieut. Sherriff, 2nd Fusiliers, mortally wounded; Brigadier Showers, Major Coke, and Capt. Greville wounded, but none of them badly.

Brigadier-General Nicholson's column was expected to have joined camp yesterday. It consists of H.M.'s 52nd Light Infantry, wing of 61st Foot, Bouchier's battery, a wing of the 7th Punjab Infantry, and some Mooltanee horse and foot. Green's Punjab Infantry (the 2nd regiment), the remainder of the 8th (King's) regiment, and wing of 7th Punjab Infantry following at short intervals. The 4th Punjab Infantry (Capt. Wilde's Rifles) will be at Lahore in a few days, and a wing of Colonel Farquhar's Beeloch Battalion has passed Ferozepore, both en route for Delhi.

Intelligence from Kurrachee states that in the course of a month or six weeks, four powerful steamers will be available for the navigation of the Indus.

LAHORE, 14TH AUGUST, 1857.—There is nothing further of importance from Delhi. In the attack and capture of the guns outside the Cashmere gate, on the morning of the 12th instant, our casualties were more numerous than was at first surmised—killed and wounded 112, and the following officers wounded: Lieut. Sherriff, 2nd Fusiliers, dangerously; Brigadier Showers and Major Coke, severely; Lieut. Lindsay, Horse Artillery; Lieut. Maunsell, Engineers; Capt. Greville and Lieut. Owens, 1st Fusiliers, and Lieut. Innes, 70th N.I. Orderly Officer to Brigadier Showers, slightly.

A copy of a letter, dated Cawnpore, 31st July, has been received here. All well at that place, General Neill commanding. Previous to their flight the mutineers had blown up the magazine at that place, but quantities of stores, including gunpowder, had been cut out from the ruins.

General Van Cortlandt's force has arrived and taken possession of Hansi.

The Native [troop of horse artillery at Mooltan has been disarmed, and its guns are now manned by Europeans.

A Meerut letter of the 10th inst., mentions that numbers of the mutineers were leaving Delhi. A body of about 500 of them were seen crossing the Ganges at Gurmuchtesur ghaut, five days previously; and 250 more seen at Hauper, making for Rohilcund, all unarmed.

The bridge of boats at Delhi is reported broken on the Meerut side, and the mutineers were attempting to repair it.

All quiet in the Punjab.

(Signed) J. D. MACPHERSON, Lieut.-colonel,

Mil. Sec. to the Chief Commissioner.

PATNA.—By a proclamation dated July 30, martial law has been proclaimed in the districts of Shahabad, Patna, Behar, Sarun, Champaran, and Tirhoot,—comprising the Patna division.

THE LONDON MAIL of June 26th arrived at Calcutta July 30th (per Arta).

LORD ULICK BROWN, the magistrate of Monghyr, has been suspended from his office by the commissioner of Bhagulpore, who chose to consider that the charge of conspiracy against certain Vakeels was trumped up. There appears not to have been the slightest evidence that such was the case. Mr. Yule never even examined the witnesses.—Friend of India, July.

COLONEL NAPIER, the officiating chief engineer, has been directed to choose the most eligible site at Darjeeling for the erection of barracks for European troops. It is proposed to make Darjeeling a military station.

SEIZURE OF ARMS AT CALCUTTA.—The Hurkaru mentions that a thirty-two-pound brass gun has been seized in Calcutta by the police. It was being conveyed to some native firm in the bazaar, and was reported to have been sold by Messrs. Jardine, Skinner, and Co. as some say, for old brass. But the gun was apparently sound, and no attempt had been made to cut it in pieces before its sale. Three others had been sold by the same firm and to the same native. The guns were utterly valueless, as they were of impure metal. They were sold at the rate of Rs. 25 a maund; if they had been serviceable, they would have fetched Rs. 120 a maund. The Government Cossipore foundry had, before the sale to the native, rejected them.

LIEUT. COL. C. E. GOAD has been deputed by the Government to buy horses for the public service at the Cape.

INTERFERENCE WITH THE MAILS.—We have received the following from the Mofussilite:—"Owing to the disturbed state of the country, it has been found impossible to convey the mails when they are heavy, and we have been requested to send only one copy of our paper to each station."—Friend of India, July.

THE PATTARIES.—In ninety-three of the villages of the Bellary district there are a class of men called pattaries, whose office it is to measure out the produce of the ryots to purchasers. These pattaries have hitherto enjoyed enam land and received compulsory fees from the ryots. The only tax they paid to the Government was the moturpha. On the 11th of July the Government ordered that the fees should no longer be levied from the ryots, and that the pattaries should not pay the moturpha tax. They will, however, pay the usual assessment, and will no longer hold their lands in enam.

DEATH OF MAJOR G. P. THOMAS.—The Mofussilite of Aug. 4, announces the death, on that morning, of Major George Powell Thomas, 3rd European Regiment. The deceased was seriously indisposed for some time before the action of the 5th ultimo at Agra, so much so, indeed, that his friends entertained apprehensions of his recovery; and in the action (in which he behaved with much gallantry) he was seriously wounded, and, moreover, received other injuries in consequence of his horse having fallen with him. His death, however, may be referred to his original sickness, though no doubt hastened by his wounds.

ARRIVAL OF TROOPS.—A brigade of Madras troops are expected here on the 6th. The force consists of two regiments of infantry, half a troop of horse artillery, and we believe some cavalry. There is not among them a single native of this presidency. Since the above was written the telegraph announces the arrival of about 700 Madras sepoys in the Punjab and Semiramis. We are told that the 400 men arrived in the Punjab, belonging to the 17th regiment, vow vengeance against the Poorboas, who, it appears, volunteered to serve against that very regiment on the occasion of the Vellore mutiny. We understand that 5,000 men in all are to be brought round from Madras.—Phoenix, Aug. 5.

THE SIKH CHIEF, GOLAB SINGH (we learn from the Englishman), having obtained a military appointment from Government, received on Tuesday last a handsome sword from the hands of the Governor-General. Judging from the conduct of the Sikhs generally, and from some personal observations of the Sikh sirdars here, we have little doubt, should opportunity occur, the sword that has been presented to Golab Singh by Lord Canning will be used faithfully and well. The sirdar left the presidency for Allahabad with Mr. J. P. Grant.

REMOVAL OF WOMEN AND CHILDREN TO THE PRESIDENCY.—The Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal has decided upon ordering all European women and children in the Mofussil to be brought without delay to the presidency.

THE EX-KING OF OUDE.—A native has been caught in Calcutta endeavouring to convey a letter to the Ex-King of Oude. The contents of the letter are said to be important. The man says that he is from Benares, but he appears to be a Bengalee.

SIR COLIN CAMPBELL has arrived at Calcutta, and assumed the command-in-chief of the Indian army.

THE ARSENAL OF FORT WILLIAM.—It appears, says the Phoenix, that the man with the wild design to blow up the arsenal of Fort William was not a leaser of the establishment, but the bearer of a missive from the king of Delhi, offering ten thousand rupees and any quantity of jagheers to any one who could and would send the arsenal up into the serial regions. The offer might safely have been made much more liberal and tempting, as it is pretty certain that he who performed the feat would not survive to reap the reward.

THE death of Captain W. S. Beatson, of the 1st Bengal Light Cavalry, Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General of Havelock's division, has been announced. This melancholy event occurred at Cawnpore, on the 19th July, of cholera, brought on by exposure to the sun in the engagement of the 17th. Captain Beatson served during the campaign on the Sutlej, and was present at the battle of Aliwal, in 1846 (medal). He likewise served with the army of the Punjab, in 1848-9, including the passage of the Chenab, and battles of Chillianwallah and Goojerat (medal).—Bombay Times.

LORD ELGIN has arrived in H.M.'s steam frigate Shannon, with 1,200 marines and artillerymen. 300 more are expected immediately, and further very large reinforcements by the 22nd of August. The Shannon is herself one of the heavy class frigates, powerfully armed. Lord Elgin landed about six o'clock in the evening of August 9, under a salute, and was received with great cheering by a large crowd of the Christian community at the Ghaut.

RAISING OF ASSAM INFANTRY.—Instructions have been issued by the Lieut.-Governor of Bengal to the political agent on the north-eastern frontier, to raise five regiments of infantry at Assam, and the Northern Cachar.

THE FIRST DETACHMENT OF THE 5TH FUSILIERS, about 160 men, left Chinsurah for the Upper Provinces on the 14th of July. The second detachment, of about 180 men, left on the 18th; and the last detachment, of about 330 men left, on the day following, so that we may reasonably infer that the regiment will be up in time for the loyal Dinapore mutineers. If the 7th, 8th, and 40th regiments were to be disarmed, why were they (by all accounts) informed of it several hours previously? Was it for the purpose of letting them bolt with their arms, and endangering the lives of all around?—Phoenix, Aug. 4.

SURVEYING DEPARTMENT.—We learn, that, in consequence of the increase of business in the surveying department on the Himalayah mountains, the Government of India, on the recommendation of the superintending surveyor, have sanctioned an increase of office establishment amounting to Co.'s Rs. 600 per annum. The surveying operations, we also hear, progress most favourably.

THE ACT OF "LIMITED LIABILITY" FOR INDIA.—An Act for the Incorporation and Regulation of Joint Stock Companies, with or without limited liability of the members thereof, has been passed by the Legislative Council, having been read a first time on the 15th of April, 1856. The Act is a copy of the English one. The Indian Act applies to Banks and Insurance Companies (which the English Act does not), but excludes them from the benefit of limited liability.

A MANAGER IN DISTRESS.—Among the many persons who have suffered large pecuniary loss by the present disturbed state of affairs, is Mr. Van Gelder, the proprietor of the Lyric Theatre. He has found it necessary to issue a circular, soliciting support as the manager of the Lyric Theatre. The amount of Mr. Van Gelder's losses is stated to be little short of Rs. 40,000 or 4,000*l.* The subscription he asks for is for sixteen performances, or two months' subscription.

THE COLLEGE OF WARDS.—Public attention, we believe, has never yet been drawn to a little institution, located at the furthest-most skirts of this town, which may yet be destined to effect a social revolution more complete than might be expected from all our schools of learning, and even from a perfect judicial system. The Wards' College has been in existence for about a year, and it already gives signs of its great utility. A large portion of our readers may not be acquainted with the history and character of this institution, and it may not be amiss to give them a general idea of both. One principal object of the statesmen to whom we owe the permanent settlement, was to give stability to the fortunes of the territorial aristocracy (the zemindars), which that measure almost recreated. The establishment of the Wards' College was indeed a bright idea. A public school education does much to form one's character, but in the domestic economy of a wealthy Bengallee zemindar much of its effects are lost. The youngster who is compelled, by school opinion, to fight a round with his pieceless class-fellow, forgets the lesson when he returns to the bosom of obsequious servants, who believe young master's destiny is to be rubbed with half a pounch of oil and eat double the quantity of ghee daily. This circumstance in the ward's life had to be remedied. The College of Wards, under the direction of Baboo Rajenderloll Mitter, is intended to preclude the operation of this baneful influence. There the young gentlemen, who receive their mere literary education at the different Calcutta schools, board and lodge in a style approaching nearer to that of English university life than anything else. Were we disposed to quarrel with some of our young friends at the college, we would have told in print how, twelve months ago, one of them thought it infra dig. to get out of bed earlier than eight in the morning, another to walk on foot at all, a third to have less than two servants to rub oil on his body, a fourth to be served by less than three brahmins at dinner, and so on; and how, in one short year's time, they have learnt to be industrious pupils, hearty lovers of manual exercises, expert horsemen, keen sportsmen, and all that forms the gentleman, in the European idea of the term.—Hindu Patriot.

THE YANADIES are a wild tribe residing in Chingleput district, who until recently employed themselves in collecting the products of the jungles which they bartered to the collector for clothes and grain. For these they did not receive the full value, a part being kept back as tribute. The Court of Directors in 1845 insisted that two-thirds of the value of the goods brought by them should be expended in providing proper instruments for cutting firewood or for affording them better means of subsistence. Unfortunately to these instructions no attention was paid, and the condition of the tribe, if possible, deteriorated. In 1855 the attention of the Board of Revenue was directed to their condition, and they suggested that every encouragement should be given them to rear cattle, thinking that such an occupation would lead the Yanadies to hold intercourse with their neighbours. But tending cattle was found to be totally at variance with their habits, and consequently it behoved the Government to pursue a different course, if at least the permanent improvement of the tribe were contemplated. They were so ignorant that few could count beyond twenty, and still fewer could tell the number of annas in a rupee, inasmuch as they had neither shops nor trade. It was accordingly determined to pay for their products at a more liberal rate, and such a determination met with complete success. In 1856, the Yanadies began to appreciate the comforts which their neighbours enjoyed, and desired to participate in their apparent good fortune. Many adopted habits of regular industry, and endeavoured to procure such necessities as they had hitherto esteemed luxuries. They made and sold charcoal and felled timber, so that the effects of the more generous system of payments became at once manifest. It is now proposed to establish a school, and the Government has sanctioned the measure. What has been done in Chingleput with reference to the Yanadies requires to be carried out, in a greater or less degree, over a great portion of India.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

THE GOVERNMENT AT CALCUTTA AND THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

Memorandum.

Calcutta, June 22.—I beg to submit the following observations regarding my own position :—

2. If the present disturbances were confined to a particular locality, and we had an army in hand and under control, a few concise general instructions would answer every purpose.

3. As it is, however, we have no native army, and the very limited European force available must operate on many distinct and separate points, each body under its own commandant, the whole being, properly, subject to the general control and guidance of the Commander-in-Chief.

4. I think the Commander-in-Chief can most efficiently, and assuredly most expeditiously, control and direct all general military arrangements and movements now, and the reorganization and regeneration of the army hereafter, if he has the advantage of being in personal communication with the head of the Government, if he learns the views of Government with respect to the innumerable questions which must constantly arise, and, which is highly important, if he is made acquainted with the mass of intelligence which may be expected to reach the Government from every quarter of the empire.

5. If the Commander-in-Chief is at the seat of Government he can readily direct and guide the military arrangements of every description of the whole army; if he attaches himself to one of the small isolated bodies of troops moving about the country, he can only direct its proceedings, and the general conduct of matters connected with the entire army must be altogether neglected and put aside for the time.

6. I also may observe that it is quite impossible to conduct the multifarious duties of this large army without a numerous staff and extensive office establishment, requiring, when moving about the country, a complete regiment as an escort, and a large amount of carriage for their transport, neither the one nor the other of which can be supplied under present circumstances.

7. On the whole, therefore, I entertain a decided opinion that the duties of the Commander-in-Chief can be most efficiently and most usefully discharged at the seat of Government. But if the Governor-General in Council thinks otherwise, and considers that my presence at some other point would be more beneficial to the public service, I am prepared to start at once for any destination to which it may be desired I should repair.

PATRICK GRANT, Lieutenant-General,
Commander-in-Chief.

Minute by the Governor-General of India in Council.

I agree with Lieutenant-General Sir Patrick Grant that the duties of the Commander-in-Chief can at present be most efficiently and usefully discharged at the seat of Government.

I think that this will continue to be the case—certainly until a larger European force shall have been collected in the North-Western Provinces, and probably as long as the ferment among the native troops and the people continues to be so widely spread as it is at present, leaving it uncertain where the next violent outbreak may take place.

I am of opinion, however, that, as soon as the course of events shall tend to allay the general disquiet, and to show to what points our force should be mainly directed, with the view of crushing the heart of the rebellion, it will be proper that his Excellency should consider anew the question of his movements.

His Excellency's experience and high authority will then, in all probability, be most usefully employed in the disturbed districts, or their neighbourhood.

For the present there will be the greatest advantage in his Excellency remaining at the seat of Government.

June 22.

CANNING.

I think so too. Till we see our way more clearly, his Excellency's authority will be most usefully exercised at the Presidency.

June 22.

J. DORIN.

I concur in the above remark by Mr. Dorin. There is, I think, much force and truth in the fourth and fifth paragraphs of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief's memorandum of this date.

June 22.

J. Low.

I quite agree.

J. P. GRANT.

June 23.

I also concur entirely.

B. PRADOCK.

June 23.

The Secretary to the Government of India to the Deputy Adjutant-General of the Army.

Fort William, June 23.—Sir,—In continuation of my letter of the 20th instant, and with reference to a memorandum by the Acting Commander-in-Chief, dated the 22nd inst., I am directed to acquaint you, for the information of Sir Patrick Grant, K.C.B., that the Governor-General in Council concurs with his Excellency that the duties of the Commander-in-Chief can at present be most efficiently and usefully discharged at the seat of Government.

2. When the course of events shall tend to allay the general disquiet, and to show to what points our force should be mainly directed, with the view of crushing the heart of the rebellion, it will, in the opinion of his Lordship in Council, be proper for his Excellency to consider anew the question of his movements.

3. His Excellency's experience and high authority will then, in all probability, be most usefully employed in the disturbed districts or their neighbourhood.

4. For the present the Governor-General in Council thinks there will be the greatest advantage in his Excellency remaining at the seat of Government.

I am, &c.,

R. J. H. BIRCH, Colonel.

CIVIL SERVICE PRIVILEGE LEAVE.

Fort William, Financial Department, July 4, 1857.—Notification.—The following extract from a despatch from the Honourable the Court of Directors, addressed to the government of India, in the Financial Department, No. 32, of 1857, dated the 29th of April, is published for general information :—

Para. 3. We feel it necessary to adhere to our repeated decisions on this subject. A civil servant obtaining leave preparatory to taking a furlough on private affairs virtually relinquishes his office on the date of his quitting it; and the half allowances to which he is entitled sufficiently provide for his case.*

4. It was not intended that a return to duty only for a week or two, after privilege leave, should be sufficient to bar the operation of the rule which we have laid down; but, as suggested by the lieutenant-governor of Bengal, we shall allow privilege leave to be taken before a furlough, provided three months elapse between the return to station duty after the expiration of such leave, and the date of relinquishing office for the purpose of proceeding on furlough.

By order of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council.

C. HUGH LUSHINGTON,
Secretary to the Government of India.

CIVIL SERVICE FURLOUGH.

Fort William, Financial Department, July 7, 1857.—The following extract from a despatch from the honourable the Court of Directors, addressed to the Government of India, in the financial department, dated April 17, is published for general information :—

" Para. 13. We must decline to cancel the new rule here referred to, but we shall not require it to be applied to the cases of civil servants who obtained leave on medical certificate before the date of its publication.*

"By order of the right honourable the Governor-General of India in Council.

"C. HUGH LUSHINGTON,
"Sec. to the Govt. of India."

SEIKH VOLUNTEERS.

Head Quarters, Calcutta, July 27, 1857.—With the concurrence of government, the commander-in-chief is pleased to direct that the Sikhs and Punjabee Mahomedans at present attached to regiments of the line at and below Allahabad, shall be embodied into a separate corps, composed exclusively of soldiers of those sects, and to be denominated the "Sikh Volunteers."

2. The corps will be completed with soldiers of the same description who may volunteer from other regiments. Should any men obtain admission into the corps who are not in reality Sikhs, the officer commanding is hereby authorized to cause such pretenders to be immediately discharged.

3. The Sikh Volunteers will be placed on the same footing with respect to numbers, establishments, and allowances, as the regiments of Loodianah and Ferozepore.

4. The following appointments are made to the corps, from this date:

Brevet-major J. Bontein, 37th native infantry, to be commandant.

Brevet captain C. L. Montgomery, 65th native infantry, to be second in command.

Lieutenant P. Jervois, 73rd native infantry, to be adjutant.

A medical officer and staff sergeants will be named hereafter.

5. The native commissioned and non-commissioned officers will be selected from the Sikh regiments in the service; for which purpose the officers commanding the regiments of Loodianah and Ferozepore will be good enough to send in recommendatory rolls to the deputy adjutant-general of the army, with as little delay as possible, of the deserving men of their corps, being really Sikhs or Punjabee Mahomedans, whom they may deem worthy of advancement.

6. The head-quarters of the "Sikh volunteers" will be established at Allahabad, for the present, where the European officers will proceed without delay, at the government expense.

7. Details from corps of the line below Dinapore will assemble at Dum Dum, whence they will proceed to Allahabad, under instructions to be furnished hereafter.

8. The details from corps at and above Dinapore will be sent to Allahabad by the earliest opportunity, at the government expense.

9. It is to be clearly explained to the men that it is optional with themselves to join the "Sikh volunteers," and that they do so on the same footing as they enlisted under originally. They will be paid up to the 1st of the current month, and be furnished with the prescribed certificates of pay and clothing, and descriptive and character rolls. They will take with them their clothing in wear, and arms and accoutrements, complete.

By order of his excellency the commander-in-chief,

W. MAYHEW, major,
Deputy adjutant-general of the army.

MADRAS.

THE 8TH MADRAS CAVALRY.

We but too truly described the character of the affair in the 8th Madras cavalry, to which we referred yesterday on the authority of the Spectator. The corps has unequivocally displayed a mutinous spirit. We are indebted to a correspondent at Madras for the following account of its demonstration:—

“The 8th regiment of Madras light cavalry, which was to form part of the column en route for Calcutta from Madras, has mutinied. This took place on the 17th or 18th. The regiment had volunteered for foreign service, and was on its march down from Bangalore for the purpose of embarking at Madras; but on its arrival at Streepormutoor, twenty-six miles from Madras, it put forward a claim for the rates of pay, batta, and pension, which existed before 1837, and were more favourable to the sepoys than the present rates. Such a claim, put forward at such a moment, was most distressing and perplexing. Nevertheless, the officers (some of them) started by train at once for Madras, to see what could be done. I believe that the Madras Government agreed to guarantee the concession of the terms demanded from the supreme Government, and that the officers returned to Streepormutoor, and informed the sepoys that their requests were complied with. The corps then proceeded to Poonamalee, thirteen miles from Madras, and then the truth came out. ‘They would march on no terms whatever. They would not make war upon their countrymen.’ Fortunately two guns and some artillerymen had arrived at Poonamalee in the very nick of time. The sowars were at once deprived of their horses, their pistols, caps and ammunition, and left only with their swords. Why those were not taken away also, I cannot tell. The partial disarming was quietly submitted to, and the corps was halted. The 3rd Madras light cavalry is now at Arcot, and is at once to proceed to Bangalore. As soon as it has well cleared the station, the 8th Madras light cavalry is to march to Arcot, and do dismounted duty there. But what is in reserve for the mutineers I cannot tell. Would that I could assure the safety of the officers, now alone with them.

“This affair has caused the greatest excitement in Madras. The volunteers were warned that their services are to be available at a moment’s notice. There are patrols in all the streets both day and night. The Government compound presents the appearance of a camp, surrounded as it is with artillery, and filled as its banqueting-hall is with soldiers. Mortars are placed on the south side of the fort, facing Triplicane. Yet Madras is so extended a place, the dwellings of the chief inhabitants so dispersed, that there is a very painful and general feeling of insecurity. The force is thought to be most inadequate. The Mussulman inhabitants of Triplicane are notoriously disaffected; so are those of Arcot and Vellore; and since the plague-spot has touched Madras it is impossible to predict how far it may spread. Every one is hoping rather than believing that this mutiny is the beginning and the end of a rebellion in Madras.

“The horses of the mutineers were taken in charge by a commissariat serjeant, ridden to Madras by the horse-keepers, and embarked for Calcutta this morning, where they will be a valuable acquisition.”

The horses will be as useful as the men in Bengal, perhaps more so; and we trust that the promptitude displayed in despatching them to Calcutta may be regarded as an earnest of the energy which will be exhibited in dealing with the mutinous troopers.—Bombay Gazette, August 28.

A SUSPENDED SUBADAR.—The subadar of the Malabar police force, was some short time ago not exactly convicted of torture, but the assistant magistrate, Mr. Thomas, thought the case so serious against him, that he was ordered to find security. The man was suspended, and has petitioned Government, who, we understand, took the same view of the matter as the authorities, or rather would not order the man’s immediate restoration to his corps out of deference to the local authorities whom it was necessary to maintain. Meanwhile the subadar petitioned the sudder against Mr. Thomas’s order, which was reversed without even a hearing. The whole case was preposterous from beginning to end. The charge, no less than that of burning off one of the complainant’s fingers with oiled rag to make him discover treasure, was never brought forward until seventeen months after the alleged events, a point which over and over again has been urged by the magistracy as conclusive against the truth of similar charges, and the complainant only came forward after the subadar was hauled up upon another matter. There were abundant indicia that the story was false from beginning to end, and none other than one utterly unversed in evidence could have been misled by it.

We cannot of course comment upon this affair; because it is impossible to commend the conduct of any of the parties who have had it before them for investigation, except the sudder. And we have the fear of pains and penalties before us, if we were to express any natural reflections which the affair suggests. We might be making the people dissatisfied with the administration of justice as it prevails, and so be exciting disaffection: a course highly seditious, and altogether indefensible; because it requires only a moment’s reflection to convince any man of “common sense” that it is not the mal-administration of justice which gives rise to discontent, or ought to; but its being known may lead to consequences which otherwise need not have been apprehended. Thus it is clear, that not the acts of a Government, but the comments of a Press, are the real original source of rebellion.—Q.E.D., Athenæum.

COCHIN (June 27).—It may not be uninteresting, perhaps, to many of your readers to know how the nativity of St. John is celebrated in this antiquated town. As it was the first time I witnessed it here, it appeared very silly altogether to me to see people of all descriptions and grades join in lighting up the streets with fireworks, and keeping up a continual noise by the firing of myriads of crackers. Drunkenness seems to be a part of the ceremony; for you may walk the whole town on that day and a sober man will be as scarce to be met with in the streets as a jewel on the snout of a pig, or faithfulness and loyalty in any of the Bengal regiments, consequently there are many riotous encounters and lots of police cases the next day. Broken heads and limbs are of common occurrence, and, from inquiry, I find there has not a single anniversary of St. John’s natal day passed without a poor Malabar Christian or a Topaz being gathered to his fathers from some accident or other, generally from drowning. This is of more constant occurrence, I learn; and it is not to be wondered at, since the Bacchanalians take to the water to cool themselves down under the fumes of liquor. The only persons who did not show great anxiety to honour the accuser of Herodias by fireworks and folly were the English merchants, who have but lately settled here. They were, I suppose, more busy in their own speculations upon the wreck of the unfortunate Aphrogeia, which is still lying opposite the beach, a few miles from the town; and thither are seen the men of bales and puncheons congregating for a better purpose than mere fun.

THE DEATH OF THE MAHA RAJA OF TANJORE is reported; he has left no male heirs, and it remains to be seen whether the succession of females will be recognized.

THE MINOR PORTS along the coast of the Madras presidency are to be dismantled. A detachment of artillery, under Captain Baker, has embarked in the transport steamer Manilla. They will take charge of the fort at Masulipatam.

DISPENSARY AT MASULIPATAM.—Government has granted Rs. 5,000 towards its expense.

MR. C. E. P. JOHNSTON, an assistant surgeon on the Madras establishment has been cashiered for drunkenness.

INSUBORDINATION AMONG MERCHANT SEAMEN.—Two specific grievances are set forth as entailing serious drawbacks on the merchant service, viz., the prevalence of a spirit of insubordination among seamen, which of late has assumed a rather portentous aspect in Bombay, as it has in Calcutta, where the Government has just dispensed with the services of Khalasees and Sarangs in the Hon. Company's steamers, &c. The other objectionable point is the mode of procedure adopted by the Indian Navy towards equipping its own vessels with men enticed away from merchant ships. A correspondent of the Athenæum (Mr. T. Jefferies, of Cochin) writes:—"It does not surely require a stretch of reasoning to show to what inevitable dangers a vessel must be exposed by going to sea manned with mutinous seamen, ripe for any act of revolt or tyranny; on an emergency or exigency arising, she may be entirely sacrificed, or the commander be deprived of the capability of navigating his vessel aright, amidst impending dangers, by the contempt which would, in all likelihood, be evinced by the discontented men for all authority vested in him."

SOUNDING AN ALARM.—The Madras Athenæum sounds the alarm in the ears of Lord Harris, by means of a grandiloquent leading article, which commences:—"We are no alarmists; but it would evince the height of folly to shut our eyes or turn aside the head from the warnings which we see passing before us. The waves of rebellion are surging ever nearer and nearer to our own homes; already they lap the confines of this presidency; and ere long, if the inundation cannot be stayed, the fidelity of the Madras sepoy will be practically tested. Many an officer has assured us that our troops so cordially detest their Bengal brethren, that they would like nothing better than an opportunity of crossing bayonets with the mutineers. We trust it is so; events seem to forebode such a collision; may our gallant army then be found true to its allegiance and its duty! But surely it is time to set our own houses in order. There are warnings not to be neglected, if we are wise, which should teach us, at any rate, to take every precaution within our power; and for the third and last time we call upon the Government to notify to the public what is to be the signal of danger, what measures have been taken for our safety, what places of rendezvous are appointed for our respective districts. We can assure Lord Harris that there exists a very general feeling of dissatisfaction among all classes at what in other days we should have called the supineness of Government. He has not one tithe the means that we have of learning the public feeling on such a subject as this; and at a time when artillery are in the Government House Compound, piquets posted all over Madras, horse-patrols watching the roads, rifle and volunteer corps enrolling, and the fact officially notified in the papers, it is quite childish to suppose that the disclosure of plans of defence could do any harm, though, on the other hand, it is probable the publicity might do much good, and most certainly would re-assure the minds of the timid and the loyal. This morning witnesses the first gathering of the volunteers; the cavalry, we observe, are to be armed with the spear, a weapon likely in neophyte hands to prove more dangerous to friend than foe."

PUBLIC WORKS.—We give, in another column, a Government notification issued on Saturday evening, in an extraordinary gazette, directing a reduction, from the 1st August, of no less than 451 of the various grades of executive engineers and overseers in the department of public works, leaving only a total of 549 of those grades as the future establishment instead of 1,000, as at present. This arrangement places at the disposal of the Commander-in-Chief the services of twenty-eight officers and seventy-nine non-commissioned officers and soldiers. It has been rumoured for some little time past, that some such measure was in contemplation, and we believe that it was recommended by H. E. the Provincial Commander-in-Chief, as essentially necessary under existing circumstances.—Spectator, July 20.

Extract from the proceedings of the Right Honourable the Governor-General of India in Council, in the Financial Department, under date the 12th June, 1857.

Read an endorsement from the Home Department, No. 795, dated the 21st ultimo, forwarding for consideration, and orders a letter from the Acting Chief Secretary to the Government of Bombay, No. 2208, dated the 6th idem, having reference to a question connected with the Uncovenanted Civil Service Absentee Rules.

Resolution.—The Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council observes that the Government of Bombay issued a circular on the 27th June, 1856, declaring that nothing contained in the Uncovenanted Service Absentee Rules is intended to prevent heads of offices from granting casual leave of absence from office, without deduction of salary, to any subordinate officer who, without leaving his station, may be compelled to remain at home from sickness, for a period not exceeding twenty days in the year, whether continuous or at intervals; that if such casual absence exceed twenty days, the absentee should be subject to a deduction of one-fourth of his salary for the period in excess of such twenty days, provided that the entire absence does not exceed two months in the year; and that if such absence exceed two months in the year, the absentee should be considered as falling under the Uncovenanted Service Absentee Rules.

Referring to this circular, instructions are solicited as to whether the excess beyond twenty days' leave, as it is subjected to a deduction of one-fourth of salary, should, in calculating period of service for pension purpose, be taken, or not, into account as part of the two years allowed by Clause 1 of Section V. of the Uncovenanted Service Absentee Rules, the same as leave of absence on medical certificate granted under those rules.

The Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council observes that, under the strict bearing of the rules, all leave under sick certificate has to be taken into account as part of the two years allowed by Clause 1 of Section V.; and seeing that the circular issued by the Government of Bombay involves a modification of the rules, his lordship in Council is of opinion that it should be cancelled, it being understood, however, that casual leave for a few days may, in cases of sickness, be granted by the head of the office at his discretion, without loss of salary, and without such leave being taken into account as part of the two years allowed by Clause 1 of Section V.

Order.—Ordered, that a copy of the foregoing Resolution be sent to the Home Department for communication to the Government of Bombay.

Ordered also that a copy be sent to the Departments* and Local Governments† noted in the margin.

Ordered further, that a transcript of the above resolution be sent to the Civil Auditor for his information and guidance.

Secretary to Government of India.
By order.

E. MALTBY, Acting Chief Secretary.

HENRY D. CARTWRIGHT.

THE LONDON MAIL of July 27th arrived at Bombay August 21st (per Aden).

THE SOUTHERN MAHRATTA HORSE.—We are glad to perceive that Government have rewarded the services of the Southern Mahratta Horse, by making them a military corps from the 16th of March last.

DEATH OF LIEUT.-COL. HAMERTON.—We regret to announce the death of Lieut.-Col. Atkins Hamerton, of the 2nd (or grenadier) N.I., H.M.'s consul and the East-India Company's agent in the territories of the Inaam of Muscat. According to the Bombay Gazette, "Colonel Hamerton had accompanied Capt. Burton and his exploring party from Zanzibar some distance down the coast, on their way for the great inland lake, when he was taken ill with severe diarrhoea, and had to return in haste. He died four days after his arrival at Zanzibar, and on the 5th or 6th July.

THE KHAN OF KELAT has received certain Persian letters, calling upon him to aid the mutineers against the British power, and has forwarded them to the Bombay government.

CIVIL LEAVE.—The Court of Directors have sent out their decision, approving the application of the Bombay Civil servants, praying that nine months' consecutive leave may be allowed them to Europe or elsewhere, without prejudice to the other conditions of Sections XIII. and XIV. of the Absentee Rules.

BOMBAY STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.—A meeting of the shareholders of the Bombay Steam Navigation Company was held on the 21st August, in their office on the Bombay Green, and a dividend of Rs. 75 per share declared.

DAY OF HUMILIATION.—Sunday, the 16th August, was set apart by the Armenian community of Bombay, as a day of humiliation and prayer for the success of the British arms, and the speedy re-establishment of order and tranquillity in the disturbed provinces.

DEATH OF CAPTAIN HUNT.—We regret to announce the death of Captain G. H. Hunt, of I.L.M.'s 78th Highlanders, which melancholy event occurred near Minghyr, of cholera. Captain Hunt is well known in Bombay, and will long be remembered as the "hero of Ahwaz," having commanded the detachment of three hundred men sent from Mohamreh up the Karoon river, when the extraordinary spectacle was presented of a numerous Persian army retiring before this small force, leaving guns and ammunition in the hands of the victors. He had also previously served in the expedition to Barazjoon, was present at the battle of Kooshab, and was afterwards engaged in the pursuit of the Persian army after the capture of Mohamreh. The brilliant exploit at Ahwaz drew forth the thanks of the Governor-General, who specially noticed Captain Hunt's gallantry on the occasion.

THE HON. H. W. REEVES.—The following proclamation was issued on the accession of the Hon. H. W. Reeves to his seat in Council, in consequence of the retirement from the service, and departure for Europe, of the Hon. J. G. Lumsden:—

"The Hon. Henry Wilson Reeves, provisionally appointed by the Hon. the Court of Directors to be a member of Council at Bombay, has this day taken the oaths and his seat as fourth member of this Government."

Mr. Reeves will be succeeded in the office of revenue commissioner, which he very ably filled since the 3rd of January, 1855, by Mr. J. D. Inverarity, officiating chief secretary to Government; but Mr. Inverarity will continue in his present acting appointment until the return to India of the chief secretary, Mr. Young; meanwhile Mr. Ellis, of the Inaam commission, will act as revenue commissioner.

MILITARY.—The transport-ship, Golden Era, with the 23rd regiment N.L.I. and a detachment of the Scinde horse on board, under Captain S. Whitehill, of the former corps, arrived in the harbour on the 28th instant, from Bushire. We take the following from the Observer:—Three native infantry regiments, Jacob's horse, and one of the European regiments from England, with the Poona irregular horse, are to be formed into a brigade at Poona, under the command of Brigadier-General John Jacob. These troops will be brigaded near the Sir Jamsetjee Bund.

COLONEL ABBOTT AND THE Bombay Times.—We (Bombay Times) are favoured with a letter from Colonel Abbott in reply to the complaints made against him for his conduct at Neemuch, by our Rajpootana correspondent, a month ago. We can of course forgive a little warmth under the circumstances; and as we have now given as prominent insertion to the contradictions, as we did to the charges themselves, think the matter had better be allowed to drop. Our correspondent may, or may not, be known to Colonel Abbott, but the practice of Bengal officers to ma-bap their sepoy, instead of commanding them, is too foreign to our notions of disciplining to be approved on this side of India. Colonel Abbott probably did the only thing in his power at last, viz., manifest a seeming confidence in his men, but ill-accommodated with his real feelings. He has, however, been thirty-two years with the 72nd Regiment; and in the present circumstances of the country, he must not expect much sympathy with him on this side of India, simply that he did his utmost to delay a mutiny, which ought never to have transpired. There has been an extravagant and offensive assumption of superiority on the part of their service for many years past, and a jealous sensitiveness to all remarks upon its defects, which go a long way to diminish any sympathy for them in the South of India. Besides which, we are made to share the penalty of their fault. Who can forget the feeling with which the Bengalees received Jacob's well-timed and most temperate pamphlet of 1850, concerning the fatal tendencies of their army system? The deluge has overtaken us at last, and we are not in the mood to be very tender with a man who has helped for thirty-two years to let in the waters.

INDIAN NAVY ENGINEERS.—The grievances of the Indian navy engineers have been of long standing; and much cause have they for complaint. "That justice" which is "universal" is denied to the few serving the Honourable Company. As far back as 1853 we recollect of several having memorialized the Honourable Court of Directors, praying to be assimilated in position with their more fortunate brethren in the royal service. In due course an answer was returned that the prayer of the memorialists could not be acceded to, although the memorials received the entire approbation of Sir Henry Leeke. In 1853, Sir Henry Leeke, in his kindly endeavours to ameliorate their standing in the service, ordered "the chief engineers of the men-of-war under his command permission to walk the quarter-deck, the same as officers of that rank in the Royal Navy; and further states this indulgence is granted, in consequence of the good conduct and unremitting care and attention to the machinery of the ships of war to which they belong, and likewise as a reward to those for their steady conduct during the time they were under fire at Burmah." To Sir Henry Leeke, then, do the engineers owe a debt of gratitude for, single-handed, making a breach in that hitherto impenetrable barrier which separated the quarter-deck from the engine-room. On Commodore Wellesley now the duty—and we hope it may be a cheerful one—devolves of finishing what Sir Henry Leeke began. Fresh from active service in the Royal Navy, it is presumed he will at once see the necessity of granting to the engineers under his command that position in the Indian Navy which has existed for these last ten years in the Royal Navy.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDER.

Head Quarters, Poona, July 31, 1857.

With the sanction of Government the Commander-in-Chief has been pleased to direct the organization of three additional companies of European artillery with light field batteries attached.

The companies will be completed as far as possible by drafts from the 1st and 2nd battalions of artillery, as also by volunteers from the three European infantry regiments in the following proportions:—

1st European regiment (fusiliers)	25
2nd European regiment light infantry	95

155

The designation of these companies will be the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd companies of reserve artillery with Nos. 17, 18, and 19 light field batteries attached and they will be commanded by captains Worgan, Kemball, and Gay respectively.

The requisite promotions in the several grades of non-commissioned officers for these companies, will be made regimentally, and the whole of the arrangements connected with this augmentation be carried out by the commandant of artillery, who will be pleased to adopt immediate measures for the enlistment of gun lascars, drivers, and followers, to complete them to the field establishment.

The batteries and harness required will be indented for, and the light field battery horses now attached to the horse brigade at Poona, together with those purchased by the remount agent at Bombay, and by the committee at Poona, be apportioned as Colonel Rawland may determine. That officer will be pleased to issue such subsidiary orders as he may consider necessary, these arrangements having effect from the 1st proximo.

By order of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

(Signed) E. GREEN, Col.
Adj. gen. of the army.

CAPT. JOHN EDWIN BOWLES.

Head Quarters, Bombay, Aug. 24, 1857.—At a European general court-martial, assembled at camp, near Bushire, on Friday, July 31, 1857, Capt. J. E. Bowles, 23rd N.I., was arraigned on the following charges.

First charge.—For conduct highly disgraceful and unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in having at camp Bushire, on or about the 25th July, 1857, been drunk on duty under arms at a morning inspection parade of the regiment.

Second charge.—For conduct unbecoming an officer, and to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having at the time and place specified in the first charge, when asked by me, his commanding officer, why he had not given the usual caution to his company before sloping arms, in an insolent and disrespectful manner, twice flatly contradicted me by asserting that he had done so.

The above being in breach of the articles of war.

Finding.—The court, from the evidence before it, finds the prisoner, Captain J. E. Bowles, of the 23rd regiment native light infantry,

Guilty of the 2nd charge preferred against him.

Sentence.—The court having found the prisoner guilty as above specified, which being in breach of the articles of war, sentences him, the said Captain J. E. Bowles, of the 23rd regiment native light infantry, to be cashiered.

Approved and confirmed.

BURMAH.

THE BURMESE AMBASSADORS lost the presents sent by the Emperor of the French to the King of Burmah in the fire at Rangoon. With considerable reluctance they presented themselves before their liege lord. He at once ordered them to be placed in irons, and decreed that the unfortunate ambassadors should first be whipped, and then burnt to death.

WHO IS TO PAY?

By what means the East-India Company is to cover the extraordinary expenses occasioned by the mutiny of the Bengal army, is a question frequently mooted both by friends and foes—by the former with anxiety, by the latter with affected commiseration and ill-concealed exultation. The financial difficulties of the crisis have, however, been greatly exaggerated. It is possible that, at the outset, there may be some strain upon the exchequer to meet the sudden and unexpected demands arising out of the transport of so large a force to such a distant scene of action. The pay of so many thousands of European soldiers is also a heavy charge upon the Indian treasury, already impoverished by the loss of the revenue of the North-West Provinces. That increased expenditure and diminished income constitute an unpleasant phase in public affairs, is of course undeniable. The situation is, no doubt, critical; but not to the extent imagined by timid or ill-affected persons. There is at present no reason to apprehend any deficiency in the revenues of Bombay, Madras, Bengal, or the Punjab. Whatever falling off there may be, will be confined to the Upper Provinces; and even there it will be both partial and temporary. In some districts the revenue is still collected, and in all it may hereafter be justly augmented as a righteous punishment for the defection or indifference of the inhabitants. In the mean time, the pay of the revolted troops is saved to the Government, and the necessity avoided of preparing for the payment of the pensions to which they would otherwise have gradually become entitled. To this must be added the annual allowances hitherto enjoyed by the native princes who have taken part with the mutineers. The King of Delhi alone will forfeit 150,000*l.* a year, and it is not improbable that his ex-Majesty of Oude will likewise be mulcted to a heavy amount. There are, also, many jaghires, or estates exempted from land-tax, which will be resumed, and made to contribute to the public revenue. But if these various sources prove inadequate to the necessities of the present emergency, the British Government is bound, in common justice, to make good the deficiency. Indeed, if strict justice were to be expected from the home Legislature, one moiety of this extraordinary outlay would fall upon this country. There is assuredly more reason to hold the entire nation responsible for the recovery of the North-Western Provinces, than to exact from the East-India Company a moiety of the expenses of the Persian war—a war chiefly occasioned by the incompetence of the British Minister at the Court of Teheran. If it were right to burden the Company with a half-share of the expenditure in the Persian war, it would be at least equally proper to charge the Home Government to the same extent on account of the Afghan and Burmese wars, neither of which originated with the Company. For the former we are indebted, on his own confession, to Sir John Cam Hobhouse, now Lord Broughton; while the latter arose out of Lord Dalhousie's spirited vindication of the rights of a British citizen in every quarter of the globe. On these two occasions hostilities were entered upon for national motives, and not at all in furtherance of the views of the East-India Company; and yet upon them was laid the burden of the conflict. In common equity, therefore, the British Government should make the only return in its power, by offering to bear a fair proportion of the expenses necessitated by the maniacal conduct of the Bengal sepoya.

THE MOHURRUM.

THERE are at least seventy-two sects of Mahomedans, of whom the Shiites and the Sunnites are the most distinguished. The former look upon Mahomed's three immediate successors, Abubeker, Omar, and Othman, as impostors, and exclude them from the list of the twelve Imams, or leaders of the faithful. According to their view, these were Mahomed, Ali (the prophet's nephew and the husband of his favourite daughter Fatima), Hasan, Hosein, and the descendants of the last unto the ninth generation. They are also distinguished from their rivals by the form of their turban, by a particular manner of wearing the hair, and by some other observances of equal importance. The name of Sheeha, or Shiites, was given to them as a term of reproach by the adverse faction; but they style themselves Adaliyah, or those who take a just and proper view of religion. The epithet Soonnees, or Sunnites, on the other hand, signifies the observers of tradition, or the orthodox, and is applied to much the most numerous portion of the Mahomedan community. Among other distinctions, the Soonnees in prayer cross their hands on the lower part of the breast, while the Sheeha allow their arms to hang straight by their sides. The former also press their forehead on the ground a certain number of times, as an act of adoration. The latter, however, omit to do this, but wear green slippers, which are an abomination unto the others. With such serious points of difference existing between them, it is not surprising that there should be one point on which these two sects cordially agree—that of mutual contempt and detestation. Nationally, the Persians are Shiites, and the Turks Sunnites; and to this cause may be traced the bitter animosity towards one another that actuates those two neighbouring peoples. This deadly schism received a baptism of blood on the plain of Kerbela, on the 10th day of the month Mohur-rum, in the 61st year of the Hejira, equivalent to our 19th October, A.D. 680. The death of Hosein, the son of Ali and grandson of the Prophet, has been so pathetically described in Ockley's History of the Saracens, and in the 50th chapter of Gibbon's immortal work, that no feebler pen would be justified in narrating the piteous tale. In commemoration of that sad catastrophe, the Shiites annually celebrate a solemn festival on the 1st day of the Mohur-rum moon. With Hosein is associated his elder brother Hasan, who, through timidity, indolence, or piety, resigned the Caliphate to the usurper Moawiyah, and by his orders was subsequently poisoned. The distinguishing feature of the Mohur-rum festival is the construction of a Taziya, or tomb, in fancied resemblance to Hosein's sepulchre on the banks of the Euphrates. The materials, and even the form, of the tomb vary according to the opulence and taste of the mourners. The kings of Oude—for the royal family belong to the sect of Ali—made theirs of green glass, with or-molu or brass mouldings; but others prefer ivory, ebony, sandal-wood, or even coloured talc. On the top of the Taziya are placed a little corn, rice, bread, flowers, and cups of water, as is customary at Mahomedan funerals. On the last day of the festival the Taziya is carried round in solemn procession, a curious description of which will be found in Fanny Parks's Wanderings of a Pilgrim, and finally interred in a hole previously prepared for its reception. One of the principal performers in this ceremony is a fakir, or religious mendicant, who recites aloud the story of Hosein's martyrdom, and inflames every Shiite breast with a burning desire to avenge his cruel wrongs. Deep sobs and frantic exclamations frequently interrupt the oft-told tale, and fill fares it with any thoughtless or defiant Sunnites who may cross the path of the mourners. In every large station in India, on the recurrence of the Mohur-rum, the military are kept in readiness to act, should the rival sects come to blows, as is often the case. It is now, indeed, a subject of apprehension that for once they may lay aside their mutual hatred, and unite in a holy war against the Christian. This year the Mohur-rum commenced on the 22nd August, and fears are entertained that the Mahomedan population of Patna, Bombay, and Calcutta might unitedly rally round the green flag of Islam, and raise the old war-shout Deen! Deen! On the other hand, it is not unlikely that the imperial city has been converted into an arena for the fierce wrath of fanatics, who hate one another more bitterly than they do their common enemy, the pale-faced Giaour. All doubts, however, on this point will be removed before this article can appear in print; but it seemed not inopportune or irrelevant to remind the English reader of the origin and true character of the festival.

JUNG BAHADOOR.

THERE is an ancient proverb which describes adversity as the touchstone of friendship. Tried by this severe test, not one of our native allies appears in a better light than his Excellency Jung Bahadoor Coomaranagee, prime minister of the kingdom of Nepal. It will be in the memory of our readers that, a few years ago, this trusty friend made a great sensation in London society by the gorgeousness of his costume and his princely munificence. At that time he was Ambassador Extraordinary to the Court of St. James's from that of Katmandu, of the existence of which the general English public was then first made fully aware. Of his Excellency's antecedents nothing whatever was known until the appearance in print of Mr. Oliphant's "Journey to Katmandu;" and it is from that pleasant little volume we derive the materials of the following brief sketch.

Jung Bahadoor is the second of eight sons of a certain grim old kazi, who formerly commanded a division of the Nepal army. At an early age he became conspicuous for his expertness in games of chance, not less than for his cool daring, and skill in all manly exercises and pursuits. His adventurous and restless spirit led him into many scrapes, from which he usually extricated himself by his fearlessness and presence of mind. About the time that he obtained the command of a company, his uncle, Mahtabar Singh, became Minister, through the favour of the Ranee. Regardless of military discipline, Jung instantly abandoned his post, and went off to Court to make the most of this tempting opportunity. He appears to have been kindly received by his uncle, and shortly afterwards he accompanied a secret mission to Benares, with the design of forming a conspiracy against the English. Their object being discovered, he and his companions were suddenly seized and conveyed to the Nepaulese frontier; but without punishment or further annoyance.

Jung's courage and talent for intrigue soon excited the jealousy of the heir-apparent, a youth about eighteen years of age, who, on two different occasions, made an attempt upon his life. Jung escaped from being a victim by becoming a criminal. His uncle had lost his influence with the Queen by refusing to do away with certain individuals to whom she had taken a dislike. One night, about eleven o'clock, Mahtabar Singh received a summons to repair immediately to the presence of their majesties for an affair of urgent importance. As he was about to enter the hall of audience, a ball passed through his heart, and he fell dead at the feet of his royal mistress. The pistol was fired by his nephew, who afterwards pleaded as an excuse the necessity of self-preservation: the Ranee had offered him the alternative of being a murderer or a corpse, and he elected the former. In return for this service he was appointed commander-in-chief, while the premiership was conferred jointly on Guggun Singh, Futteh Jung, and Abinam Singh. Exactly one year afterwards, the first of these three was shot dead in his own room, and a sirdar was arrested on suspicion. As Abinam declined to order him out for execution without the King's authority, Jung Bahadoor insinuated to Futteh Jung that his colleague's scruples probably arose from his being himself accessory to the deed. Futteh, however, declined to take any steps in the matter, and it then became evident to Jung that he must either remove both ministers, or expect his own dismissal, and, probably, death. Abinam and Futteh were called before the royal throne, and bitterly upbraided by the Ranee—for the King was but a puppet—for not avenging the murder of their colleague, who was generally supposed to have been her paramour. At that moment Jung gave a signal for the arrest of Futteh, whose son snatched up a long knife, and wounded Jung's brother, Bum Bahadoor, but was instantly cut down by another brother, Dere Shum Shere, a lad scarcely seventeen years of age. Futteh himself was then shot by Jung, who was supplied with rifles by his body-guard until the dead bodies of thirteen noblemen lay prostrate at the foot of the throne. Abinam alone survived; but as he rushed to the door he received a sword-cut from Krishna Bahadoor that severed him nearly in two. That same night 150 sirdars were murdered within the palace walls, and Jung Bahadoor was declared Prime Minister. Next day he was presented to the army, who hailed him with loud acclamations. Others of his rivals or personal enemies were then summarily removed out of his path, and his position secured, at least for a time. But Jung was not cruel or bloodthirsty by nature. He could kill an enemy with as little remorse as he would a serpent or a tiger; but he shrank from fruitless crime. It was by refusing to slay two of the King's sons by a former consort that he offended the Ranee, and imperilled his own life. In this emergency he acted with great promptitude and energy, and obtained an order from the imbecile old King to destroy all the enemies of the heir-apparent. By virtue of this document he beheaded the meaner conspirators, and transported the Queen and her two boys to Benares. Thither she was accompanied by the Rajah, in whose absence his eldest son was placed upon the throne. Not long afterwards the deposed monarch was sufficiently ill-advised to invade Nepaul, in the hope of recovering his lost power. He was surprised, however, at night, 400 of his followers put to the sword, and himself taken prisoner and conveyed to Katmandu. Since then father and son have been associated in the royal title; but the real power has continued in the hands of Jung Bahadoor. Three principal events have called public attention to Nepaul since his assumption of the government: the invasion of Thibet, the visit to England, and the present timely offer of assistance. It is said, indeed, that Jung Bahadoor proposed to send 10,000 men to the aid of Sir Henry Lawrence, formerly Resident at Katmandu; but that the Calcutta Government, from jealousy or ignorance of the extent of their danger, declined the offer. The 3,000 men mentioned as having reached Goruckpoor were originally marched into Oude in anticipation of the Governor-General's answer, and were on the point of being recalled to Nepaul at the request of our infatuated authorities, when Sir Henry's lamented death rendered their further advance indispensable to the safety of the beleaguered garrison. It is, no doubt, humiliating to British pride, to incur a debt of gratitude to native princes; but it will be far more disgraceful if such opportune services are not hereafter rewarded in a manner worthy of the British nation.

MARRIAGE OF HINDOO WIDOWS.

PROBABLY every new Governor-General inaugurates his assumption of the reins of government by a blunder. For this he is rather to be excused than blamed. He naturally views the abominable superstitions and childish prejudices of the natives through a European medium. Moved by mingled feelings of disgust and commiseration, he is irresistibly impelled to attempt the removal of the rust of ages, and to impart the fruits of European enlightenment. It is at least an amiable error. Indeed, he would scarcely be doing his duty as a man, if he did not thus err as a Governor-General. Lord Canning has not been wiser, or more teachable, than his predecessors. His lordship may even have gone a step beyond them in indiscretion. Little time would elapse after his arrival before he became aware that what in this country, by a false delicacy, is hinted at as "the great social problem," has to be solved also in the "gorgeous East." He would not be long in obtaining undeniable evidence that incontinency is the rule, and chastity the rare exception among certain classes of females. Perhaps at first he might be surprised to learn that the majority of faithless wives and wanton widows are, or have been, joined in lawful wedlock to Brahmins of the bluest blood. It is notorious that such is the case. Of ten depraved women in Calcutta, seven may be fairly set down as the consorts or relicts of Kulin Brahmins, the Pharisees of Pharisees. Of the three subdivisions of Brahmins, the Kulin, or Koolenu, rank the highest, and accordingly enjoy the greatest opportunities for sensual indulgence. Their sanctity is too assured to render it necessary on their part to exercise any self-denial, or to discharge the ordinary duties of their calling. Proclaiming themselves superior to the rest of mankind, they discovered the truth of the aphorism, that the world is peopled by rogues and fools—the latter predominating. It soon came to be deemed an honour, and almost a sacred privilege, to form a connection of any kind with beings of such exalted pre-eminence. Being comparatively few in number, their market value became, of course, enhanced, and fathers anxious to establish their daughters bid high for a life-interest in a bloated voluptuary. The lowest dower a Kulin Brahmin is expected to accept is Rs. 200, but it frequently exceeds ten times that sum. Though the connection is dignified by the name of matrimony, it is in fact no better than a legalized concubinage. The first wife is generally a Kulin, and her offspring alone are acknowledged by their holy sire. Of other wives of baser clay he may have as many as he pleases. Twenty is by no means an uncommon number, and some have been known to have upwards of a hundred. It must not be supposed, however, that these all live together in one vast Agapemone, a “happy family.” So far from it, they continue to reside with their parents, and seldom are honoured with the company of their lord oftener than once in three or four years. It may even happen that the nuptial visit satisfies, or satiates, the truant saint, and that he never again darkens the door of his bride’s father. The latter is bound to present an offering of money, provisions, and clothes to his dainty son-in-law, whenever that worthy may condescend to pass a night beneath his roof. On the other hand, by way of perquisite, he is allowed or compelled to maintain his daughter’s children, for their reputed father wisely declines to claim their paternity. It would be strange if either love or loyalty could arise from such an unholy union. The natives themselves admit that adultery, abortion, and infanticide are common occurrences with the wives of the Kulin Brahmins during the life of the husband, and that after his death they plunge into the lowest depths of vice. Until recently it was unlawful for them to marry a second time, but not so to give way to the grossest immorality. The most respectable and enlightened portion of the Hindoo community heartily condemned and deplored this scandal to their religion. Some of them, imitating our English usages, petitioned the Government to interfere and authorize the second marriage of widows. This partial prayer was acceded to with injudicious alacrity, without sufficient deference being shown to the ignorance and prejudice of the vast majority of the population. The petitioning minority did not represent the feelings and wishes of their countrymen. In their philosophy, or their cynicism, they were in advance of the masses; or, what is much more likely, from an utter indifference to the real merits of the case, they were easily induced to take a step which they knew would be agreeable to the ruling powers. For Lord Canning some allowance may be made on the ground of inexperience; but his advisers are much to blame for not having warned him against any sudden and direct interference with the barbarous absurdities of the half-civilized race he was only learning to govern. In the course of comparatively a few years the privileges of the Kulin Brahmins would have fallen into contempt and desuetude, but now an importance has been given to them which is calculated to revive and strengthen them. The best social legislator is the Press. It would not have been difficult to have induced both Hindoo and Mahomedan journalists to show up the monstrous evils arising rather from the unbridled and undomestic polygamy of the Kulin Brahmins, than from the inability of their widows to marry a second time. Unfortunately, the Indian Government has at all times neglected and slighted the Press, instead of employing its insinuating and ubiquitous faculties. Even now, and perhaps especially now, great service might be rendered by a native press, inspired and directed by Europeans possessed of Indian experience. The Press is the natural exponent as well as the forerunner of the Legislature. Its duty is to prepare the people to welcome amendments, which otherwise might be misunderstood and rejected. Had this been done in our Eastern dominions during the last twenty years, there would have been less misconception of the views of the Government, and possibly the present insurrection might have been averted.

ADMINISTRATION OF MYSORE.

It is not unfrequently objected that comparisons between the relative merits and advantages of native or British government are unfairly instituted in this respect, that it is usually after a period of monstrous misrule any particular district has come under our domination. In very many instances this has undoubtedly been the case; but a peculiarly favourable opportunity presents itself in the past and present condition of Mysore, for estimating the real benefits of British administration. Sixty years ago no part of India was more familiar to the English public than the hereditary dominions of Tippoo Sahib. On his accession to the throne, that powerful and warlike prince found himself master not only of Mysore proper, but also of Bellary, Cuddapah, Salem, Coimbatore, Northern Malabar, the Canaras, and part of the Southern Mahratta country. These extensive and important territories became at the absolute disposal of Lord Wellesley on the fall of Seringapatam and the death of the Sultan in 1799. With a magnanimity bordering on imprudence, that great statesman assigned to his allies districts proportioned rather to the power and grandeur of the British Crown than to their deserts. Among other recipients of his munificence was the infant representative of the ancient Rajahs of Mysore, who was taken out of prison and placed upon the throne of his ancestors. As the boy prince was only five years of age, a Regent was appointed in the person of Poorniah, a Brahmin, previously finance minister to Tippoo. The Resident was Colonel Barry Close, and the division was commanded by Colonel Arthur Wellesley. It is not surprising that under three such men, acting in perfect harmony, the country speedily attained a high degree of prosperity. As an Asiatic Chancellor of the Exchequer, Poorniah displayed no ordinary capacity. His ingenuity, at least, may be partially appreciated through the fact that, after our assumption of the administration, it was possible to abolish or reduce 769 taxes. His system, however, was so far successful, that he was enabled to pay with regularity the annual subsidy to the British Government, and at the same time to keep a handsome balance in the State treasury.

In the year 1812, the Regent resigned the control of public affairs to Maharaj Krishna Raj Wadyar, who ascended the musnud at the age of seventeen. To naturally good talents the young prince added the inestimable advantage of having been educated under the eye of such upright and able men as Close, Webbe, Wilks, and Malcolm. But however good might be his parts, his temperament was essentially Asiatic. He was sensual, indolent, and extravagant. The treasure heaped up through the financial system of Poorniah was squandered on unworthy favourites and disreputable pursuits. The subsidy to the British Government fell into arrears. The rich and powerful committed all kinds of outrage with impunity; the utterly indigent alone escaped oppression and spoliation, because nothing further could be wrung from their poverty. Everything was venal and corrupt. "No efficient control," says General Cubbon, "was exercised over the district officers; the highest offices were put up to sale; valuable lands were alienated to propitiate brahmins; new taxes and monopolies were invented, to be bestowed, like pensions, on pimps and parasites; the people, vexed and fretted by the swarm of petty rulers and monopolists, could obtain no redress; there was no security for property, and nothing that was fit to be called the administration of justice." To such a height did the insolence of their rulers attain, that the people at length broke out into open rebellion, which was only quelled by the British regiments whom the Rajah summoned to his aid. The interference of the Company, however, was further authorized by the direct terms of the treaty of 1799. Lord Bentinck accordingly addressed a letter to the Rajah, enumerating the good offices his Highness had received from the British Government and the evil returns he had made for them. The subsidy had fallen into arrears; the troops justly murmured for their pay, and in the mean time were quartered upon the impoverished ryots; unparalleled cruelties were inflicted by his Highness' officers upon the insurgents; all things were tending to general anarchy and confusion. Under these circumstances no alternative remained but to act upon the treaty of 1799, and assume the direct administration of his Highness's territories. A commission was accordingly appointed, with a native agency; but it was soon found expedient to abolish the latter, and to vest the entire authority in one sole Commissioner. From that period—the year 1831—the country and people of Mysore have gradually been raised to a degree of prosperity which would have been deemed fabulous even under the exceptional administration of Poorniah. The system of that celebrated financialist was, indeed, adopted as a general outline, but its details were liberalized, and its working carefully superintended. The land-tax was considerably lowered, and its payment rendered easy by dividing it into five instalments, payable at seasons of the year most convenient to the ryots themselves. The consequence has been that money-lenders and usurers no longer fatten upon their necessities, nor are they subjected to vexatious inspections of their lands and crops. The revenue is now collected without difficulty, and defaulters are both rare and insignificant. Justice is everywhere dispensed without regard to persons. Agriculture has been encouraged, and trade promoted, by the abolition of the transit duties, and the remission or reduction of 769 items of taxation. In the absence of water-carriage, the attention of the Commissioner has been directed to the construction of roads, and of easy passes over the mountains that inclose this country. The numerous nullahs, or ravines, which become raging torrents after a fall of rain, have been spanned by bridges, and large drains formed for carrying off the superfluous waters. Among the natural productions of Mysore, precedence must be given to sandal-wood and the betel-nut, both of which are famous throughout India. Coffee, also, is cultivated with increasing success. In the Rajah's time it was so little thought of, that its cultivation was granted as a monopoly to a European firm at Madras. The small quantity then grown was "sent down to Mangalore, shifted into Arabian bags, and forwarded to England as the genuine produce of Mocha." In 1831, the annual produce of the coffee-plantations was valued at 427*l.*, which had increased to upwards of 5,000*l.* by the end of 1853. The Mysore wool is also highly esteemed, and sanguine hopes are entertained that cotton likewise will become a staple article of trade. The population, which previous to 1831 was estimated at 2,171,754, was reckoned in 1851 at 3,426,458. Proportionately great was the increase of revenue. In 1831 it barely exceeded 439,000*l.*, but in 1853 it was upwards of 820,000*l.* The Mysore state has thus been freed from the heavy debt with which it was previously saddled; his Highness the Rajah has received an annual allowance of 120,000*l.* for the indulgence of his vicious tastes and appetites; the rates of taxation have been reduced, and every man taught to respect his neighbour's rights and property, and enabled freely to enjoy his own.

Of the frivolous and vexatious character of Poorniah's system of finance some idea may be formed by selecting a few of the articles liable to taxation. We should, perhaps, mention in the first instance that the total amount of revenue derived from the 769 taxes since abolished, or reduced, was very little over 107,000*l.* There is something even laughable in the result of certain individual taxes. Thus, the duty levied upon creepers used for fastening the rafters of the roofs of huts yielded exactly 2*d.* per annum; that upon ploughs in one or two villages brought in 8*d.*; reeds, used for pens and fireworks, produced 12*d.*; rushes eaten by elephants enriched the public treasury to the extent of 5*d.*; the stalks and heads of Indian corn were good for 1*d.*; chairs gave 7*d.*; from a certain green root used for pickles was obtained 1*d.*; and finally, from a bulbous plant was extracted not only medicine, but the annual sum of half a farthing. Almost every natural production was taxed. Trees, shrubs, grasses, bulbs, fruits of all kinds, drugs, metals, perfumes, pickles, artisans' tools, trades, religious ceremonies, domestic festivals, were all turned to account. Nothing was omitted, or deemed unworthy of the tax-gatherer's attention. We take at random a few of the items:—

"Turi Bunjur: the assessment on waste wet lands forced upon the ryots but left uncultivated. Wooruntia Tyfrik: the forced contributions levied upon a village, to make up the balances due by defaulters and deceased inhabitants. Cuddayah: the forcing grain upon the ryots at an unfair valuation. Checkra Pannay: the tax collected by contributions from the villages on account of lands originally given in certain villages to the inferior village hereditary officers, for the cultivation of chillies and onions, and continued after those lands had been resumed. Kaylkay Bedecay: the practice of village renters making up their losses in some villages by begging, the profits of which were subsequently appropriated by the Government and made a permanent item of revenue. Gudday Hooloo Hanna: the tax exacted from ryots for nominally, not really, grazing the margins of paddy [rice] fields in some villages. Jooney Cowbena Hassan: the duty upon the sale of old wooden materials. Puttravalee Pana Hassan: the duty upon the leaves of trees used as plates for eating rice. Cuddy Hassan: the duty upon grass brooms. Pootanee Hassil: the duty upon fried pulses. Pattur Hassil: the duty upon stones used in foundations. Shady Hassil: the tax upon marriage among certain castes. Koodakey Hassil: the tax upon concubines. Ravno Guber Hassil: the duty upon dried cowdung. Eeral Hoola Hassil: the duty upon the winged white ants, when collected and sold for food. Chaitry Sooryapunnada Hassil: the duty upon umbrellas. Hant Haly: the duty upon persons who passed a particular Cattan in the Nuggur division swinging their arms (5l. 3s. per annum). Punchai Jat Menium: taxes upon goldsmiths, ironsmiths, stonecutters, braziers, and carpenters, on occasions of marriage, concubinage, incontinency, childbirth, sale of unclaimed females, offences against caste, domestic ceremonies, deaths, and occupation of newly-built houses. Bhunda Davara Kanibay: the contract for a tax (yielding annually 7l. 4s. 3d.) levied on a class of Sudras, on account of their practice of amputating the first joint of a finger in sacrifice to the Hindoo deity Bhundy Davara, to secure prosperity."

These few examples may suffice to illustrate Poorniah's financial ingenuity, and to inspire the most prejudiced with a slight suspicion that perhaps, after all, the natives of India have no great reason to regret their ancient rulers. And when we remember that the most refined tortures were contrived for the benefit of defaulters, it is appalling to think of the amount of misery that must have been endured by the wretched peasants. The ryots, at least, may well pray for the success of the British arms, and the speedy suppression of all attempts to recover their ancient "liberty."

EAST-INDIA HOUSE.

A Quarterly General Court of the East-India Company was held on the 23rd September, 1857, at their house in Leadenhall-street. Mr. R. D. Mangles, M.P., chairman of the Court of Directors, in the chair.

The minutes of the last quarterly court were read.

The secretary read the heads of papers which had been laid before Parliament since the last court, and copies of which have been laid before the proprietors in accordance with the Act.

An account of superannuations granted since the last court-day was also laid before the proprietors.

MUTINY IN INDIA:—THE RELIEF FUND.

Mr. Dent.—Sir, as a member of the committee for collecting a fund for the relief of the sufferers from the mutiny now raging in India, I beg to be allowed to ask whether it is the intention of the Court of Directors, on the part of the East-India Company, to contribute to that fund or not? The absence of the names of the directors from the subscription lists has been the subject of general remark, and those who are concerned in the collection of the fund cannot very well comprehend the reason.

Mr. Lewin.—I don't think the honourable proprietor has any right to ask the Court of Directors to subscribe to the fund, because it is a most important question whether the Company are not bound to pay the whole of the losses sustained by the people in India. (Hear, hear.) It is the duty of every Government to protect its subjects, and not to allow them to be overrun by mutinous troops. According to the law of common sense, therefore, if they do not afford the people this protection they are responsible for the injury that may be inflicted. My impression is that the East-India Government are bound to make good all the losses which have been sustained in this sad outbreak.

The Chairman.—In answer to the hon. proprietor, Mr. Dent, I beg to say that the Court of Directors had not yet come to any definite decision on the subject; and in reply to the observations of the hon. proprietor (Mr. Lewin), I would observe that the question is one of the utmost importance, and has arisen from circumstances in reference to which the history of the world forms no parallel. It is a question which must be referred to the law of nations. There are but few precedents by which we can be guided. It is true a somewhat similar case occurred in the north of England in 1745, which it would be the duty of the Court to consider; but it must be admitted that the present is a case respecting which it cannot be determined off hand as to what course should or should not be taken. What the Court has done in the matter is this:—they have written to the Government of India with instructions to take care that nobody should be allowed to perish from want, and that no case of destitution within their reach should be allowed to pass unprovided for. This assistance is not to be confined to the servants of the Company only, but is to be extended to all classes that have suffered. The Court of Directors have also intimated to their own covenanted servants to consider that the widows and orphans of the officers who have been killed in this frightful mutiny will be entitled to the same compassionate allowance as is granted to the widows and orphans of those who fall in the field.

Mr. Dent.—I wish to say one word in explanation. I regret to find that there should be any delay in a matter of this kind. I may mention as a fact that, as soon as it was intimated to her Majesty that such a relief fund was being raised, the committee received an answer by telegraph from Balmoral, stating that her Majesty and the Prince Consort would subscribe. In the present case the delay appears to arise from the necessity of a reference to a higher authority; but in this instance no difference of opinion could possibly arise between the Court of Directors and the authorities in Cannon-row. An answer may be telegraphed in a few minutes from that quarter. As to precedents, there are many. I may instance the French inundations and the Irish famine, when the subscriptions were prompt; and surely the dreadful calamities resulting from the Indian mutinies require no consideration as to the absolute necessity of affording instant relief; and I deeply regret that the Court of Directors make no sign. I beg to ask whether there would be any objection to lay before the public a copy of the despatch sent by the Court of Directors to India on this subject.

The Chairman.—I can give no other answer to the first question of the hon. proprietor than what I have already given; but as to the second question, I beg to say that I have no objection to lay a copy of the despatch before the court.

Mr. Jones.—I wish to make one observation, and that is, I hope the Court of Directors will cease from their annual feasting during the present year. The funds annually expended for those feasts amount to between 3,000*l.* and 4,000*l.* in dinners alone. That sum should be immediately appropriated to the purposes to which the hon. proprietor has referred. That might be done irrespective of your searching for precedents, or of your entertaining the larger question, involving great national considerations. Any feasting by the court would, during this calamitous season, be very unseemly; and by abstaining from your feasting for the next five years you would be enabled to appropriate 25,000*l.* to the relief of the sufferers in India.

The Chairman.—I consider the hon. proprietor is not entitled, either from what has taken place in the past, or what may prospectively take place, to say that such and such a course would or would not be unseemly, seeing that the Court of Directors have had no dinner during this year.

Mr. Lewis.—I think the subject need not be pursued any further, as experience justifies us in entertaining no doubt that the court will act with the utmost propriety under the unfortunate circumstances at present existing in India.

Dr. Beattie thought the view taken by the chairman was the proper one. The present extremity required immediate relief by individual private contributions. Hereafter the question of making good, and repaying all damage and loss sustained by each and all the well-affected subjects of the state, would require to be considered. He believed it to be the duty of the Indian Government to give pecuniary compensation for all losses; it was a recognised axiom that for the necessity which usurpation creates the usurper is always held responsible; and in the present case the natives of India ought to bear the burden. When the present disturbance had passed away, a commission ought to be formed, as was done after the French Revolution, to inquire into the losses sustained by all parties, and full compensation ought to be granted.

The Chairman.—That was in the case of a foreign power.

Dr. Beattie.—The precedent is not the less apposite on that account, nor will the means be wanting. He thought the whole native pension list ought to be wiped away, and he was prepared with a motion bearing on this subject, with the view of ascertaining what amount is paid annually to native princes, and the native civil and military pensioners throughout the Bengal and North-West presidencies. He thought also that this would be the fitting time to consider the propriety of abolishing the permanent settlement of Bengal, whereby a large increased amount of income would be fairly derived.

Mr. Lewin.—I rise to order. There is a notice of motion on the paper which has precedence of the motion of the hon. proprietor.

Dr. Beattie having resumed his seat,

The Chairman said:—One word with regard to the despatch I have promised to lay before the Court. I am anxious to take care that no advantage should be taken of it and no use be made of it by which the channel of private charity may be dammed up. There is no question that the losses have been sufficiently great to afford abundant room for private benevolence to display itself in beyond whatever the Government may be able to do. I hope, therefore, that no use will be made of the despatch so as to make it an excuse for anybody to say, "What use is our raising private subscriptions?" It is impossible that Government can meet all cases. I cannot conceive a nobler opportunity for individual munificence and charity than that presented by the calamities which we all deplore. (Hear, hear.)

THE REPRESENTATION OF INDIA.

The Chairman then called upon Mr. Jones to bring forward his motion on the subject of the representation of the people of India in this country.

Mr. Brown.—I hope, before the hon. proprietor proceeds to address the Court, he will allow me to make an appeal to him. I have seen the motion of the hon. proprietor advertised; and I, for one, do think it is taking the Court by surprise. I hope, under the circumstances of the case, the hon. proprietor will re-consider the propriety of bringing forward a motion which I do strongly feel is most uncalled for, and most unnecessary. I put it to him whether he will not see the propriety of waiving his motion, and any discussion upon it.

Mr. Jones.—Have you done? If so, I will proceed.

Mr. Brown.—I move, sir, that this Court do now adjourn.

The Chairman.—I should be sorry that my hon. friend should press his motion for an adjournment; but, at the same time, the hon. proprietor (Mr. Jones) must be aware that in the middle of his speech any hon. member may notice that there is not a sufficient attendance of members to constitute a Court.

Mr. Brown.—I know I have that right, and I shall certainly exercise it.

Mr. Jones.—I am quite prepared for all such interruptions. I am a constant attendant here. There has not been one day since I have been a proprietor on which I have not been present; present, not for making any personal display, but from the solicitude I felt first of all to make myself as well acquainted as opportunity would allow me with the whole process of Indian politics, and in the next place to express my opinions upon them. I know I receive very little attention from the great body of the proprietors, and I am always thankful to the few members who listen to what I have to say. I may, I think, be allowed, without any flattery to myself, to say, that I have never said or done anything which has thrown obstruction, or any impediment, in the way of the progress of good government in India. Whatever I have said has been from a sincere desire to do good to the people of India. I know that, even at this moment of anxious expectation on the part of the people of England, who are eagerly looking forward to the result of our deliberations, it is in the power of any hon. proprietor to dissolve the Court. I know that on a former occasion an hon. director, when I brought forward a motion, did the same thing; but I know, also, that on a subsequent occasion I was allowed to proceed with that very motion. And if the hon. proprietor imagines that he will by counting out this Court prevent my bringing on the subject, I beg to undeceive him; and I tell him, that no other motion shall ever be discussed in this Court until I have had the privilege of saying what I seek to say now. Therefore, he by stopping me will stop the whole business of the Court. (Hear, hear.) My motion is:—

"That it is due to the advancing intelligence of the people of India that a deputy from each university be maintained at the public expense in this country, with a view to inform the proprietors as to the complaints and wishes of the people of India."

Such is the substance of my motion, and I believe this is an opportune time for bringing it forward. It is true there is a revolt in one part of India, but have we not two other portions of India favourable to us? And it is by bringing forward such a motion as that which I now propose, that we may hope to cement still more closely the combination that exists between England and those provinces not in insurrection. It would be showing the people of India that at least there are some who are ready to advocate their cause, and to plead for their existence as a nation. East-India proprietors may not assemble at this court in large numbers; they may allow any one of their body on some pretence or other to dissolve the Court,—and even Government itself may not be able to collect together in Parliament a sufficient number of members to hear a discussion on Indian finances; while it is well known that when the Sattara question was mooted in this Court, the people of England generally took no part in it. But what is the case now? However supine may be the members of this Court, far different is the feeling now pervading the minds of the people. All is changed. The press is full of intelligence from India; comments are proceeding from all quarters; India at last has gained attention. She no longer remonstrates and petitions; the groans of our slaughtered countrymen and the shrieks of our ravished wives and daughters—these are the reproaches at length cast upon the indifference of the proprietors of this Court and the indifference of the people of England at large. But this is no thunderbolt that has fallen without premonition. Men of intelligence and wisdom have long endeavoured to impress upon the Indian Government their obligations to the people of India. They have been able to foresee coming events, and have foretold that a day would arrive when rebellion would check the aggressive policy that has been so long pursued. Annexation, no doubt, has been the whole cause of this outbreak. It has been the explosive matter which during a long period of time has been collected together, till at last in the case of Oude it has burst into a flame and set on fire the whole extent of Bengal. Annexation is not merely the deposition of a king; but it is the dislocation of all the relations of Indian society. Annexation is the driving away from the court of the king the sons of the nobility; it is the reduction of the feudal nobleman into a country gentleman; it is the disbanding of his retainers; it is the reducing him to a cipher who at one time was semi-royal; it destroys the local tradesmen, who no longer receive the royal patronage, for annexation has caused the total dissolution of the royal household. All these things have been done away by annexation; Europeans have supplanted the natives, and there is no longer encouragement given to local trade. True, we may yet introduce a better system of government; it is possible we may be able to do so, but during the progress a whole generation must pass away, and meanwhile a spirit of discontent and bitter enmity must prevail against us. Annexation, I do not doubt, was the real cause of the flagrant outrage upon human nature committed by Nena Sahib, one of the principal leaders of these mutinies. But has he not some cause for rebellion? Nothing in heaven, on earth, or in hell could justify his conduct; but still there is something to be found in the fact that we unjustly deprived him of his hereditary right as the son of the prime minister of Sattara.

The Chairman.—No! no!

Mr. Brown.—I now must move that the Court be counted.

The Chairman then counted the number of proprietors present, and there being only 17, and 20 being required to constitute a quorum, the Court was declared to be adjourned.

Mr. Lewin said it was his intention to submit the following resolution to the next quarterly Court:

"That it is expedient that this Court do reconsider the grounds on which they granted a pension of 5,000*l.* per annum to the Marquis of Dalhousie, and inquire whether the insurrection which now rages in India and the present loss of our Indian empire are not mainly owing to the measures of the Marquis of Dalhousie, on account of which they granted the pension."

GENERAL TUCKER AND THE BENGAL MILITARY SECRETARY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

SIR,—In a letter addressed to you by Major-General H. T. Tucker, formerly Adjutant-General of the Bengal Army, is the following passage:—

"If the recommendation addressed by me, under the authority of the then Commander-in-Chief, to the Government of India in 1853 had not been most culpably disregarded, the existing disaffection among the native troops would never have arisen—not, at least, as connected with the greasing of cartridges; for in that year, when some rifle ammunition was sent out to India from this country (England), and certain experiments in connection with it were ordered, occasion was taken in my office to recommend to the Government that 'in the greasing composition nothing should be used which could possibly offend the caste or religious prejudices of the natives.' That recommendation was addressed, under my signature as Adjutant-General, to the Military Secretary of the Government; it must, obviously, have been entirely disregarded. I do not presume to say with whom specifically the blame of this most culpable neglect may rest, only investigation can settle that point; but I conceive that either the Military Secretary or the officer presiding in chief over the Ordnance Department in Calcutta is—one or both—the party implicated."

And again—

"A search in the Military Secretary's office will, without doubt, bring to light the neglected recommendation of the late Commander-in-Chief to the effect above stated."

In reply to these statements I will first dispose of the case of the Inspector-General of Ordnance, on whom part of the imputed blame has fallen. That officer was appointed in May, 1855, his office having then only been created on the abolition of the Military Board. Consequently the letter written by the Adjutant-General in 1853 could not have been neglected by the "officer presiding-in-chief over the Ordnance Department in Calcutta."

Secondly, with regard to the blame imputed to me as Military Secretary to Government. The fact is, that no such letter as that described by Major-General Tucker was addressed by him to the Military Secretary, and no such document is to be found in the office of the Military Department.

With some trouble I have discovered among the records of the defunct Military Board, now deposited in the office of the Inspector-General of Ordnance, a letter which I conclude to be the one to which Major-General Tucker alludes. It is dated the 17th of November, 1853, and is addressed "To the Officiating Secretary to the Military Board." It contains the following passage:—

"I am, however, at the same time to communicate the Commander-in-Chief's opinion that unless it be known that the grease employed in these cartridges is not of a nature to offend or interfere with the prejudices of caste, it will be expedient not to issue them for test to native corps, but to European soldiers only, to be carried in pouch."

Having thus shown the statements of Major-General Tucker in regard to myself to be entirely untrue, I have in conclusion to explain what the experiment was to which the cartridges sent out from England were subjected, and which that officer has wantonly confounded with the Enfield rifle cartridges made some time subsequently, and none of which have been issued in the greased state to the native troops.

In November, 1853, the Court of Directors first informed the Government of India of the despatch of a supply of greased cartridges, which the Board of Ordnance desired to have subjected to the test of climate.

The cartridges were greased in four ways—with common grease, laboratory grease, Belgian grease, and Hoffmann's grease, and in each there was an admixture of creosote and tobacco.

One set of the cartridges was to be tested by being placed in the Ordnance magazines, a second by being placed in waggons, and a third by being carried in pouch, in bundles.

The cartridges were not received till June, 1854, and they were under trial from that time till May, 1855, at the arsenal in Fort William, at Cawnpore, and at Rangoon; and they were sent back to England, with reports on the result of the experiment, in July, 1855.

Yours,

R. J. H. BIRCH, Colonel, Secretary to the Government of India in the Military Department.

Calcutta, Aug. 8.

INDIAN RELIEF FUND.

THE MANSION-HOUSE COMMITTEE.

At a meeting of the committee, held at the Mansion House on the 25th September, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:—

1. The object of this committee is to relieve, as far as may be practicable and necessary, the distress caused by the mutinies in India.

2. In so doing, care should be taken not to supersede the assistance which ought to be given by the Government, by the established widows' and orphans' funds, or by the relations of the sufferers, but to supplement it to the extent to which it falls short of a just measure of relief.

3. Compensation for losses as such will in no case be given.

4. Subject to the preceding conditions, the efforts of the committee will be specially directed:—

First—To enable the sufferers to live with frugality in their respective states of life until other means of subsistence are available.

Second—To provide for the maintenance and education of children in cases in which it has been interrupted or prevented by casualties arising out of the mutiny, and in which it cannot be provided for from other sources.

Third—To assist the sufferers to come to this country or to go to India, when the circumstances render it proper that they should do so, and the means of paying for their passage cannot be obtained from any other source.

Fourth—To afford reasonable aid, by loan or otherwise, to officers and others who have lost their equipments, furniture, or other property, by the necessity of sudden flight from their stations or the destruction of their dwellings, when, without such aid, they would be involved in pecuniary embarrassments.

Fifth—That relief according to these principles be given, without distinction of religion or nationality, to every person, of whatever rank, who has a just claim upon the sympathy and assistance of the British people.

H. B. HENDERSON, Lieut.-Colonel, Hon. Sec.

In a letter to the secretary of the Relief Fund at Calcutta the Lord Mayor states that the fund already amounts to 90,000*l*.

The Chairman and Directors of the East-India Company have appointed the Rev. William Garden Cowie, B.A. of Trinity College, Cambridge, and curate of Moulton, near Newmarket, to a chaplaincy in the Bengal presidency.

The India House have declined the offer of the fleet of the European and American Steam Company for transporting reinforcements to India in connection with the overland route, "as it is not at present the intention of her Majesty's Government to send any considerable body of troops through Egypt."

BRIGADIER-GENERAL HAVELock.—His Royal Highness the General Commanding-in-Chief has availed himself of the first opportunity presented to him of recognizing the services of Brigadier-General Havelock in punishing the mutineers. He has conferred upon him a good-service pension of 100*l*. a year.—United Service Gazette.

THE SULTAN AND THE INDIAN SUFFERERS.—We are happy to be able to announce that the Sublime Porte has instructed its Ambassador in London to forward to the Lord Mayor the sum of 1,000*l*. as his donation to the Fund for the Relief of the Sufferers by the Mutinies in India. The importance of this expression of sympathy from the acknowledged head of the Mahomedan religion will be at once perceived.

CARDINAL WISEMAN ON THE INDIAN MUTINIES.—On Sunday morning a pastoral letter from Cardinal Wiseman was read in all the Roman Catholic places of worship in the metropolis, on the subject of the Indian mutinies, directing that next Sunday be set apart by the Roman Catholic body as a day of humiliation and prayer, and that a collection should be then made for the objects specified.

THE RED SEA TELEGRAPH.—The Red Sea Telegraph Company have announced their inability to raise their proposed capital on the terms they had too hastily accepted. They state that they are prepared to undertake the task upon amended conditions, which they partly specify. These, however, seem still to be inadequate, since they contemplate a termination of the guarantee at the end of any two years after the net profits shall have amounted to 7½ per cent. Hence, if the communication should fail in the third year, there might be some danger of the shareholders losing the greater portion of their capital. It will be better to demand at once such guarantees as will render the subscription not merely probable, but certain.

"THE LONGEST WAY ROUND" TO INDIA.—It is true that Calcutta is 14,000 miles by the Cape and only 8,000 by Alexandria and Suez, and that passengers by the latter route require only half the time of those by the other. But there is a difference in such matters between a few scores of passengers and a large army. It is comparatively easy to transport a steamer's passengers across the isthmus in two or three omnibuses; but it is a very different thing to convey a whole army, with its ammunition and other accompaniments, in a country where all manner of means and appliances, though perfect as to the usual number of passengers carried by the Oriental Company's steamers, do not admit of immediate or adequate extension. The means, in short, by which our Indian passengers are carried by the short route form a mere thread of civilization running through a wilderness, and are inapplicable to any other, and especially any larger purposes. Supposing the troops carried in and about the same time as the passengers to Alexandria and then from Suez to Calcutta, it is probable that the operations of disembarking them, marching them across the Desert, and then re-embarking them, would make the overland route longer in point of time, as it certainly is greater in point of cost and of difficulty, than the uninterrupted voyage by the Cape. But we are supposing several things which ought not to be supposed. We are supposing that the Government had at call a number of steamers proportionate in carrying power to the seventy-six transports that have been despatched as rapidly as the troops could be collected at the points of embarkation. And the theory requires the still larger supposition that such a crowd of steamers could be placed upon any route without a great amount of previous arrangement, such as the supplying of coaling stations. To all appearance and calculation, if the Government had waited till it was practicable to send the reinforcements by steam and the land route, not one-third of the forces now at sea, and the earliest of which are probably this week sighting Calcutta, would have been got away from our own shores. But a greater difficulty still in transporting armies by the overland route has to be encountered when the sea is again reached on the other side of the isthmus. Suppose it practicable to have procured a sufficiency of steamers to carry the troops from here to Alexandria, could we have expected to obtain in sufficient time a proportionate number to be waiting in the Red Sea? And even supposing there be no impossibility in that, the dangers of numerous and large vessels, with crews new to the navigation, traversing that sea, are self-manifest, and have received proof in the wreck of the two or three steamers sent that route with troops. It is much more than probable that an attempt to send any large proportion of the troops by the overland route would have only illustrated very signally the proverbial fallacy of "short cuts" in general, and the utter impracticability of this one in particular.—Scotman.

We understand that the Queen has been graciously pleased to command that Major-General Havelock shall be promoted to the honour of being a Knight Commander of the Bath, and that those other distinguished officers, Wilson, Neill, Chamberlain, Nicholson, and Van Cortlandt, shall be made Companions of the Order.—Globe.

TROOPS FOR INDIA.—SOUTHAMPTON, Monday.—The steamer Sultan, Captain Neil Cook, one of the Peninsular and Oriental Company's fleet, is to leave this port on Friday next for Alexandria, with two companies of the Royal Engineers, consisting of 250 men and 11 officers, who will proceed by the overland route to Bombay and Calcutta. The Euxine will, we believe, follow about a fortnight afterwards with another body of troops for the same destination. The European and American Company's steamship Calcutta, Captain Blackmore, having completed her fittings, &c. leaves to-morrow for Cork, where she is to embark the 51st regiment for India.

COMMUNICATION WITH INDIA.—The Peninsular and Oriental Steam Company are said to have sent out orders by the last overland mail to their agents for two of their large steamers, one from Bombay and one from Calcutta, to be despatched to Suez, so that they may be available at that port for the conveyance to India either of troops or passengers who may arrive by the overland route. The agents have also been authorized to send home by them, at reduced cost, any sufferers by the mutiny desirous to return. These vessels have been engaged in the transport of troops during the Persian war, and are capable of carrying 1,000 men each.

FRENCH SISTERS OF CHARITY IN INDIA.—The Courier de Lyons gives the following account of the dangers incurred by several French lay nuns in India during the late disturbances:—"The religious establishment of Jesus-et-Marie at Fourvière had several of its sisterhood imperilled at Meerut, Delhi, Sealcote, and Agra by the Indian insurrection. It is only by the last mail that intelligence has been received respecting them in letters written to their superior, which show that a portion of them, at least, have escaped. All these holy women were at the head of schools for young girls, English and native. Those who were at Meerut succeeded in escaping through the conflict, murders, and conflagration with a part of their pupils, some English ladies, and about fifty males, officers and civilians, to a valley in the mountains of Thibet, where they are, it appears, in tolerable security, for the party being well armed is strong enough to defend against the insurgents the defile leading to their asylum. The flight from Sealcote was marked by most dramatic incidents. The evening before the rising, some of the natives, through gratitude for the attention and kindness which the sisters had always shown to their children, came secretly to inform them they would do well to leave the place as promptly as possible with their pupils, as the insurrection was to commence the next morning at break of day, and the insurgents had resolved to kill every European. The sisters at once procured cars, and loaded them with their property and with their youngest pupils, whose weakness would have retarded their precipitate flight. Then, profiting by the shades of night, they left the town for a fort some leagues distant, where they hoped to find refuge. Unfortunately, whether it was that the warning given them was too late, or that the fugitives had not hurried on with sufficient rapidity, or that the natives had advanced the moment of the insurrection, the sisters were overtaken when about half way by a troop of the insurgents, who, on finding their convent abandoned, had pursued them. The poor sisters, on seeing this horde of miscreants approaching, abandoned their cars and baggage in the middle of the road to be pillaged, and hurried away to take refuge in an isolated house which stood near. But their pursuers soon surrounded the building, and, bursting in, murdered, in the presence of the poor sisters and the children, several English persons, women and men, who had also hurried to the house for safety. They then rushed at the sisters, and, with horrible imprecations, threatened to make them and their pupils share the same fate, if they did not at once declare where their property was to be found. The unfortunate women protested that they had nothing in the world but what they had left in the cars on the high road, and that they willingly gave up that property. As, however, other pillagers had already carried off whatever was precious from the cars, the insurgents in the house were about to execute their threat of killing every human being in the building, when a voice cried out that the public treasure had been found. They then rushed from the house to obtain their share in the booty, and the sisters, without losing a moment, placed the youngest children on their shoulders, and, taking the others by the hand, proceeded as rapidly as they could towards the fort, which they at last reached, and obtained a shelter in the midst of other fugitives of every age and condition. It is impossible to praise too highly the devotedness of these poor women, who risked without hesitation their own lives to save those of the children confided to their care."

REINFORCEMENTS FOR INDIA.—It appears, from a list published in Thacker's Overland News, that 17 vessels have already sailed for India since the news of the revolt first reached home, conveying to the assistance of our countrymen a force of 29,935 men of all ranks of cavalry, infantry, and artillery; and that a further force of 5,000 men of the cavalry, infantry, artillery, engineers, and field train, will embark almost immediately for the same destination. As the vessels which first left these shores have now been out close upon ninety days, we may calculate with some degree of certainty that, in addition to the 14,000 reinforcements already landed at Calcutta from China, the Cape, and Mauritius, relief from England will now be daily arriving, and that during next month a force of over 9,000 men will be landed and sent up the country, to be followed in November by nearly 18,000 men, and in the following month, December, by nearly 18,000 more, including the 5,000 now embarking; so that by the close of the year we shall have increased the British force in India by at least 48,000 well-seasoned and disciplined troops of every arm in the service.

HER MAJESTY'S 32ND REGIMENT IN LUCKNOW.—Five officers of this gallant regiment were promoted without purchase in the Gazette of Friday last; three of the number—Major Lowe, Captain M'Cabe, and Lieutenant Charlton—to vacancies caused by "killed in action,"—a sad but significant proof of the dangerous service in which the gallant fellows have been recently engaged. The 32nd constitutes the chief European force in the garrison of Lucknow, numbers about 600 rank and file, and is exceedingly short in its complement of officers. Nearly all the wives and families of the men and officers were sacrificed in the Cawnpore massacre, together with the poor invalid soldiers and pensioners; but there are, notwithstanding, upwards of 300 women and children, the helpless people under the protection of the garrison. Since the 27th of May, the day of the first outbreak, this heroic band, with their European companions, have been shut up within the walls of the Residency Fort, incessantly harassed by the fire of shot and shell coming from the well-served artillery of the 20,000 mutineers by whom they are invested. The casualties which have taken place are mainly owing to the sorties which the pressure of famine and absolute necessity render imperative. It was in one of these desperate sallies that the gallant and noble Sir Henry Lawrence received his mortal wound; and by the last mail it is reported his successor in the Political Residency, Major Banks, had shared a similar fate.—Express.

THACKER'S OVERLAND NEWS,

FOR INDIA AND THE COLONIES;

A fortnightly Summary of British and Foreign Intelligence, published on the 10th and 26th of each month, in time for despatch to India via Marseilles.

One uniform system is preserved throughout the Paper, and the information is so epitomized and arranged as to present a perfect and comprehensive view of the history of the fortnight, with special reference to those subjects most interesting to Anglo-Indians.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

THE CALCUTTA "ENGLISHMAN."

"Pains have been taken with the arrangement. It is evidently got up with a knowledge of what information Indian readers require, and will therefore, we expect, soon attain a considerable circulation."

THE CALCUTTA "DAILY NEWS."

"Fully bears out the assurance given in the prospectus that it should 'be all that the Overland Papers are, and something more.' We do not think that a single item of news or fact of interest which had transpired during the fortnight can possibly have been omitted, and the power of condensation displayed in this Paper is much beyond what we had expected."

"THE MOPUSSILITE."

"It is well written, and carefully compiled. It is not so diffuse in its information as the 'Home News,' and does not reprint long articles from the London journals; but it will probably not be the less acceptable on this account to a large portion of the public."

"BENGAL HURKARU."

"We gladly pronounce this first number an extremely good one, and we think the periodical is full of promise of something still better. The Editor has contrived to condense into a comparatively small space a vast quantity of miscellaneous information, of a character interesting to his readers here. This superior condensation of his materials is perhaps the leading character of the Newspaper,—and a very important one it is, especially for those Indian readers who may receive this one London Paper only."

Orders to be addressed to Messrs. W. THACKER and Co., 87, Newgate Street, London; Messrs. THACKER, SPINK, and Co., St. Andrew's Library, Calcutta; Messrs. THACKER and Co., St. Andrew's Library, Bombay; and Mr. JAMES HILL, Lucknow.

Allen's Maps of India & China.

MAP OF INDIA;

Showing the British Territories subdivided into Collectorate, and the position and boundary of each Native State; chiefly compiled from Trigonometrical Surveys, executed by order of the Honourable Court of Directors of the East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 6 in. high; 5 ft. 6 in. wide. £2; or on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £2. 2s.

The object kept in view in compiling this Map has been to render it available to the greatest possible extent for popular use. For this purpose the names of all stations, civil and military, are inserted, as well as those of all towns and places of note likely to be looked for. To make clear the subdivisions of the whole of the country, both British and native, the limits of the various districts and collectorates, with their names, are distinctly indicated. The railways are laid down, and the trunk roads conspicuously coloured. The newly-acquired district in Burmah is included. To avoid, however, the confusion consequent upon over-crowding, and make the Map clear and easy for reference, the names of many small villages, and places of no present importance, have been omitted, and thus a very wide measure of comprehensiveness has been attained, while needless diffusiveness has been avoided.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE tide has at length turned, and, we may fairly hope, will now flow on in one continued flood of victory and success. The heroic garrison at Lucknow not only held its own up to the 2nd of September, but had actually improved its position. Though he failed to relieve the place, General Havelock succeeded, by his gallant advance, in drawing off the main body of the enemy, and the garrison took advantage of the opportunity to sally forth and secure many head of cattle. A determined assault made by a thousand fanatics had been as resolutely repulsed; and, on another occasion, at least one hundred of the besiegers were blown into the air by a counter-mine, and their two heaviest breaching guns had been disabled. There is no longer any reason to doubt that the devoted little band will be able to maintain their ground until the arrival of the army of liberation. That force was still resting on its arms at Cawnpore, awaiting the reinforcements under Sir James Outram. It had not been idle, however. On the 16th of August, General Havelock marched out with 1,300 men and 14 guns, and drove the mutineers from a strong position they occupied near Bithoor. The enemy lost about 250 men in killed and wounded, and two guns. The British loss was only fourteen men killed and thirty wounded; and it is said that it might have been still less had the General displayed as much strategy as he did of headlong valour. The result of this victory was a harassing retrograde movement upon Cawnpore, which the column reached on the 20th, their ranks daily thinned by cholera. General Outram was known to be at Allahabad on the 1st September, with 1,300 men of H.M.'s 5th Fusiliers and the 70th, and was expected to be at Cawnpore by the 11th, when the united forces would instantly cross the river and advance to the relief of Lucknow. With the characteristic magnanimity of the "Bayard of the East," Sir James had waived his claim to the command, and intimated his intention of accompanying General Havelock in his civil capacity alone, as Chief Commissioner of Oude, merely tendering his military services in any way they could be rendered most useful.

Kowur Singh, the rebel chief of Jugdees pore, was still at large, but driven to extremities; and as £1,000 reward had been offered for his apprehension, his principal chance of escape from retributive justice was reduced to suicide. Not satisfied with releasing Mr. Wake and his brave associates at Arrah, Major Eyre had pushed on to the rajah's stronghold, which he captured after some resistance, and gave up to plunder. He then took measures for sweeping the grand trunk road clear of the insurgent bands, and speedily restored direct communication with Calcutta. It is supposed that the mutineers were making their way to Delhi through Banda, which is described to be in a state of utter confusion.

The news from Delhi itself is all that could be reasonably desired. The junction of Brigadier Nicholson's column had enabled the British commander to commence offensive operations. A large force of the enemy, with a numerous park of artillery, having marched out in the direction of Soneput, with a view to intercept the siege train from the Punjab, Brigadier Nicholson was detached to oppose them with 2,000 men and sixteen guns. With the loss of only eight men killed and twelve wounded on our side, the enemy was signally discomfited, and thirteen guns captured, including one twenty-four and two twelve-pounder howitzers. It is to be regretted, however, that this brilliant success has been purchased by the deaths of Lieut. Lumsden, 68th N.I., and Lieut. Gabbett, H.M.'s 61st; Lieut. Elkington, H.M.'s 61st, and Dr. Ireland were dangerously wounded. The whole of the guns of Mackenzie's troop and Kirby's and De Teissier's batteries have been now recovered. An expedition into Rohilcund, under Lieut. Hodson, had likewise been very successful, and eighty of the insurgents had been put to the sword. On the arrival of the siege train, and of the Cashmerian auxiliary corps furnished by Rundbeer Singh, a decisive assault will probably be made upon the doomed city, and a terrible chastisement inflicted on our treacherous foe.

Up to the 27th of August all was quiet at Agra. On the 21st, a detachment of the garrison under Major G. J. Montgomery, consisting of 150 men of the 3rd European Fusiliers, 3 guns, and 30 mounted militia, was sent out to clear the neighbourhood of Hattrass. The enemy learning their approach, advanced from Allyghur to meet them, but were attacked and defeated after a series of close encounters. Lieutenant Marsh, of the 16th Grenadiers, and Mr. J. O'B. Tandy, late manager of the North-western Bank at Calcutta—both of them volunteers—were killed, with three others, and about 25 men were wounded. Of the mutineers upwards of 300, dead and dying, strewed the ground. Major Montgomery, after pursuing the fugitives a short distance, fell back upon Hattrass.

The Punjab may still be described as tranquil, though a few isolated cases of tumult have occurred. At Peshawur the 51st made an attempt to seize the arms of one of the newly-raised Sikh corps, while the men were at dinner, but were speedily repulsed. They then broke and dispersed themselves over the country, but were being cut down and destroyed by the villagers. Again, at Ferozepore, some troopers of the disarmed 10th Light Cavalry made a rush at Captain Woodcock's battery, after murdering Mr. Nelson, the veterinary surgeon, but were gallantly routed by a party of Bombay Fusiliers, under their non-commissioned officers.

In Lower Bengal, things were assuming a more encouraging aspect, though much dissatisfaction is expressed at the supersession of the military authorities by the civil. It is justly considered too soon to talk of clemency while large bodies of mutineers are opposing us at all points with arms and murder. Nor is this a proper time to offer any affront to those upon whose heroic exertions depend not only the personal safety of these merciful-minded civilians, but the very existence of our Indian empire. The selection of two Mahomedan gentlemen as assistants to the Lieutenant-Governor of the Central Provinces—such is the title of Mr. John Peter Grant—has also created a natural feeling of impatience and disgust, as it certainly wears the appearance of striving to conciliate, where true policy demands a sterner course of action. In Calcutta itself tranquillity has been restored, and it was expected that the Commander-in-Chief would leave for the North-West about the middle of the present month. Lord Elgin returned to China in the early part of September, but in the absence of the China mail, we cannot give any particulars of the doings in the Celestial Empire. The account of the money-market at Calcutta is less favourable than heretofore. Owing to the injudicious management of the Bank of Bengal, there were not sufficient funds in hand to carry on the legitimate business of the institution. Not less than 72 per cent. of its capital is said to be tied up in Company's paper, the consequence being, that the directors have been compelled to refuse to renew loans upon such security to the local banks and mercantile firms. They have also declined to discount Court of Directors' bills having more than sixty days to run, which—with the sanction of Government—have consequently been paid under discount by at least two Calcutta banks. Company's Five per cent. paper has fallen to 12 per cent. discount, and the Four per cents. to 24 to 27 per cent.; and even at these rates very little business has been done.

The accounts from the Bombay Presidency are of a negative character. There have been no actual mutinies or massacres, but the native mind is represented as being in an unsettled and unsatisfactory state, ready for revolt, but afraid to commence. The expected arrival of the Cape troops will probably convince the disaffected that their wisest course is to submit to the imaginary evils they can endure with grumbling, rather than subject themselves to certain and substantial suffering as the reward of a few weeks' freedom from control. Sir Henry Lecke, the much-respected Commander-in-Chief of the Indian navy, has left the Presidency on the expiration of his term of service, attended by the kindly wishes of the entire European community.

Madras remains tranquil. The affair of the 8th Light Cavalry appears to have been somewhat exaggerated. The dismounted troopers are now doing duty at Arcot.

The Persian expedition has been broken up, and the last detachments will shortly evacuate Bushire, to the unfeigned regret of the inhabitants, who fully appreciate the value of British rupees. The Persian forces were withdrawn from Herat on the 27th July.

AN AFGHAN OPINION OF THE MUTINY.—A Persian the other day asked an Afghan his opinion of the rebellion, and whether he thought the Afghans would join the rebels. The latter spat upon the ground, and said that he considered the mutineers in the light of dogs, and not men; and that the Afghans would as soon cut their own throats as disgrace themselves by such a union. He alluded with pride to the war in Afghanistan, and asked if women and children were murdered there. The Afghans, he said, loved open warfare, and fought with men; not like those cowards, who ate the British Government's salt, and turned upon their protectors.

BENGAL.

THE MUTINY.

ARRAH.—From Major Eyre, Bengal artillery, commanding field force, for the information of the officer commanding at Dinapore:—

Camp near Arrah, August 3, 1857.

Sir,—I have much pleasure in reporting, for the information of the officer commanding the Dinapore division, the safe arrival here of the field force under my command, and the relief of the party defending themselves at Arrah, with whom I have just opened a satisfactory communication, and have received your letter dated 31st ultimo, from which I exceedingly regret to learn the severe loss sustained by the detachment co-operating with us on the Dinapore side; but I venture to affirm confidently that no such disaster would have been likely to occur had that detachment advanced less precipitately; so as to have given full time for my force to approach direct from the opposite side, for the rebels would then have been hemmed in between the two opposing forces, and must have been utterly routed.

2. My former letters of the 30th ultimo and 1st instant will, I hope, have informed you of my advance from Buxar on the evening of the first-named date. We pushed on with all practicable speed to Shawpore, distant twenty-eight miles, where rumours of the Dinapore disaster reached us. Hearing that the enemy designed to destroy the bridges en route, we again pushed on, at two p.m., as far as Bullowtee, where we found the bridge first cut through: an hour's halt sufficed to repair it, which we employed also in burning the villages on either side, since we had caught their inhabitants in the act of destruction. Arriving at Goojerajunge by nightfall, I was delighted to find the bridge entire; here we bivouacked for the night, and at daybreak next morning resumed our march; but had only proceeded about a mile beyond Goojerajunge when we discovered the enemy in great force in possession of the woods to our front and flanks. The road by which we had to reach the wood in our front was bounded by inundated paddy-fields on either side. I halted to observe the best course to pursue, and finding that the enemy were weakening their front to take us on both flanks, I boldly pushed forward, throwing out skirmishers in every direction. The Enfield rifles kept our foes at a distance, and we succeeded in forcing the wood, beyond which, as far as Beebeegunge, it lay across an open swamp, which greatly befriended us. Meanwhile, the baffled enemy were observed hurrying round to oppose us at Beebeegunge, which is situated on the opposite side of a bridge, by which we had hoped to cross the river. Here I again halted to refresh the troops and to reconnoitre.

Finding the bridge had been destroyed, extensive earthen breastworks raised on the other side flanking the bridge, and the madhous regiments in force occupying the houses in the village, I determined on making a detour to the right as far as the railway earthworks, about a mile off. I masked this movement for a time by the fire of my guns, but no sooner did the enemy discover our purpose than they hurried with their entire strength to intercept us at a wood which it was necessary for us to pass; a portion of them followed us up in the rear, and by the time we reached the wood we found quite as much on our hands as we could manage.

They mustered some 2,000 to 2,500 strong in sepoys alone, besides Rajah Coer Singh's irregular forces, of whom, however, we made little account. The Rajah was apparently present in person, and for upwards of an hour we were compelled to act solely on the defensive. The sepoys, apparently emboldened by their recent success beyond Arrah, advanced to the assault with a vigour quite unexpected, and twice, with their bugles sounding, first the "assembly," then the "advance," and the "double," made determined rushes on the guns; but were on both occasions repulsed with showers of grape. Meanwhile, Capt. L'Estrange, with the gallant 5th, was not idle, as will be seen by his own report, hereto appended. Finding, at length, that the enemy grew emboldened by the superiority of their numbers and the advantage of their position, I determined on trying the effect of a general charge of the infantry, and sent Capt. the Hon. E. P. Hastings to Capt. L'Estrange with orders to that effect. Promptly and gallantly he obeyed the order; the skirmishers on the right turned their flank, the guns with grape and shrapnel drove in the centre, and the troops advancing on all sides drove the enemy, panic-struck, in all directions. Thus our road was cleared. All beyond the country was open, and we proceeded without further interruption to within four miles of Arrah, when we were suddenly brought up by an impassable river, and have since been employed in attempting to bridge it over. In this work the railway engineers, headed by Mr. Kelly, have rendered the most valuable aid. Meanwhile most of the rebels returned to Arrah; but precipitately left it during the night. Rajah Coer Singh accompanied them, to save his family. Their loss is reported to have been severe. We hear that not a sepoy now remains in Arrah, and that the mass have gone off towards Botas or scattered themselves in various directions.

Eleven a.m. The guns have just crossed safely.

3. I have now to commend to the notice of the major-general the gallant conduct of the officers and troops whom I have had the honour to command on this occasion. Under circumstances of great peril and difficulty they have exhibited those soldierly qualities which seldom fail to insure success. To Captains L'Estrange and Scott, of H.M.'s 5th Fusiliers, my special thanks are due for the prompt and gallant way in which they seconded my efforts, more particularly in the final charge which was executed against twenty times their number of brave and disciplined troops. Capt. L'Estrange reports highly of Ensigns Oldfield, Lewis, and Mason. To Capt. the Hon. E. P. Hastings, staff-officer of this force, much of the success of this expedition may be attributed, whether on the march or in action with the enemy. He was everywhere to be found at the right time and in the right place to aid us with his energy in overcoming all difficulties. Of the others who especially distinguished themselves I feel bound to make honourable mention of Messrs. Kelly, Barber, Burroughs, Nicholl, and Hughes, of the Buxar Gentlemen Volunteers, who rendered excellent service under their gallant leader Lieut. Jackson, 12th N.I. Assistant-Surgeon Eteson, in charge of the field hospital, and Staff-Sergeant Melville, of the 1st company, 5th battalion, artillery, also merit particular notice for their zeal and energy on duty.

4. My future movements must be guided in a great measure by the information I may receive from other quarters. Meanwhile, a good supply of ammunition is urgently required for H.M.'s 5th Fusiliers, to the extent of eighty rounds per man, and grape for two 9-pounders and howitzer.

Inclosed are the returns of the casualties on the 2nd instant.

I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant,

(Signed) V. EYRE, Major,

Commanding Field Force.

P.S.—Mr. Wake, the magistrate of Arrah, has just ridden into camp. His defence of his house seems to have been almost miraculous.

Near Arrah, August 3, 1857.

Sir,—I have the honour to report that, on the arrival of the detachment of 5th Fusiliers (160 men) under my command at Buxar, on the 30th ult., I found that our services were required to co-operate with Major Eyre, Bengal artillery, to march on Arrah, where we understood some two or three thousand of the mutineers had assembled, on the following evening, our force, consisting of three guns, 154 men, with Capt. Scott, Ensigns Lewis, Oldfield, and Mason, all of the 5th Fusiliers, under my command, and twelve mounted volunteers of the railway and engineering department; the whole, under the command of Major Eyre, left Buxar en route for Arrah.

We came on the enemy on the morning of the 2nd instant; we found that they had assembled in immense force, and the woods for miles around us seemed to be swarming with rebel sepoys. Major Eyre immediately fired some rounds of shell among the enemy who were in our front, and I sent a skirmishing party, under the command of Capt. Scott, to drive the rebels out of the woods. In consequence of an extensive swamp on the left of the road, our skirmishers were delayed for a short time, but at length reached the woods under a very heavy fire from the mutineers. Our skirmishers soon cleared the woods on the right and left of the road, during which time the right skirmishing party sustained a severe cross-fire, and three men of the 5th were wounded. Our whole force then gained the open country, but with the loss of a considerable quantity of baggage. The enemy had surrounded us on all sides, and our main body being within the enemy's rifle range, the drivers left the elephants and baggage-carts, and made off into the woods.

A mile further on, we found that the Beebeegunge bridge had been completely destroyed by the rebels, who had there concentrated their forces, and were determined to dispute our further advance.

Finding that the re-construction of a bridge in face of such a large force of the enemy was impossible, and that the river could not be forded, we made a flank movement, so as to gain the railway embankment on our right, and thus proceed direct to Arrah.

The enemy immediately left their position behind Beebeegunge bridge, and proceeded in a parallel direction with us. They kept up their fire on us, but the ground being favourable for our skirmishers, who were judiciously led by Capt. Scott, no great difficulty was experienced by our force until we arrived within about 300 yards of the railway embankment. The ground here being very much broken, and as we were unable to get the guns on to the railway line, the rebels clearly saw the difficulties we had to encounter, and made certain of our complete destruction. Notwithstanding Major Eyre having opened on the enemy with shell and round shot, and although our skirmishers made excellent practice with their Enfield rifles, still no impression could be made on the rebels, who advanced in large numbers, and came rushing on to the mouth of the guns.

In the woods on our left, an immense body of the rebels had assembled, and poured a tremendous fire upon our line, the left of which, with two guns, occupied a "tope," and the right was close up to the railway bank, under shelter of some brick-kilns and other sort of cover.

Our line was then about 300 yards in length, and the enemy came pouring down on us in large numbers. At this time we were in imminent danger, when Major Eyre ordered us to charge the enemy. This movement was perfectly successful, and our line advancing at the charge, the mutineers fled from the woods, from whence emerging, Major Eyre opened on them with grape, and the enemy cleared off in all directions.

One officer and eight men were wounded during the operations of the day, which commenced at about 6 a.m. and lasted until 3 p.m.

I beg to bring to your especial notice the gallant conduct of Capt. Scott, Ensigns Lewis and Mason, who prevented the enemy from turning our right, and maintained their position under a tremendous fire. My thanks also are due to Dr. Thornton, who, though suffering from indisposition, has been unremitting in his attention towards our sick and wounded. Ens. Oldfield, who was wounded in the face by a rifle-ball, was nevertheless most efficient at his post, namely, with the two guns on the left. Lieut. Wylde (of the late 40th Bengal regiment), our interpreter, rendered us great assistance, skirmishing with our men when they were thus employed, charging with our line, and performing all his other duties with extreme intelligence.

I flatter myself that with respect to the conduct of the non-commissioned officers and privates of the 5th Fusiliers, no comments or recommendations to praise can be required at my hands.

I wish to avail myself of this opportunity of acknowledging the many services which the gentlemen volunteers of our force have rendered to the men of the 5th Fusiliers, and

I have, &c.,

(Signed) FERDINAND W. L'ESTRANGE,

Captain, 5th Fusiliers.

To the Assistant Adjutant-General, &c. &c., Dinapore.

The following is the supplementary despatch of Captain L'Estrange, 5th Fusiliers, to the commanding officer at Dinapore, relative to the relief of Arrah:—

"Camp, Arrah, August 5.

"Sir,—When I had the honour of addressing you on the morning of the 3rd instant from our camp near this place, I was so extremely anxious to finish my despatch and include it with that of Major Eyre, that time did not permit me to do more than record the services and gallantry of the officers belonging and attached to the detachment of the 5th Fusiliers which was under my command on the eventful day of Sunday, the 2nd instant. It is with feelings of the greatest pleasure that I have now to speak of the eminent services which were rendered to our force by Capt. the Hon. E. P. Hastings, from the first moment when our expedition was projected up to the present time. The gallantry of this officer was so conspicuous that it excited universal admiration; while I can at the same time assert, with equal confidence, that nothing could have surpassed the exertions which he made for our men during their long and fatiguing march, followed as it was by the hard-fought contest against hosts of rebels and marauders. As I have before observed, I was unable in my despatch from the camp to give you these details of the obligations under which we are to our Acting Quartermaster-General, and at the same time I have to request you will consider this report as supplementary to my previous one.

"I have the honour to be, your most obedient humble servant,

"F. W. L'ESTRANGE, Captain,

"5th Fusiliers, Commanding Detachment."

From H. C. Wake, Esq., Magistrate of Shahabad, to W. Tayler, Esq., Commissioner of the Patna Division.

SIR,—I have the honour to forward, for the information of his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, the following narrative of our extraordinary defence and providential escape.

On the evening of Saturday, July 25th, I received an express from Dinapore, warning us that a disturbance was apprehended on that day, but giving us no other information. On the morning of July 26, a sowar whom I had posted at Koelwar Ghat, on the Soane, came in and reported that numbers of sepoys had crossed, and that more were crossing.

I found that Mr. Palin, the railway engineer stationed at Koelwar, had contented himself with sending over for the boats to the Arrah side the night before, but when leaving, had failed to destroy them, as he had promised to do. The police, I imagine, bolted at the first alarm.

All efforts to ascertain the amount of the force of the rebels were unavailing, and the police left the city on Sunday, the 26th. Thinking it highly inadvisable to abandon the station when the rebels might be few, and having 50 Sikhs on the spot, and finding the rest of the officers of the station of the same opinion, and the few residents in the district who had come in to us willing to remain, we, on the night of Sunday, the 26th, went into a small bungalow, previously fortified as much as possible by Mr. Boyle, the district engineer of the railway company.

Our force consisted of one jemadar, two havildars, two naiks, forty-five privates, a bhiste and cook of Capt. Rattray's Sikh police battalion, Mr. Littledale, judge; Mr. Combe, officiating collector; Mr. Wake, magistrate; Mr. Colvin, assistant; Dr. Halls, civil assistant-surgeon; Mr. Field, sub-deputy opium agent; Mr. Anderson, his assistant; Mr. Boyle, district engineer to the railway company; Syud Azeemooddeen Hossen, deputy-collector; Mr. Dacosta, moonsiff; Mr. Godfrey, schoolmaster; Mr. Cock, officiating head clerk of the collectorate; Mr. Tait, secretary to Mr. Boyle; Messrs. Delpino and Hoyle, railway inspectors; and Mr. D'Souza.

We had enough otta and grain for some days of short allowance, and a good deal of water for ourselves, but owing to the shortness of our notice, nothing but the barest necessities could be brought in—and the Sikhs had only a few days' water, but as we expected the rebels to be followed up immediately, we had not much anxiety on that score.

On Monday, the 27th July, about 8 a.m., the insurgent sepoys, the whole of the 7th, 8th, and 40th N.I. arrived in the station, and having first released the prisoners, rushed to the collectorate, when they were at once joined by the Nujeebs, and looted the treasure, amounting to Rs. 85,000. This did not take long, and they then charged our bungalow from every side, but being met with a steady and well-directed fire, they changed their tactics, and, hiding behind the trees with which the compound is filled, and occupying the outhouses and Mr. Boyle's residence, which was unfortunately within sixty yards of our fortification, they kept up an incessant and galling fire on us during the whole day. They were joined by numbers of Koorer Sing's men, and the sepoys repeatedly declared that they were acting under his express orders, and after a short time he was seen on the parade, and remained during the siege. Every endeavour was made by the rebels to induce the Sikhs to abandon us. Heavy bribes were offered to them, and their own countrymen employed as mediators.

They treated every offer with derision, showing perfect obedience and discipline.

On the 28th, two small cannons were brought to play upon our bungalow, one throwing 4 lbs. shot, and these were daily shifted to what the rebels thought to be our weakest spots. Finally, the largest was placed on the roof of Mr. Boyle's dwelling-house, completely commanding the inside of our bungalow, and the smaller behind it at a distance of twenty yards. Nothing but cowardice, want of unanimity, and only the ignorance of our enemies, prevented our fortification being brought down about our ears.

During the entire siege, which lasted seven days, every possible stratagem was practised against us. The cannons were fired as frequently as they could prepare shot, with which they were at first unprovided, and incessant assaults were made upon the bungalow. Not only did our Sikhs behave with perfect coolness and patience, but their untiring labour met and prevented every threatened disaster. Water began to run short. A well 18 feet by 4 was dug in less than twelve hours. The rebels raised a barricade on the top of the opposite house—our own grew in the same proportion; a shot shook a weak place in our defence—the place was made twice as strong as before. We began to feel the want of animal food and short allowance of grain—a sally was made at night, and four sheep brought in; and finally, when we ascertained beyond a doubt that the enemy were undermining us, a countermine was quickly dug. On the 30th, the troops sent to our relief from Dinapore were attacked and beaten back close to the entrance of the town. On the next day the rebels returned, and telling us that they had annihilated our relief, offered the Sikhs and the women and children (of whom there were none with us) their lives and liberty, if they would give up the government officers.

August the 1st, we were all offered our lives, and leave to go to Calcutta, if we would give up our arms. On the 2nd, the greater part of the sepoys went out to meet Major Eyre's field force, and on their being soundly thrashed, the rest of them deserted the station, and that night we went out, and found their mine had reached our foundations, and a canvass tube filled with gunpowder was lying handy to blow us up, in which, however, I do not think they would have succeeded, as their powder was bad, and another stroke of the pick would have broken into our countermine; we also brought in the one gun which they had left on the top of the opposite house. During the whole siege, only one man, a Sikh, was severely wounded, though two or three got scratches and blows from splinters and bricks. Everybody in our garrison behaved well, but I should be neglecting a duty did I omit to mention specially Mr. Boyle, to whose engineering skill and untiring exertions we in a great measure owe our preservation, and Mr. Colvin, who rendered the most valuable assistance, and who rested neither night nor day, and took on himself far more than his share of every disagreeable duty. In conclusion, I must earnestly beg that his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor will signally reward the whole of our gallant little detachment of Sikhs, whose service and fidelity cannot be overrated. The jemadar should at once be made a subadar, and many of the rest are fit for promotion, and when required I will submit a list, with details.

I have, &c.,

(Signed) W. C. WAKE, Magistrate.

The following extract from a letter just received from Gya, tells so well for the Sikhs and also for the officer named Captain Ingilby, of the late 7th N.I., that it deserves a place in our columns. "Poor Ingilby was killed swimming to his boat—he told the men not to duck their heads as it was unsoldierly—his last words were 'Good bye, grenadiers,'—a body said to be his was brought in to Dinapore some days after, and we buried it. The Sikhs threw their turbans on the coffin and wept."

AGRA.—The Calcutta Government has received news from Agra to the 23rd August, as follows:—"News received from the force sent to Hattass to the effect that an attack had been made on the enemy, who were encamped about three miles from Allyghur. They were defeated with loss of 150 killed. The loss of the British, 5 killed and 12 wounded; among the former, Ensign Marsh and Mr. Tandy; and among the latter, Lieut. Clarke. The British force was not strong enough to take possession of Allyghur.

"In Rajpootana the native chiefs were quiet.

"All was quiet at Gwalior—rumours of an advance of the troops thence towards Agra not believed.

"The fort at Agra pretty healthy."

ALLAHABAD.—The following is an extract of a private letter, dated Allahabad, Aug. 22:—"I feel much pleasure to inform you that our office (Pension-pay Office) has been re-opened in the fort for a month or so. The aspect of affairs now at and around this place is perfectly tranquil, there is no disturbance of any kind, nor do we apprehend any. Both in and out of the fort such excellent arrangements have been made, that if even 100,000 mutineers dare make any attempt against us, we could not only defy them, but teach the rascals a lesson which they would not soon forget. But very unpleasant rumours are afloat regarding Lucknow and Oude; they say that the insurgents are collected in large masses in that country, but no doubt there is much exaggeration in all that we hear. Great numbers of Bengalee fugitives, both from Cawnpore and Lucknow, have recently arrived at this place, in such a destitute condition that you could scarcely refrain from shedding tears, were you only to look at them. They have come here for the purpose of returning to their homes, but as the only safe means of doing so in the present disturbed state of Behar is by securing passages in the steamers, they feel great difficulty in accomplishing their object, particularly as many of them are encumbered with women and children."—Hurkaru.

Another letter of the same date says:—

"The news from Lucknow is most cheering. The people in the entrenchments have sent word to General Havelock not to distress himself on their account, as they have lots of ammunition and provisions to last them for the next six months."

The officer commanding at Allahabad reports on the 23rd August:—

"A detachment of the 1st Madras fusiliers, with a few Sikhs, proceeded in the steamer Jumna up the Ganges for sixty miles to cut off communication between Oude and the Doab; burnt seven boats, and destroyed about forty-three of the rebels. Casualties on our side extremely slight.

"Another small detachment, with two guns, under Major McIntyre, proceeded forty miles up the Trunk Road towards Cawnpore; burnt three villages, and restored communication between Cawnpore and Allahabad, which had been cut off by men crossing from the Oude side and joining the rebels in the Doab.

"A party of the Dinapore rebels were reported to be proceeding westward (having passed south of Mirzapore), and Colonel Hinde, with the troops of the rajah of Rewah, is supposed to be pursuing them.

"A column has been formed at Raneegunge, consisting of the C. company 5th battalion Madras artillery, the left wing H.M.'s 53rd regiment, and the 27th regiment Madras N.I.

BARRACKPORE.—The following is from Barrackpore, date Aug. 25:—

"Yesterday evening, at five o'clock, all the native troops were paraded here, in the same order as on Monday morning last. Sir John Hearsay addressed them again on their volunteering for China, and after reiterating what he had said on the previous occasion, he told them that they had now had one week to consider the affair and make up their minds: that they must remember it was a matter of free-will, and no fault would be found with those who declined to volunteer; those who remained would continue here doing their duty as usual. This he said that he, their general, told them, and they knew that he had never deceived them: he also said that a few wretched buneahs and low caste scoundrels had lately attempted to make them believe that the Government intended punishing the sepoys here, and had even collected carts to carry off their dead bodies, &c. &c.; but that this was false, and that he would die before anything of the kind could be done them, as he looked on all the sepoys then assembled there as his children. After this, Sir John brought out to the front, the officers, European and Native, with the colours of the 70th N.I., and then called upon all volunteers for China to follow; on this the whole regiment came out, shouting and cheering. When they had advanced about twenty paces in front, the corps was halted; and the general, after addressing them again, and asking if they volunteered willingly, and readily, asked Captain Green, as one of the old officers of the regiment (indeed the only one present, of any standing, with the exception of Colonel Kennedy, the commandant), to explain again to his regiment that their offer must be perfectly voluntary, and that they were not constrained, or forced in any way. Captain Green did so, and told all who had any objection to volunteer, that they could now fall out of the ranks; when some fifty or sixty did so, and were placed on one side; the remainder of the regiment remained firm, and again shouted, "Bum, bum mahadeo," their usual cry when pleased. The general then rode to the front of the 2nd grenadiers, and called on those willing to volunteer to come to the front; but only about fourteen responded to the call (though it is but justice to this regiment to mention that there did not appear to be above 200 men on parade at the time). The 34th and 43rd were then given the opportunity of following the example set them by their comrades of the 70th; but in the former some six or seven drummers only were forthcoming, and in the latter apparently still fewer. It was thus very evident that the 70th was the only regiment in the Barrackpore brigade which could be considered as having volunteered, as fully nine-tenths of that regiment had accepted the invitation of General Hearsay, and they certainly seemed to do so with the greatest heartiness. The business of the evening was now concluded; and the general, after informing the 70th that their offer would be communicated to Government without delay, then directed the different regiments to return to their respective lines, which they accordingly did, the 70th marching back apparently in the highest spirits, and delighted at what they had done, and at the satisfaction their general had expressed with their conduct."—Bengal Hurkaru, August 26.

BUXAR.—The following is an extract of a letter from Buxar, dated the 25th instant:—

"I write this in hopes I may have some opportunity of sending it from some station. A fleet of four steamers with their flats left Dinapore yesterday, destination unknown. They consist of the Mirzapore and Nemesis, and the Calcutta and Krishna, with H.M.'s 90th. The Koladine with Outram and staff, and the James Hume and flat, which is to embark the detachment of the 5th fusiliers at Buxar; there is also two guns and artillerymen, part of the Dinapore battery, rather an imprudent move, I should say, taking guns from Dinapore just now. Nine officers of the mutinied regiments at Dinapore accompany Outram, to act, I believe, as mounted staff. When the fleet was opposite Chupra, the collector and magistrate came off in a boat with the intelligence that the Goorkas at Gorruckpore were surrounded by Nena Sing with a large army and guns, and the Goorkas showed a disposition to bolt. This intelligence was, I believe, conveyed in a native letter; for my part I can hardly believe that 5,000 Goorkhas would allow themselves to be quietly surrounded. However, General Outram fired a gun to bring all steamers to, and after a good deal of backing and filling, the James Hume was ordered to proceed as rapidly as possible to Buxar, take on board Eyre's battery, and the detachment of fusiliers (that will arrive from Arrah), get seven days' provision for the fleet, and return to the mouth of the Gogra, and follow the fleet up that river, which it was to go up as far as it could; but though this has not been countermanded, the whole fleet are still going on, and the Gogra is left far astern. So I suppose the idea has been abandoned. It seems to me it would have been great folly to have carried out these intentions, as the Gogra channel is not known; there are no pilots, or coal, and many strong forts, with heavy guns mounted, on the banks. The Madras brought down intelligence from Allahabad that people from Oude are crossing over to that place in hundreds—this looks fishy. The way the 90th regiment have been knocked about is the most extraordinary of all. They were first ordered to go to Allahabad; when they had got some way, they were told to stop at Buxar, they were then ordered back to Dinapore, and when they had nearly reached that place they were told to go back again."

CALCUTTA.—We (Allen's Indian Mail) have received the following letter, dated August 18th, from an esteemed correspondent at Calcutta:—

"Our tenure of India hangs on a thread. Had the mutineers a single able man to lead them we might say good-bye to India for the present. Our position is most critical, and in no way improved since the rebellion first commenced. The Government tries to put a good face upon the matter, and thereby misleads the Ministry and people at home as to the real extent of the danger. I suppose in all history there never was exhibited such devotion to their duty as our officers have displayed. With the entire army in a state of mutiny, they have remained with their men at the peril of their own lives, in the hope of opening their eyes to the folly of going against the British Government, and of exploding away the misapprehensions under which they laboured. Her Majesty's troops who may have been in the Crimea, will find Sebastopol a joke to the work that awaits them in this country. Our position has been doubly difficult on account of the women and children who, in Cawnpore, Lucknow, and Agra, equal, if they do not exceed, the number of men capable of bearing arms. It is not surprising that our generals should be sorely pained on being suddenly placed in such novel circumstances. At the time I write, Lucknow, General Havelock's force, Cawnpore, and Agra, are in imminent danger. The enemy, not only numbers twenty or thirty to our one, but they are also well supplied with artillery and ammunition, and ramour, however, says that the latter is becoming scarce; but they can always make enough to go on with. Had the true state of affairs been known in England at the commencement, troops would undoubtedly have been sent out overland. Even now we fully expect that the next mail steamer will bring us out as many as she can accommodate, and that others will follow as quickly as possible. Had it not been for the small force that has arrived from China, I fully believe that we could not have held Calcutta. And if Calcutta had fallen, the whole of the up-country stations would have gone, without an exception. Precautions have been taken to protect the city against any attempts of the natives during the Mohurram; but many persons are still in great trepidation, and with only too much reason. There is no doubt if a row did begin that many lives would be lost before the Europeans could rally or make head against them. The troops, volunteers, sailors, &c., would then show little mercy. They would kill every native they met. The European soldiers are mad with rage, and are the greatest brutes in the world when their blood is roused. A party, not long ago, came upon a village where they found the body of an officer lately murdered. In revenge, they bayoneted every man, woman, and child, and then burnt the village to the ground—their officers being powerless to restrain them. But what is the cause of this mutiny, you will ask. I answer; have not the Indian papers for the last five years been bewailing the paucity of Europeans in India? Have they not, again and again, shown up the defenceless state of Bengal? And then look to the discipline of the army. Commanding officers have no power to punish insubordination in their regiments. Junior officers are mere cyphers. The sepoy has been pampered and petted like spoiled children, and ever since I have been in the service have made a pretext of their religion for the purpose of thwarting Government and of shirking their duty. People say, that in former days the officers behaved differently towards their men. No doubt of it. In those good old times an officer could, and did, knock down a sepoy on parade with greater impunity than he could now give his syce (groom) a lash with his whip. I have seen first-rate officers, who were beloved by their men, give a sepoy as good a hiding on parade as ever man got. For what offence, think you? Why, for being continually dirty. I myself had once to report to the officer commanding my wing of the regiment, that a sepoy of my Company was irreclaimably dirty. On the next parade-day F— pitched into the fellow right and left, and from that hour he became a better soldier and a cleaner man. If such a thing were done now—a-days the officer would be cashiered. Formerly I have seen our adjutant pitch into sepoys by the dozen in one morning, who respected him for the display of power. It is the taking away all power from officers in command of companies, and even regiments, that has been the ruin of the native army, which was once second to none in the world. But the people of the country have been spoilt by the civilians. Beyond a few civilians to form the Government, we should be better without any civil servants or civil law. The revenue could be collected by military men quite as well, and there are many districts where that is already the case. We ought to have military law, and military men to dispense it. A military officer even now very often discharges precisely the same duties that a civilian would be called upon to do, and does the work for half the pay. He is contented with this, and even thinks himself lucky to get such an appointment. At the present moment, if Government would proclaim martial law in Calcutta and the neighbouring stations it would have a most salutary effect on the natives. These gentry are now fined Rs. 20 for seditious language; but a triangle and a couple of men flogged with the cat would soon put an end to sedition. A native can make up his mind to be hanged, and will go through the ceremony with perfect indifference, because it is his kismet, or fate; but he shinks from even a cut with a cane, and shudders at the very idea of fifty lashes with a cat. This is notorious to every one, and yet the Government persists in adhering to civil law, which makes it the laughing stock of both natives and Europeans. Depend upon it, you take too mean a view of this mutiny, in England. We must have from 50,000 to 80,000 additional troops before order will be re-established. And the sooner England understands that she is now engaged in a much more serious struggle than the Crimean war, the better will it be for her and for us all."

The Bank of Bengal have increased the margin retained on loans on deposits of Company's paper. The depreciation of the value of the Government promissory notes has led to this step. The margin on 4 per cent. Sica paper is now 22 per cent., that on 4 per cent. Company's is 27 per cent., and that on 5 per cent. paper is 13 per cent. The effect of this measure of the Bank of Bengal directors has been the gradual depreciation of all Government securities.

The Government have refused the petition of the European inhabitants of Calcutta praying that martial law might be established in Bengal. The direct effect of martial law would be to suspend the ordinary courts of judicature, which is a proposal that the Governor-General in Council cannot entertain. The authorities are already empowered to try by court-martial, and by a process more summary than that ordinarily recognized, all military offenders and all persons exciting soldiers to mutiny. Martial law will be proclaimed whenever it appears necessary to the Government.

The Governor-General in Council has laid down certain rules for the guidance of civil authorities in the disturbed districts. They must carry out Mr. Colvin's proclamation. No sepoys are to be dealt with summarily, unless it is capable of proof that they actually were present at or assisted in a murder. No villages are to be burnt. The rules are dated the 31st of July.

The Mohurrum has passed over in perfect tranquillity. The precautions taken to prevent any disturbance reflected infinite credit on the local government, as not the least thing occurred in any part of the town in which the Tazee processions passed through, and all went off as quietly or more so than in any preceding year.

The centenary of Plassey, the Eed, and the Mohurrum, have passed without any disturbance of the peace in the metropolis and its adjoining suburban villages and districts; and the apprehension, which seemed to have troubled their minds, must have greatly subsided from the minds of the public.

A notification by the Governor-General in Council directs the civil and military authorities in all districts of the lower and central provinces of the Bengal presidency in which martial law has been proclaimed, and in the districts of the Bhagulpoore division, to send away all European women and children, of every class, if possible, to Calcutta, or, at any rate, to some station below Rajmahal; and with this view a free passage is given on board the Government and private river steamers and flats, to all women and children proceeding down the river, in compliance with the above order.

BANK OF BENGALE.—The statement published by the Bank of Bengal in the Gazette of Saturday last shows, on comparison with the details published a month ago, a considerably altered position of its affairs. Glancing at the different items, we observe that loans on Government security have increased from Rs. 1,71,26,127 to Rs. 2,01,39,250; that cash credits have extended from Rs. 32,39,767 to Rs. 36,63,846; that the cash balance has been reduced from Rs. 1,19,58,447 to Rs. 77,12,305; and that the liabilities of the bank under the head of "Other Claims" have increased from Rs. 61,864 to Rs. 114,287. It is not our intention to dwell longer than necessary upon this, in every respect, most unsatisfactory statement; but we cannot help confessing that it has taken us completely by surprise to observe, that whilst the cash balance is represented at Rs. 77,12,305, only the extent of bank notes and post bills in circulation should be Rs. 1,70,16,004, which appears to us to be greatly out of proportion. We also notice under the head of liabilities the item of current accounts Rs. 59,65,458, which of course are the balances at the credit of the several constituents, and which, if deducted from the actual cash balance, gives the whole statement a very different aspect. There are, however, among the assets about 12 lacs of rupees in mint certificates and Government bills discounted, which may be considered as actual cash, unless paid in Bank of Bengal notes. What appears to us most extraordinary is that whilst the whole working capital, including dead stock, is represented at Rs. 3,63,95,018, not less than Rs. 2,38,03,096 are advanced on Government securities in the shape of loans and cash credits, which, together with Rs. 25,79,123 invested by the bank on its own account in Government paper, gives a total of Rs. 2,63,82,249 swallowed up by Company's paper, being not less than 72 per cent. on the whole capital and stock of the bank! —Bengal Hurkaru.

CAWNPORE.—Some more facts concerning the Cawnpore massacre have come to light, and the history of those who escaped the slaughter at the ghat seems now well defined. The depositions of a sepoy, which we print elsewhere, and to which we especially draw attention; and of an ayah in the service of Mr. J. Greenway, of Cawnpore, have been taken down. It would appear, that the boat on board of which was General Wheeler was not captured until nearly twenty-two miles below Cawnpore, when it was stopped either by some zemindars, or by troops sent for that purpose. All on board were carried prisoners to Nena Sahib. Amongst them was General Wheeler, Mr. Reed, Mr. Thomas Greenway, Mr. Kirkpatrick, Mr. McKenzie, Captain McKenzie, and Dr. Harris. Their arms were tied, and they were brought into the presence of the Nena; who, according to one account, suggested that as General Wheeler was an old man his arms should be loosened. But the Kotwal of Cawnpore, Hoola Singh, interposed, and Sir Hugh Wheeler was, according to the statement of the ayah, led off to the guard thus bound. His departure was the signal for the slaughter of those who were left. The whole party met death bravely, and Dr. Harris died saying that his countrymen would revenge his death. He has left our soldiers a legacy which they will not be slow to accept, and whilst revenging his death they will think of the 16th at Arrah. He was not killed at once, the first discharges of the guns only wounding him, and eventually he was cut down by two sowars. The sepoy affirms that Sir Hugh Wheeler was killed with the others, and his story is on the whole the more credible. The youngest daughter of Sir Hugh Wheeler, it is said, was taken prisoner by a sowar, and carried off to his house. She remained with this man till night, when he went out and came home drunk; so soon as he was asleep, she took a sword and cut off his head, his brother's head, his wife's and two children's. She then went out, and seeing other sowars said, "Go in and see how nicely I have been rubbing the resalidar's feet" (meaning, "See how soundly he sleeps"). They went inside and Miss Wheeler jumped down a well and was killed. The story must be received with caution; it bears internal evidence of at least exaggeration. It is excessively improbable that one woman, and that too a delicate girl, who had been brought up in every refinement, could kill two men, a native woman and two children. Besides the story has been told before of a Portuguese girl, and appeared in the Friend. However that may be, it has since been published again, and it is affirmed that the youngest daughter of General Wheeler was the heroine and not a Portuguese girl. For some time the prisoners retained by Nena Sahib were treated with great rigour, but having obtained instructions from Delhi, he supplied them with clean gowns and better food. One of the ladies was detected in writing to Allahabad, and it was at the same time reported to the Nena that a large force was advancing against him. Upon this, he ordered the execution of his captives. They appear to have had an idea of their fate, for they tore their clothes and fastened the doors. But an ingress was effected, and the butchery began. The cries and screams of the ladies were heartrending, but gradually they ceased, and there was an awful stillness. All were left for dead; the wretches did not examine the bodies to see if life were extinct, but slunk quietly away. On the morrow it was found that 25 were still not dead; they had only been wounded. But it made no difference, the dead and the dying were bundled into a well, and earth heaped over them. The tragedy is worse than that of the Black Hole; truly the mild Hindoo has progressed under our rule, and the Christian influence that we have shed has had an effect upon his heart. Here is Nena Sahib; a man who prided himself upon his nearness to western civilization, who could speak English, who had acquired a smattering of English literature, and could reason about the rights of man, and representative institutions. He could clamour for political freedom, and yet commit a crime which would have disgraced the court of Surajah Dowla. He spoke two or three languages, was intelligent and shrewd. If he had gone to England he would have been courted and honoured. What a pity he rebelled, his services as Assistant Commissioner or Deputy Collector would have been invaluable. It is as well that we have not had two such tragedies as the Black Hole and the massacre of Cawnpore within one century, and it may be expected that in the third century of holding Bengal there will be no such epoch.—Friend of India, Sept. 3.

The Englishman states that Nena Sahib has sold out all the Government securities that stood in the name of Bajee Rao, amounting to fifty lakhs of rupees. The Government securities still standing in Nena Sahib's name, amounting to about three lakhs of rupees, are not negotiable.

3rd Sept.—Brigadier Neill reports receipt of news, five days old, from Lucknow, by Cossid, believed to be authentic. The garrison was in good health and all right, having driven mines under a house near the walls, from which much annoyance was experienced by enemy's sharpshooters, between 100 and 200 of whom had been blown up. The garrison sallied out, and spiked one of the enemy's large guns. It is also said that the besiegers are leaving for their homes. The Gwalior troops remain quiet, and are not expected to move for some time, if at all.

At Cawnpore all quiet. The sweeper's police have re-established British authority at Bithoor, and have also got the fort of Sullynee, on the Culpoe road.

Mr. Probyn, collector of Futteyghur, wife and children, and Mr. Edwards, collector of Budaon, have been sent in to Cawnpore safe and well by Huldeo Bux, from Dhurmpore.

The following is from an officer in General Havelock's camp, near Cawnpore, dated August 24th:—

"For want of reinforcements General Havelock is now fairly shelved, in so far as all offensive operations are concerned. When we arrived at Cawnpore, about the beginning of this month, Havelock was carrying on his operations on the Oude side of the river, while General Neill had remained in charge of the entrenched camp. Instead of being sent across the river to reinforce Havelock, we were detained for the greater security of General Neill's camp, which was menaced by a large force of rebels, collected at the Nana's old stronghold of Bithoor. Their cavalry used to be picketed every night at the distance of three miles from our camp, and many a sudden call to arms did they occasion us. Every morning we were marched out before daylight, to invite an attack; but the cowards always took care to scamper off in time. No sooner had General Havelock recrossed the river and united his force with Neill's, than it was resolved to proceed at once to Bithoor. We marched at daybreak on Sunday, the 16th, and towards midday fell in with the rebels. They were in a position of great natural strength; neither had military science been altogether wanting for the improvement of their natural advantages. They had three distinct strongholds (like the three lines of the old Roman Legion). 1st. An entrenched and all but completely masked battery. 2nd. A loopholed village. 3rd. A second village defended on every side with loopholed parapets of mud. The battery was in the heart of a dense jungle of sugar-cane, and defended with very thick mud ramparts, the guns being pointed from embrasures in the most approved method. It was flanked on each side by an entrenched quadrangle filled with sepoy musketry, and sheltered, like the battery itself, by thickly set plantations of sugar-cane. The two villages were situated one on each side of these formidable defences, though at a considerable distance to the rear. The rebel army was arrayed in front of the entrenchments, but so easy was the work of dispersing it, that our task seemed only to begin when after a short cannonade we had forced the rebels to break their ranks and seek for shelter in their all but impenetrable entrenchments. Our guns were then got into position and a constant fire was maintained for upwards of twenty minutes on the enemy's entrenchments, but strange to say without producing any effect whatever in the way of silencing or even abating their fire. Our infantry consisted of detachments from the 78th Highlanders, H.M.'s 84th and 64th regiments and the Madras fusiliers. We had long ago deployed into skirmishing order, and now advanced upon the enemy's musketry intrenchments; as it would have been madness to charge the battery while exposed to a flank fire from these musketry entrenchments. Without much loss on our side, the places were speedily cleared; and while the fusiliers were despatched in pursuit of the sepoys who retired upon the villages, we, of the 78th, charged straight up to the battery, throwing ourselves to the ground on every discharge. Contrary to their usual custom, the rebels awaited our approach, but, breathless and weary as we were, the impulse of our bayonets proved irresistible, and in less than two minutes from the time when the foremost of our number had cleared the parapet, the battery and the two heaviest of its guns remained in our possession. I can't give you exactly the statistics of our killed and wounded, but in the course of that day and the following the Highlanders lost far more from cholera and sunstroke than from the enemy. While we had been thus engaged, the Fusiliers had been storming one of the villages. This they accomplished in about half an hour's time, reducing the place to ashes and shooting down every rebel that was so unfortunate as to attract their notice. General Havelock estimates the enemy's loss at 250, but all of us seem agreed that this is very far within the mark. After the engagement, I was sent with fifty men to bring the two captured guns from the entrenched battery to our camp. In doing so we had fully two miles to walk, right over the scenes of recent carnage. But, so far were the men from being impressed with the sad havoc which surrounded them, that their only thoughts seemed to be of adding to the work of slaughter, the awful tragedies enacted in this neighbourhood having exasperated them beyond measure.

"We are encamped close to poor old Wheeler's miserable entrenchment. Of all the wonders which have passed before us since this outbreak commenced, the most wonderful is that that ruinous entrenchment should have held that horde of bloodthirsty ruffians off so long. This is a strong statement; but none who have visited that so-called entrenchment will call it too strong."

DEFENCE AND TRAGEDY AT CAWNPORE.—The following is an account of the defence and tragedy at Cawnpore by Lieut. Dalhousie, one of the survivors:—

"Some time before any disturbance broke out at Cawnpore, and when it was only suspected that there might be an outbreak among the troops, General Wheeler ordered over from Oude a regiment of irregular cavalry, which was quartered in different parts of the cantonments. At the same time officers were ordered to sleep in the lines with their men; and assistance was asked from the Rajah of Bithoor, who sent some 200 cavalry, 400 infantry, and two guns; which force had the guarding of the treasury. A few days later, the Oude irregulars were ordered out of the station, as the general found he could not rely on them, and were relieved by a company of the 32nd regiment from Lucknow. General Wheeler gave the order for all the European inhabitants to sleep near the 32nd regiment barracks—also for the artillery to be ready to move down at any moment. On the 2nd June, two companies of the 84th regiment arrived from Allahabad; but on the morning of the 3rd, General Wheeler gave orders for one company of the 84th, made up to its full strength, together with the company of the 32nd regiment, to march to Lucknow; so that we had left at Cawnpore—

60 men H.M. 84th regiment.
70 " " 32nd "
15 " " 1st Madras Fusiliers.
50 " " Artillery, and 6 guns.

"On the morning of the 4th June the officers of the cavalry, 4th and 56th regiments, were told to discontinue sleeping in their lines; but the 33rd N.I. being considered loyal, the officers of that regiment were still to be with their men. On the afternoon of the Sunday (June —) Lieutenant Ashe arrived with half a battery of Oude horse artillery, two 9-pounders and a 24-pounder, having been obliged to retire on Cawnpore, as the troops that were with him on his way to Futteyghur had mutinied on the road, on the — June. The tranches being finished, the guns were placed, and provisions for about twenty-five days were ordered in. At about eleven o'clock that night, the cavalry rose, taking with them their arms and two horses each. Early next morning the 1st regiment N.I. was reported to have gone. The 53rd and 56th N.I. appeared still loyal, remaining still in their lines, but as none of the officers were with their men, and as there was no one to look after them, they also went off, without anyone missing them, between eight and nine o'clock, taking with them the regimental treasure, colours, and as much ammunition as they could carry. That afternoon every house was burnt, fires were seen in every direction; we could do nothing but stay where we were, being too few in numbers to meet the rebels, as all the Goluandazes belonging to the artillery had gone away very soon after Lieutenant Ashe's arrival, and volunteers for the artillery were called in from the infantry. Next morning, the 7th June, a letter was received from the Rajah of Bithoor, who was supposed to be on our side, saying he meant to attack us. Soon after, two guns opened upon us from the north-west and musketry from all directions. On the 8th, three more guns were brought against us. The number of guns against us increased daily, and on the 8th June, the enemy had playing on us night and day three mortars, two 24-pounders, three 18-pounders, one or two 12-pounders, about the same number of 9-pounders, and one 6-pounder. On or about the 12th June the insurgents by firing set the large barracks, in which all the women of the 32nd regiment and the wounded were placed, on fire. No sooner was the fire perceived than the assembly was roused, and every man had to stand to his post as we expected to be attacked. There was then no place for the women and children to go to, but in the trenches, where many of them had to remain night and day. There was no shelter now for the men anywhere during the day—and from this date we lost five or six men daily by sunstroke. On the — June, after having been on half rations for some days, the rajah sent a half-caste woman with a note into the trenches, to the effect that all soldiers and Europeans that had nothing to do with Lord Dalhousie's Government, and would lay down their arms, should be sent to Allahabad. General Wheeler gave orders to Captain Moore to act as he should consider best. Captain Moore that evening signed a treaty to the effect that the rajah should provide boats and carriages for the wounded and ladies down to the river bank, whilst on our side we were to give up what treasure we had, together with guns and ammunition. On the 26th, a committee of officers went to the river to see that the boats were ready and serviceable, and everything being reported ready, and carriages for the wounded having arrived, we gave our guns, &c. &c. over, and marched out on the morning of the 27th June, about seven o'clock. We got down to the river and into the boats without being molested in the least; but no sooner were we in the boats and had laid down our muskets and taken off our coats in order to seek coolness at the boats, than the cavalry gave the orders to fire. Two guns that had been hidden were run out, and opened on us immediately, whilst sepoy came from all directions and kept up a fire. The men jumped out of the boats, and, instead of trying to get the boats loose from their moorings, swam to the first boat they saw loose. Only three boats got safe over to the opposite side of the river; but they were met there by two field-pieces guarded by a number of cavalry and infantry. Before the boats had gone a mile down the stream, half our small party were either killed or wounded, and two of our boats had been swamped. We had now only one boat, crowded with wounded, and having on board more than she could carry. The two guns followed us the whole of that day, the infantry firing on us the whole of that night. On the 2nd day, 28th June, a gun was seen on the Cawnpore side, which opened on us at Najufgur, the infantry still following us on both sides. On the morning of the third day, the boat was no longer serviceable. We were aground on a sand-bank, and had not strength sufficient to move her. Directly any of us got into the water, we were fired upon by thirty or forty men at a time. There was nothing left for us but to charge and drive them away; so fourteen of us were told off to do what we could. Directly we got on shore the insurgents retired; but, having followed them up too far, we were cut off from the river, and had to retire ourselves, as we were being surrounded. We could not make for the river; we had to go down parallel, and came at the river again a mile lower down, where we saw a large force of men right in front waiting for us, and another lot on the other bank, should we attempt to cross the river. On the bank of the river, just by the fortress front, was a temple. We fired a volley, and made for the temple, in which we took shelter, having one man killed and one wounded. From the door of the temple we fired on every insurgent that happened to show himself. Finding that they could do nothing against us whilst we remained inside, they heaped wood all round and set it on fire. When we could no longer remain inside, on account of the smoke and heat, we threw off what clothes we had, and, each taking a musket, charged through the fire. Seven of us out of twelve got into the water; but before we had gone far two poor fellows were shot. There were only five of us left now; and we had to swim whilst the insurgents followed us along both banks, wading and firing as fast as they could. After we had gone three miles down the stream, one of our party, an artilleryman, to rest himself, began swimming on his back, and not knowing in what direction he was swimming, got on shore, and got killed. When we had got down about six miles, firing on both sides ceased; and soon after we were hailed by some natives, on the Oude side, who asked us to come on shore, and said they would take us to their rajah, who was friendly to the English. We gave ourselves up, and were taken six miles inland to the rajah, who treated us very kindly, giving us food and clothes. We stayed with him for about a month, as he would not let us leave, saying the roads were unsafe. At last he sent us of, on the 29th July, to the right bank of the river, to a jemadar of a village, who got us a hackery. We took our departure on the 31st July for Allahabad, but met the detachment of the 84th regiment under Lieutenant Woodhouse, before we had gone ten miles, and marched off with him to Cawnpore.

DEYRAH DHON, Aug. 6.—A paper currency has been introduced into this district with great success. At first the want of small notes was much felt; but this deficiency was promptly supplied by the issue of notes for one, two, three, and five rupees each. It is said that 5,000*l.* worth of small notes are expected from the Roorkee press. The natives seem now to understand the principle upon which these treasury bills are issued, and the richer Banyas readily purchase them at a small discount. One rich native has been heard to say that he will buy them to the extent of a lakh of rupees.

A few days since, an armed party of about twenty-five Goojurs, from the Saharunpore district, found their way into the western Dhoon, and drove off a herd of cattle towards one of the minor passes in the Sewalics. The alarm was no sooner given than the hotel, with a strong body of police, and about 360 villagers, were in hot pursuit. They divided into four or five parties, and scoured the jungle on the north side of the Sewalic range. A party of twenty came up with the "cattle-lifters," and succeeded in recovering all the cattle, and in releasing the unfortunate cowherds, who had been bound, and forced to accompany the thieves. The Goojurs themselves escaped, owing to the density of the jungle and the smallness of the party that encountered them.

Strong posts occupy the principal passes, the smaller pathways have been to a large extent destroyed. A bridge road is being cut through the densest jungles, by which a constant communication can be kept up from post to post along the whole extent of the range from the Ganges to the Juma. About 550 well-armed and trustworthy men are ready, at a moment's notice, to move upon any point where danger may appear. Of the above, about 150 are maintained by Rajah Lall Singh. We have still about 80 regular sepoy of the Sirmoor battalion, and about 100 recruits in training. More than a month ago the town of Deyrah was disarmed; but some of the more respectable inhabitants have had their arms restored, under special licence, and are allowed to entertain chowkedars for their own defence. These are all duly registered, and are subject to the orders of the superintendent on all occasions. In addition to the above, we have two beautiful little "galloper guns," well equipped and ready for any emergency. These handsome little pieces are trophies taken in former days from the Saharunpore Goojurs by the Sirmoor battalion, under Col. Young. These guns are of English make, and how the Goojurs originally obtained them I cannot tell. The Goojurs are naturally very proud of them, and manifest wonderful skill in managing them. The gentlemen of the station patrol every night, taking the duty by turns. Nine doolees arrived yesterday from Meerut. We may now expect most of the ladies from that station.—Lahore Chronicle.

DINAPORE.—A letter from Dinapore, dated the 13th Aug., tells us that the daks via Gya and Sherghotty having been cut off some time before, a Calcutta paper had not been received at that station for ten days. A force of about 400 Europeans, with a few Sikhs, and four guns, under the command of Major Eyre, of the Bengal artillery, were then advancing against Juggdeespoor.

A later account reports the gallant major's successful progress:—"Juggdeespoor, the den of the Arrah traitor, has been captured by our brave 500, of whom five have been killed and wounded. The Sikhs behaved nobly on the occasion. After a short contest, the scoundrels bolted, leaving our men free to proceed and smoke their pipes in the palace of the arch traitor."

The following is an extract from a letter, dated Dinapore, Aug. 13:—

"It is but right, now that old Lloyd is out of the coach, to tell you, that in all his doings ever since the émeute of the 7th June, he has been guided chiefly by two officers of the 40th, Captain Becher and the adjutant, Lieutenant Burn. When every one took refuge within the precincts of the barrack squares, old Lloyd got a billet at the residences of Captain B. and Lieut. B. It was owing to their persuasions that the men were not disarmed on the 8th June; all along they plied the old man with assurances of their corps' fidelity, so much so that he would not have a guard from any other corps; and, up to the memorable moment when, having given orders, "Guns to the front," he (the general) went on board the steamer, he believed in the 40th being stanch. True it is that he never went to mess without a revolver.

"Even now, when there is a remnant of the 40th N.I. in Dinapore still close to the mess, thus being well situated for spying and reporting all our doings, the old man believes these sepoy to be quite harmless. All the station have urged the removal of these men; but they are not strong enough to oppose Burn and Becher.

"It is well known that a jemadar in Keer Singh's service was amongst these men two or three days ago, but harbouring a spy is no crime with these faikhsul fellows of the 40th."

DELHI.—The Calcutta Government received news from Delhi, on the 31st August, to the effect that General Nicholson's column had arrived there on the morning of the 14th all in excellent order,—that the enemy were more quiet; that the Teelwallah battery had been silenced by the fire of the English, against whose intrenched position the skirmishing of the insurgents with light guns was quite ineffective; that the position of the pickets on the left of the camp in advance of Metcalfe's house was impregnable, and that the fire of the enemy had ceased to command attention.

A siege-train with heavy guns was at Loodianah on the 16th, on its way from Ferozepore, expected to reach Delhi by the end of August. Letters from Sealkote mention that camels had been sent for the first instalment of the seventy-five lakhs of rupees offered by Maha Rajah Golab Sing's son. His contingent of 4,000 men with guns was on its way under Captain R. Lawrence.

Delhi, August 20th.—Since the 12th, there has been scarcely any firing; the enemy are said to be divided in their counsels, and dissension and ill-feeling increasing among them. The wounded doing well, sickness not in the increase, supplies of all sorts plentiful.

Had the night attack on the 31st of July proved successful, the king intended to celebrate the Eed in the British camp. His Majesty, whose poetic effusions lack nothing but point and poesy, has composed some couplets to the effect that the English, who boast of their conquests in other countries, have been overthrown in Hindostan by a single cartridge.

General Neill has forwarded the following report to Government:—

Delhi, 26th August, 1857.—“Nicholson went out yesterday, attacked the Bareilly and Neemuch division trying to get in our rear two miles from Nujuffghur, drove them off, and captured twelve field pieces. Part rallied again near Escape Bridge; rebels driven over it at the point of the bayonet, and routed completely. They lost all ammunition, equipage, and baggage, and the day concluded with blowing up the bridge. Lumsden, of Coke's corps, and Dr. Ireland, killed. Our casualties about 40. The Delhi detachment against Hissar has been three times defeated by Cortlandt.”

The following telegraphic reports received at Lahore, record the progress of the siege of the imperial city.

A telegraph message from Delhi of the 14th instant, 4 P.M., reports the arrival in camp that morning of Brigadier General Nicholson's column, consisting as before mentioned of H. M.'s 52nd Light Infantry, a wing of H. M.'s 61st Regiment, Bourchier's Battery, and 200 Mooltanee Horse.

Lieut. Sheriff, 2nd Fusiliers, had died of the wounds he received on the 12th instant.

The mutineers had given but little annoyance during the previous twenty-four hours.

A telegraph message received from Delhi, 4 P.M., 15th instant, says, all was much more quiet than usual during the previous night. A party of the mutineers reported to have gone towards Soneepur. Some cavalry had been detached to look after them. Another party of the mutineers is said to have reached Soupla on the Rohtuk road.

It is past 4 P.M., 20th August. Nothing of moment to report from this. Lieut. Hodgson, with a body of cavalry, is still out in the Rohtuk district.

Four P.M., 21st August. Mutineers are establishing a battery on the left bank of the Jumna, to annoy with very long shots the Metcalfe picket and Major Coke's camp. Lieutenant Hodgson has been very successful in his engagements with the insurgents in the Rohtuk district. By a Cossid from Cawnpore we learn that Brigadier-General Wilson was made a major-general for special service, and appointed to command the Delhi field force in government orders of 29th July.

It is 4 P.M., 27th August. The total loss in General Nicholson's Brigade, on the 26th, is 71 killed and wounded, including Lieutenant Lumsden, killed, and Lieutenant Gabbet, 61st Foot, died of his wounds. Lieutenant Elkington, 61st, and Dr. Ireland, both dangerously wounded. The guns captured, are one 24-pounder howitzer, two 12-pounder howitzers, two 9-pounder guns, four 6-pounder guns, and four 3-pounder brass guns of native manufacture. We have now secured all the guns of Mackenzie's troop, and Captains Kirby and De Teissier's batteries. The attack on our position yesterday ceased in the evening. Our loss yesterday is eight killed and twelve wounded. The enemy suffered to a much greater extent, 37 soldiers dead being counted in one place. Their cavalry was well punished with the grape from the heavy guns in our centre battery.

It is reported that the force under Bukht Khan, which was routed by Gen. Nicholson at Nujuffghur, was evidently bent on intercepting the siege train by a flank march on Soneepur. It was composed of the 18th, 28th, 29th, 68th, and 3rd regiments N.I., the 8th irregular cavalry, and detachments of the 13th and 14th, and eighteen guns, with all the arms, ammunition, &c. brought from Bareilly. This force was to have been followed in a couple of days by the Neemuch brigade. It is probable, however, that a portion of the latter brigade was present at Nujuffghur, as the guns of Mackenzie's troop belonged to it.

It is 4 P.M. of 30th August. Last night, for the security of our working party, it was necessary to take some of the enemy's breastworks between our advanced pickets, the Sammy-house, and the town. This was done in the most gallant style, with a rush, the enemy having about fourteen killed. Two men of the 60th rifles were killed in this attack.

Letters state that the mutineer force routed by General Nicholson near Nujuffghur consisted of the Neemuch brigade and Kotah contingent, with a large body of cavalry, including the 18th and 14th irregulars.

All in camp at Delhi elated at the prospect of offensive operations against the city. Considerable progress made on the night of the 29th ultimo in clearing ground to our right front. Enemy allowed a trench to be made from the advanced post on the right to the ravine forming a natural parallel without molestation; but now (on the 30th) they appear too late to have discovered the mischief it portends.

A correspondent writes as follows from Delhi, on the 20th August:—

“On my way hitherto, I passed H.M.'s 8th foot, about 300 strong, with the siege train, and several detachments of Sikh cavalry and infantry, some mustering 100 and others 500, we may, therefore, reasonably expect them by the 25th or 27th, then we to the walls of Delhi, for no doubt the train will occupy an advanced position for the purpose of battering. I also passed a number of our poor wounded fellows wending their way to the hill Sanataria of Kusowlie, Dugahie, and Subathoe. The weather has been rather warm, which a twelve hours' rain has greatly moderated, and has put our men in camp in good spirits.

“Two Golandazes were hung the day before yesterday, the one for decreasing, the other for increasing the prescribed quantity of powder, used for shot and shells, which militated greatly against the accuracy of the range. Yesterday a Mrs. Leeson effected her escape from the city, and has taken up her quarters with Mrs. Tytler in camp. A Mogul Moolvie, with whose family she was acquainted, took her under his protection, clothed her in Afghan costume, consisting of loose trousers, frock, and turban, and the more effectually to secure her concealment, he disguised her by browning her hands and face, so that she should resemble a native in complexion. The men who escorted her into camp had not the slightest suspicion as to her sex or country, so successfully had her disguise been accomplished. The complete seclusion in which she had been necessitated to remain, precluded her from obtaining any accurate intelligence of what was going on in the city. However, from the little she was enabled to gather, she is under the firm conviction that there are several Europeans, both men and women, kept in concealment, clothed and bronzed like herself, no doubt.

“Information reached us that a body of about 2,000 sepoys ran away from the city last night. During the night our sepoys erected a battery, near the Metcalfe picket in front of the stables, which opened fire at 4 o'clock this morning, which still continues (12 noon). The fire of the enemy is, however, much heavier than our own, owing to their superior weight of metal. They are firing simultaneously from several batteries, but chiefly from that of Seelinghur.

“Some camels and ponies were seen grazing beyond the Metcalfe picket, a party of the Mooltanee horse made a dash, and succeeded in bringing in some fifty or sixty of the former, and fifteen or twenty of the latter, ere John Pandey had recovered from his surprise at their temerity.

“Last evening an express arrived from Lieut. Hodgson, who had a severe fight with the enemy about thirty miles hence towards Rohtuk, he gave them a good drubbing, but owing to their overwhelming numbers, reinforced probably, they had completely hemmed him and his irregulars in, consequently he urgently requested assistance. A thousand men of all ranks were immediately told off, who, with six guns, started at 11 P.M., some marching and some on elephants. When advanced some fifteen miles on the road a letter reached the commanding officer, informing him of the safety of Lieutenant Hodgson and his men, the Jheend Rajah having sent him timely succour in his time of need. As it rained heavily, our poor fellows had their fifteen miles out and home with wet jackets, the Jheend Rajah's timely aid having rendered a further advance useless.”

INSIDE OF DELHI.—The following is a verbatim statement made by a native:—

“I lived in Delhi from the 13th July, 1857, to the 30th. I found the Delhi Government ten times worse than I had seen it on my arrival there at first, which account has been published by the Lahore Chronicle. The mutineers are quite tired of fighting, the city is full of wounded men, there is no regular hospital there. I heard several wounded sepoys talking among themselves in a street, saying—‘We were very well treated by the English Government: if we were only to have a slight headache we were to be attended by a respectable European doctor twice a day, notwithstanding the services of the native doctors were available to us; besides, we used to get medicines at the Government expenses. Here we die for want of physic; we have to provide doctors for ourselves. There are very few native doctors in the army, who are always absent from their places, their patients (if movable) are obliged to run about in search of them. Had we been aware of the difficulties we met with before, we would have never thought of coming to this cursed station.’ The loot is still going on; the Bazaars are never opened, but a few poor shopkeepers get blows and thumps for the price of their things. A fortnight ago a poor Buniya was killed by a sepoy for not giving him credit. When the sepoys find out a rich house in the city, they accuse the owner after the following manner, in order to plunder his property:—‘They take a loaf of bread and a bottle of grog with them, and make a noise at the door and break it to pieces, get in the house, take possession of the furniture, jewels, and cash, lick the poor householder, saying, ‘Where is the Englishman you have been keeping in your house?’ When he denies of having done so, they just show him the bread and the bottle, and say ‘How is that we happened to find this in your house? we are quite sure there was an Englishman accommodated here, whom you quietly sent elsewhere before our arrival.’ Soon after the talk is over, and the poor man is immediately put into the custody, where there is no inquiry to be made to prove whether he is innocent or guilty; he cannot get his release unless he bribes the general. There is no money left in the city; consequently the bankers of the city were requested to furnish his majesty with it, they replied as follows: "We are sorry we have not cash in hand, but Government notes and hundees your majesty can have them if they are of any use." His majesty being angry set guards at their doors. The Bareilly general advised his majesty to take money from the bankers and citizens by force, but his request is not taken in consideration. He says he could obtain forty lakhs of rupees for his majesty from the city by plundering the mutineers. It will come to pass some day, as his majesty necessarily requires the money to pay his troops, who have received their daily pay for twenty days. The Shazadah and his majesty's private regiment, together with servants, have not been paid for the last two months, they are all ~~dead~~ ^{at present}. The sepoys and sowars say "If we are going on like this, in this way, we will soon be compelled to pay ourselves by looting the city." The rebels sadly complain of their newly made powder, it is too weak, since it is made of unrefined saltpetre. As I was about to leave Delhi, I heard here, that the fresh powder was hardly so strong as to expel a ball out of a musket; there was a talk in Delhi that the mutineers did not go out to fight for the last nine or ten days on account of having so bad powder. Poor Jack Pandies are quite confused and confounded. The officers consult very often about the military affairs, but one contradicts the other on accounts of their private feelings, as each of them thinks himself wiser than the other. They have not been able to make gun-caps yet, but are trying to obtain its elements. The horses of the cavalry are getting thin day by day, as the sowars run them in the streets night and day just to enjoy themselves; passengers are often hurt by them on their way; their heads are cracked on account of running fast against the metalled roads. The Bareilly general is frequently insulted by the other troops, who say they have never been aided by his brigade since their arrival at Delhi. There are no weapons remaining in the magazine. A well-known budmash of Meerut, named Akber Khan, is made the head darogha of the magazine; this man had many times been imprisoned in charges of theft by the English magistrates. On the 24th July the mutineers got an awful licking, which scattered them all on the different roads, running towards the city. Some of their sowars and footmen got in Kadsia Bagh, a large garden on the north of Cashmere gate, situated at the Bank of Jumna; as they did not think themselves safe there, consequently they jumped into the river, quite out of breath, more than half of whom sunk to the bottom, and the rest, with many difficulties, swam to the other end. The streets and bazars abominably stink, they are never cleaned and never swept. The sepoys fight together for the bazar women and wound each other.

The Nabob of Jhujjur was requested to assist his majesty with a sum of five lakhs of rupees, who, after a long consideration, answered that it is out of his power to accommodate his majesty with the money. The mutineers are greatly displeased with the Delhi Government, as they feel very uneasy and unhappy under its bad management. The Bareilly general and his troops, being disheartened, intend to proceed to their old station, where the general thinks that every one will obey him. The Neemuch brigade, finding the Delhi army in a miserable condition, are thinking to go to Lucknow, which they consider the safest place to live in. The budmashes of Delhi, who were often punished by the English magistrates, and the jail was filled with them, they have at present got their release, commit all sorts of rascalities in the city, and enjoy the days of their independence.—Lahore Chronicle, Aug. 18.

FUTTEHGURH.—It is reported that eighteen Europeans belonging to the Futtehgurh party are still alive in the fort of Kusowra, distant twelve miles from Futtehgurh.

HANSI, Aug. 8.—General Van Cortlandt's field force arrived here yesterday. About 200 sowars and sepoys of the 4th, 9th, and 14th irregular cavalry and Hurrianah light infantry have entrenched themselves in the Ranghur village of Jumalpoor, about sixteen miles south-west of Hansi. They are expecting aid from Delhi; but before that can reach them, we hope to be able to record their annihilation; in other respects the district is quiet. Mr. Ford is daily expected to join the General's camp and take charge of the district, when, we suppose, Capt. Robertson will resume his duties as superintendent of Bhutteana. Lieut. Boileau, with about 100 Dogras, and two guns, joined the General's force, on the 2nd instant, at Hissar.

"The cavalry force sent to the relief of Hissar, returned to this place yesterday, and we are in hopes of being engaged with the enemy very soon, as he is in considerable force at Jumalpoor, some eleven miles southward. The rebels are headed by a shazadah, who was previous to the revolt an assistant patrol at Hissar, twenty-five miles north-west of Hissar. He has brought out from Delhi two guns, some 300 irregular sowars, 120 Hurrianah battalion sepoys, and about 600 customs peons. Part of his cavalry was engaged in the action of the 19th, but only a few of them were slain and captured, as they were the first who bolted when we sallied out of the city, the shazadah's brother setting them the example. We, however, have the whole of the shazadah's family in our possession, and they have given us not a little trouble in deporting them from Hissar to this.

HISSAR.—We have letters from General Van Cortlandt's camp of the 20th Aug. All well at Hansi. Hissar was attacked on the 19th by about 2,000 Ranghurs with Mahomed Azem Beg, who commands the detachment of Delhi mutineers, which has advanced to within fifteen miles of Hansi. Lieutenant Hodson is following them up as far as Rohtuk with 300 sowars, and some Jheend troops, and has been successful in several engagements with detached parties of the enemy. The attack on Hissar was to procure the release of the Mirza's family in that city, fortunately the whole of the cavalry from Hansi (700 sowars), under Lieut. Mildmay, had been sent on the 18th to meet a company of the "Kuttar Mukhie" regiment, escorting treasure, and which latter arrived most opportunely before the attack commenced. While the enemy were endeavouring to force the Delhi gate, the cavalry took them in rear, and they fled precipitately. A large number took refuge in the "Doogar" muhalla under the city walls, and were there cut to pieces by the "Kuttar Mukhies," and some dismounted sowars of the Esa Khail Russa. Our cavalry followed the flying enemy four or five miles, and their loss is estimated at not less than 200 killed and 300 wounded. On our side none were killed and but seven wounded; but amongst these, we regret to say, is Lieutenant F. Boileau, severely. The family of the Mirza were taken to Hansi from Hissar on the 20th.

The following is an account of the action at Hissar on the morning of the 19th instant:—

"Captain Mildmay, Lieutenants Hunt and Boileau, Dr. Lamb, Mr. Taylor and myself, had just breakfasted, and were enjoying our cigars in Mr. Taylor's house, where the unfortunate ladies had been murdered, when we heard firing at the Nagowree gate. In a moment we all got ready, together with our force, and repaired to the scene of action. The doorway was of course closed upon the besieging insurgents, and the company of the Kuttar-mookie regiment mounted upon the ramparts; and while they were exchanging shots with the besiegers, we went to another gateway, and sallied out with the cavalry to take the besiegers in flank. On our appearance, the insurgents amounting to between three and four thousand foot of Ranghurs, and about 300 Irregular Cavalry sowars, fled; leaving, however, a considerable number of foot concealed in the houses of the suburb. Captain Mildmay, Lieutenants Hunt and Boileau, and Mr. Taylor with the cavalry, went in pursuit of the runaways, and cut up upwards of 250 of them. I had such a kicking rearing brute of a horse, that I could do nothing with him, so dismounting, led the company of the Kuttars among the houses where the insurgents had hid themselves; they of course fought desperately, but the Kuttars polished them off right well; they, however, had four of their men wounded.

"While congratulating ourselves upon this victory, we cannot but regret that poor Lieutenant Boileau should have received a most dangerous sabre wound on the left side of his face; both the upper and lower jaws have been laid open; he is, however, in the hands of Dr. Lamb, and I doubt not will survive.

"On the night of the 17th instant, General Van Cortlandt received information that the Ranghur rebels of several villages intended plundering Hissar on the morning of the 18th. The general, therefore, sent a force of about 700 cavalry to its relief. We started about 3 A.M. that morning, and reached Hissar about an hour and a half after the rebels had departed, as they had information of our coming. They expected we would return to Hansi this morning, but they were regularly let in for such a thrashing as they richly deserved. Our loss is trifling—some 14 men wounded—while that of the enemy actually counted exceed 300. We have also about thirty prisoners, among whom have been identified several sepoys of the Hurrianah battalion and irregular cavalry sowars. The insurgents were led on by some shazadah."

INDORE, 29th Aug.—A Mahommedan fakir, who has been passing himself off as a shazadah of Delhi, and a devotee from Mecca, passed through Seeta Mhow on his way to Jowra, where it appears he successfully duped the Nawab, with a plausible story of having been robbed, and thus managed to obtain fifty rupees to prosecute his journey. After sojourning at two or three other places, he seems to have taken the route to Mundinam, in the territory of Scindia, where he has, we are told, raised an inurrection, and assumed command of his followers—some five or six thousand Mussulmans. A fight is said to have taken place between Scindiah's troops and the rebels, in which the former were repulsed; the killed and wounded, on both sides, is stated to be about a thousand.

The rajah of Rutlam is reported dead; as also that the Mahomedans have raised the standard of rebellion, plundered the city, and are committing every atrocity imaginable. It is expected that should the mutineers of Neemuch, Mhow, and Indore, who are said to be at Gwalior, be joined by the mutineers of that station, and march upon Malwa, the result will be painful indeed.

Accounts have been received of some chests of opium, valued at a lakh of rupees, having been plundered by some Bheels near Scindwa.

JHANSI.—Mr. J. Thornton, C.S., writes as follows, Aug. 18, to Captain Bruce, Superintendent of Police, Cawnpore.

The Ranee has now raised a body of about 14,000 men, and has 20 guns, which had been kept concealed by the former Jhansi Chief by being buried within the Fort, and of which nothing was known to our officers. I am not certain whether she intends to make any resistance in case our troops come to this quarter, but none of the other native chiefs in Bundelcund have as yet turned against our government. The Jaloun Chief has raised a body of about 12,000 men, but I do not think he would fight against us.

JULPIGOREE.—The Hawkers has the following letter from this station, dated 4th August:—

"We are still all quiet here, and the 73rd N.I. are certainly behaving right well. They have lately been put to a very severe trial, by seeing a dozen of their companions, who were lately convicted of mutiny, sent off in irons before their faces, and yet not a murmur was heard, nor the slightest attempt made to rescue them.

"They had made a plan to murder all the European officers as they sat at mess, in imitation of their Allahabad brethren of the 6th, and had it then arranged to get into a boat and be off into Bhootan, where they said a chief lived who would assist them with 500 men. This information was given by some of the men themselves, whom the wretches had tried to seduce; but who, by pretending to consent, had thus baffled all their plans."

JULLUNDHUR.—The auxiliary force (consisting of about 3,000 men of all arms, with a battery of six guns) furnished by his Highness the Maharajah Rhamber Singh, of Jummoo and Cashmere, was reviewed by the Chief Commissioner at Jullandhur, on the 24th August. They were in good heart, and are a fine body of men. They were to resume their march towards Delhi last night.

LUCKNOW.—The enemy, in their overweening confidence, having approached too near, were undermined, and a hundred of them, it is said, blown into the air. Profiting by the confusion that ensued, the little garrison made a sortie, and carried into the fort a large quantity of provisions. According to accounts which reached Calcutta on the 5th Sept., it contained 510 men of her Majesty's 32nd Regiment, and although 160 of these were in hospital, it may be supposed that the remaining 350 would give a good account of their enemies before finally submitting. The number of women and children was 350, of whom 240 were for the most part girls belonging to the Martiniere.

On the 6th Sept., General Neill sent the following report to Government:—"News from Lucknow of the 2nd September. Residency Guard all right. Enemy's two heavy guns disabled, and they can neither fire nor move them."

MADRAS.—The following is the Government version of the affair of the 8th light cavalry:—

"The real facts are, that as a portion of the regiment showed a disinclination to go to Bengal, unless the old rates of pay and pension were restored, the regiment was informed that after the meeting of such a point it would not be allowed to proceed there, its services having only been accepted on the understanding that they had been offered freely and unconditionally.

"The regiment was therefore halted at Poonamallee, and its horses, with their saddles and accoutrements, were taken away, for the purpose of being sent to Bengal. The regiment itself has been ordered to Arcot, to do garrison duty there."

MEERUT.—Mr. Williams, the Commissioner of Meerut, has reported that the Hindoos of Bijour had attacked and beaten the Naumb of Nujecabad, and had petitioned for the return of the Civil Officers to their posts, adding that they were holding and would hold their country for the Sikar against all comers.

NAGPORE.—We have received intelligence about the 50th M.N.I. at Nagpore having mutinied, and resolved to massacre their officers. The adjutant happened fortunately to find out the plot, which was to murder all whilst at mess. The light company began the row, but a good many men remained staunch, and attacked the others. We have received no further particulars.

NEEMUCH.—On the night of the 12th August, there was a partial mutiny of Captain Bannister's squadron of the 2nd Bombay Light Cavalry at Neemuch. Five of the mutineers made their escape, and three were taken with arms in their hands. One man of H. M.'s 83rd Regiment was killed in the affray, and two were wounded. An extensive plot to murder every officer at Neemuch, had been organized, but was fortunately discovered before it took effect.

NYNEE TAL.—We (Allen's Indian Mail) have been favoured with a letter from an officer who accompanied Colonel McCausland's little force from Almora, to oppose a threatened attack of some 3,000 Pathans under a scoundrel named Kalee Khan. The insurgents, however, consulted the discretion rather than their valour, and beat a hasty retreat when they heard of the preparations made to receive them. The Hindoos in Rohilcand have expressed their determination to put every Mussulman to death as soon as the British column descends from the hills.

RAJPOOTANA.—The authorities at Rajpootana, we understand, have been directed by the Governor-General to offer his thanks to the Rajah of Kerowlie for his issuing a proclamation in his territory on behalf of the British Government in India, and addressing his men in the proclamation, to fight under British officers whenever they are called upon to do so.

RANGOON.—The editor of the Rangoon Chronicle has been favoured with the following communication from the local authority:—

No. 156.

To the Proprietor of the Rangoon Chronicle and Pegu Gazette Press.

Rangoon.

SIR,—I am permitted by the Commissioner of Pegu and Governor-General's Agent to inform you that in the event of your wishing to publish any articles concerning the affairs connected with the rebellion in Bengal in your journal, you are, before doing so, to submit them to me for approval. Without such previous submission, you are not to publish such accounts or articles, whether original or extracted. This will be an especial condition of the ad interim protection being continued to you.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your most obedient servant,

GEO. DANERFIELD,

Offic. Mag. of Rangoon.

Rangoon Magistrate's Office, Aug. 5, 1857.

The proprietor appealed to the commissioner, and received the following reply:—

To R. Godfree, Esquire,

Proprietor of the Rangoon Chronicle Press.

Rangoon.

SIR,—I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your letter to the address of the Commissioner and Governor-General's agent for Pegu, forwarding a letter from the magistrate of Rangoon, herewith returned.

In granting an ad interim order for protection in publishing the Rangoon Chronicle, pending the receipt of orders from the Supreme Government or your application for a licence, the Commissioner and Governor-General's agent has assumed a power not strictly vested in him by the law, and has in a measure, and for a time, made himself responsible for what is published in that paper; but he refuses to accept the responsibility unless upon such conditions as will, he trusts, justify him in having assumed it with the Government he has the honour to serve.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your most obedient servant,

HORACE A. BROWN,

Extra Asst. to the Commr. of Pegu.

Rangoon, Comm.'s Office, 7th August, 1857.

By the latest intelligence from Rangoon, we learn that sixty of the mutineers from Bengal have arrived here. The commissioner of Bassein would not keep the fellows in his district, which place is now ripe for rebellion, and has always been noted as the most turbulent district in British Burma. Three men have been caught in the Tharawaddy district in attempting to instigate the Burmans to rebel. Fortunately for us they have been apprehended, and are now safely lodged in guard, or a may say in a very nice and substantial building at Henzadah, the principal town of the above-named district. There is no need of saying that these men were from Hindostan in the disguise of shopmen. The Burmans, even at Rangoon, are showing their sense in a dateable extent. All the Rangoon troops are being removed from Burma.

SANTHAL PERGUNNAHS.—A private letter from Santhal Pergunnahs says that the Santahls are now very quiet. Since the execution of the murderers of Sir N. Leslie a terror has spread over the minds of these savage people, but rumours are sometimes current here that the Santahls are collecting arms, but no credit is attached to these rumours. The Santahls are now busily engaged in cultivating their lands.

SASSERAM.—The Hurkaru publishes the following letter, dated July 29.

Camp of the Azimgurh Levy in the Tomb of Shah Shere.

I reached this place on the evening of the 24th, and met with the first traces of the retreat of Coor Sing and the Dinapore mutineers, in the blackened ruins of the various bungalows, and offices of this station. The magistrate, Mr. Crossley, with Captain Catania, and 300 of the Azimgurh levy, had arrived the day before, accompanied by Mr. Bingham, the indigo planter of Nowgura, and from them I learnt that marching from Benares, they had quieted the Grand Trunk road in this district, and by the way, severely punished several villages, the population of which had evinced a rebellious spirit during the temporary domination of the rebels, and had attacked Mr. Small, the indigo planter, during his flight to Benares.

After the defeat of Coor Sing at Jugdispore, the remnant of his force fled southward, and struck the Grand Trunk Road at this place, expecting that the Shah Kuteeroodeen would join him. But in this he was mistaken, for the Shah not only refused to do so, but demanded also payment for any supplies Koor Sing might obtain in the place; and "to give the devil his due," it must be said that he did pay for all he obtained. After his departure an attempt was made by a part of his force to loot the place; but the people, exasperated, turned out, and several (some twelve or fourteen) of the brigands were slain. Seeing that the Shah is a Mussulman, and a faquer also, every honour is due to him for the attachment he has shown to the British Government.

Next day, with the Shah's permission we threw provisions into the tomb of Shere Shah, and from one of the corner turrets of that building I indite this. It is an immense mosque-like building, surrounded by a broad platform and machicolated parapets; standing in the middle of a deep and extensive tank, with no approach to it except by a boat. If our men stick to us, the place is almost impregnable, and their staunchness will soon be tested, for we daily expect to be attacked. However, this sepulchral fort of ours, forms a capital base of operations, and the moment the weather clears we shall sailly out, still further assure the safety of the road, and punish the rebellious scoundrels round us. We have already caught one spy and awarded the fitting punishment.

SHERGHOTTY.—The Hurkaru's Sherghotty correspondent thus writes, August 12th:—

"I have again arrived here safely, and am glad to state that the place is perfectly quiet; but cannot say if it is perfectly safe. Lieut. Stanton, executive engineer Public Works Department here, has been appointed, under Act 14 of 1857, a commissioner in the district of Behar, with the power of summarily punishing rebel and other offenders, &c. &c. The electric telegraph signalers, with the deputy superintendent, who arrived here safely last evening, will soon, I hear, under an escort of Seikhs, proceed to restore the telegraphic communications at Sarsaram, where the rebels, it is said, are in great force. Not a European there—all have fled, and the place burnt. The dawk chowkies also burnt, and the horses taken away."

SIMLAH.—The following jeu d'esprit has appeared in the Simlah Advertiser:—

"NOTICE.
